"Summer's End" fest Thursday: barbecue, beer, and boogie

In an effort to promote community spirit, and to welcome incoming and returning students to campus, UMass student government groups are jointly sponsoring a day long 'Summer's End' festival and concert, September 5, in the athletic fields west of Alumni Stadium.

Featuring music from noon to midnight, and a full-meal barbeque prepared by University Food Services in conjunction with Campus Center Food Services, 'Summer's End' will "bring people together and let them see that evan a campus of 30,000 can have a strong community spirit," according to Rick Savini, SGA President. Information and recruitment booths will be set up by various Recognized Student Organizations, academic departments, service organizations, administrative offices, and other community groups.

A joint committee, with members from the Student Senate, Graduate Student Senate, Commuter Assembly and Board of Governors' Program Council, has been meeting since July to iron out plans and details for the back-to-school celebration.

Although the festival was initiated and implemented by students, "we have been very pleased with the enthusiasm and cooperation certain segments of the administration gave us," said Dave Winchester, chairman of the joint committee.

Contributors are: Student Senate, $5,000; Graduate Student Senate, $1,500; Commuter Assembly, $1,000; Board of Governors' Program Council, $4,000.

Those with dining commons meal tickets will be served a free barbeque meal; those without meal tickets can pay $2.00. Admission to the festival itself is, of course, free.

Deadly Nightshade will perform from noon to 2 p.m., followed by Martha Velez from 2:30 to 4:30 p.m.

From 6 p.m. to 7:15 p.m., James Cotton Blues Band will take center stage, followed by Liverpool (a Beatles imitation), from 7:45 to 8:15 and 8:30 to 9:15, with a fifteen minute costume change betweentheir acts. Climaxing the festival will be Richie Havens, starting at 9:45 p.m.

Until several weeks before the concert, Crosby, Stills, Nash and Young had reportedly agreed to appear free of charge here because, according to an informed source, they had not scheduled any benefit performances on their current tour, as was their custom. However, explained the source, an engagement in Atlanta, Georgia on September 5 prevented their appearance here.

Also considered for 'big name' entertainment were Chicago ($25,000), and The Band ($50,000), but necessary funds wre unavailable. Richie Havens was obtained for $4,500.

Refreshments will be sold throughout the day. Rest rooms and first aid stations will be available, and bus service to the stadium will be increased.

23,000 start semester; new programs established

Over 23,000 students will arrive at the UMass-Amherst campus this week to begin the 1974-75 academic year. Registration is September 3 and 5 and classes begin September 6.

Of the total, some 5,200 will be graduate students. 18,070 will be undergraduates and 650 will enroll in the two-year Stockbridge School. In the undergraduate total will be a class of 3,600 freshman and some 2,000 transfers from other institutions.

In the rapidly-growing UMass Division of Continuing Education, over 100 evening courses will be offered this fall, graduate, undergraduate and non-credit. Continuing Ed expects its total enrollment to top 2000 and, for the first time is launching a financial aid program. It will also begin its first extension program in Worcester and will introduce a new series of non-credit craft courses.

NEW PROGRAMS

The year begins with a sprinkling of new programs and some changes in academic departments. Among them:

--establishment of a Western European Studies Program leading to a certificate in Western Studies;

--establishment of a two-year pilot program in Women's Studies;

--establishment of a Five-College Black Studies major at UMass, implementation to depend on approval by the presidents of the other four institutions;

--granting of department status to the computer and information science program and the polymer science and engineering program;

--establishment of an evening graduate program for working engineers by the Department of Mechanical and Aerospace Engineering.

NEW APPOINTMENTS

Among new appointments: John D. Palmer as head of the Zoology Department; S.W. Fletcher as head of the Department of Food and Nutrition; John H. Bracey as chairman of the W.E.B. DuBois Department of Afro-American Studies; Ira Trail, director of the nursing program in the School of Health Sciences; and Ching Mao Cheng, director of the Asian Studies Program.

Other new appointments include Frederick Steinway as director of the Fine Arts Center, Byron Green as master of the Southwest Residential College, and Gerald Grady as director of Community Affairs.

Welcome, students!

As we come together as a University community to begin a new academic year, I welcome all of you to Amherst with the hope that you share my anticipation of the exacting and exciting year before us. A special welcome is extended to those joining us for the first time--freshmen, transfer and graduate students. Your varied backgrounds and experiences, if shared with us, can help in shaping meaningful policies and directions for the University in the months and years ahead. I hope that you will take enthusiastic advantage of the many opportunities for personal and intellectual growth that await you.

Major national events and crises always have an effect on the University. We have just undergone a most unsettling time in our nation's history. Fortunately, we have witnessed the strength and viability of our constitutional form of government, and are beginning to feel a renewed sense of opportunity. But this is not enough.

For too long now, this nation's institutions, governmental, educational, industrial and social have gone through difficult times which have resulted in a growing general sense of insecurity and an erosion of confidence in leadership at all levels.

As we begin to prepare for our nation's Bicentennial, it is time to realize that we have many things to be proud of, that there remain many positive changes that need our maximum effort. We must rededicate ourselves to those moral values that must be an integral part of the development of our public policy.

This is not a time for cynicism, self-pity or apathy. We must begin once again to work together to improve ourselves and our nation. A good starting place for the renaissance of new and informed leadership is within our academic institutions, and it is my hope that the University of Massachusetts will continue in that direction this coming year. This fall I will be in concert with the University community attempting to define clearly the mission and goals of this University. As we set these goals, it is my hope that we will at the same time respond to those who have questioned the need for higher education in this nation and reestablish the relevance of intellectual pursuits.

I look forward to working together with you in the months ahead on developing this positive plan for the University of Massachusetts at Amherst. An enthusiastic commitment from all segments of the University community will be required.

Back to the sticks

BY KAREN LYNCH

Some folks think the country is an exciting as unflavored yogurt. But what do they know?

Actually, "getting back to the land" is considered chic nowadays. For example, for $100,000 or so you can buy one of those drafty, dilapidated old farmhouses that are in such hot demand. (The rusty milk can is extra).

If that doesn't fit into your budget, Puffton Village will do. It's drafty and dilapidated enough.

Then what, you say? Why then you start a little garden and grow such things as avocados, armadillos, beets, carrots, granola, kumquats, marigolds, marijuana, oranges, pears, pickles, pointsettias, spinach, turnips, tzimmes and zucchini. Or you can watch the chickens mate.

If none of this appeals, I suggest you buy a one way ticket to that little University out on Columbia Point.

Seriously though (and remember this is an institution of higher learning) Western Massachusetts has a lot to recommend it. The pace is considerably slower out here. That doesn't apply to UMasszzzzzzzz so much, but on those days when you cannot take PEOPLE anymore, stick out your thumb and head West. If you don't make it all the way to the Berkshires, that's okay. Still, there's nothing quite like the Berkshires in the Fall.

The area is saturated with history. Right down 116 is Historic Old Deerfield (I think that's the name of the town, Historic Old Deerfield), which has to be one of the most romantic towns around.

And it was right here that Lord Jeffrey Amherst secured his first victory over the Indians by presenting them with smallpox infested blankets. Nice guy.

These are a few other little tidbits I'll pass on to you so that you can throw them out at your next black-tie affair and impress everybody.

Amherst College was founded by Noah Webster in 1821 while he was here working on his dictionary. Almost sounds like an afterthough doesn't it?

In 1850, Mount Holyoke was known as Mount Holyoke Female Seminary. No snide remarks, please.

Also, tuition, room and board at said Seminary was $1.50 a week, and you had to wash your own dishes.

The General Court in 1647 prohibited the use of tobacco to anyone under 21 unless he had a doctor's prescription. Put that in your pipe and smoke it, kid.

And while you're doing that, I'm going to sit here in this quaint rocker, can peaches with my left hand, embroider a sampler with my right, and watch the chickens mate.

So to those of you who've been here before, welcome back. To those of you who are newcomers, welcome to the sticks. Ay-huh.

SUMMER 1974 NEWS ROUNDUP

by Mike Kneeland

"A synopsis of campus and area events which took place while you were away . . ."

Guru speaks

It was the highlight of the summer ... a spectacle this University has never seen and will probably not see again.

Some 12,000 devotees of Guru Maharaj Ji, the 16-year old perfect master, invaded the campus from lands all over this hemisphere to celebrate Guru Puja '74.

It took place over the July 4th weekend and many UMies had left for the long weekend. In retrospect, many students and officials said that was a good thing, for the Guru's people literally took over the campus.

Guru Maharaj Ji delivered satsang here, which is not to say that he sat and sang, but he certainly whistled his way to the bank after sitting and talking about zero.

At the Southwest athletic field an impressive 35-ft. high dome was built from which the Guru gave his satsang, or sermon, to the crowd.

By the campus pond a mini dome was built where some of the Guru's Mahatmas, or disciples, gave their satsang. In the Campus Center, rooms became workshops for the devotees. In front of Metawampe's eyes, hundreds of tables were constructed selling everything from "holy bread" to Guru books and Guru music.

Dormitories in Southwest, Northeast, and Central housed the devotees while cars and trucks bearing license plates from every state in the union ignored parking regulations, parking pretty much where they pleased.

And then there was the Guru himself.

He was supposed to give his opening satsang Friday night but he cancelled saying he was too tired from his recent trip to Denmark. His devotees, however, assumed the cancellation was due to the day's unrelenting rains which, in Biblical fashion, turned much of the campus into a big mud puddle.

By Saturday night anticipation was high, all awaiting the first appearance of Guru Maharaj Ji who was staying in a $74-a-day executive suite in the Northampton Hilton.

The Apostles, a Guru rock group from Georgia, psyched the crowd with lyrics noticeably altered to fit the occasion: "Six days on the road and I've got to see Maharaj Ji again."

Finally, some 90-minutes late, Guru Maharaj Ji walked up the back ramp into the dome and sat down in the majestic chair which was lined with flowers.

His 24-year old wife Marilyn was by his side and began the satsang, amidst loud applause, comparing The Guru to a perfect flute using the four tools of light, music, nectar, and the word to distinguish itself from flutes "clogged with dirt."

Before kneeling to kiss her husband's feet, she told the crowd, "We are all his premies; we are all his lovers."

In a 30-minute speech that relied heavily on American slang, Guru told the crowd this event was "undescribable."

Speculating his declared mission to bring peace to the world was just "three steps away," he noted, "I never used to know there were automatic windows and automatic doors, and here I am in America."

He later gave a lecture on the importance of zeroes. He said people are sometimes more concerned with the numbers one and two, but he told the crowd that "the number one starts with one and ends with one ... and the number two starts with two and ends with two."

Unlike those numbers, he said, there is someting special about a zero. "You can take a one, put two zeroes behind it and you've got 100. You can take a two and put two zeroes behind it and you've got 200."

The crowd laughed with the Guru when he quipped, "I say give me zero money and you say O.K., it's already given."

He went on to discuss peace and love in the world. "This is why we all have come here, to try to experience that love ... This is why the perfect master has come into this world, to put us back in a place where we belong."

He closed his satsang by returning the festivities to the Apostles receiving loud cheers and chants from the audience.

He also spoke Sunday night on the same themes. Devotees said he always says the same thing which, unless you have his knowledge (thus being a premie), the non-devotee may fail to realize.

At an ungodly Sunday morning hour, devotees lined up at the mini-dome by the pond to kiss the Guru's feet.

In the end, students were arrested by the UMass police for shouting obscenities at the Guru and disturbing the peace. Some UMies gathered near the back of the crowd Saturday night, mocking the Guru while he spoke but there were no other disturbances.

Guru Puja '74 left as quickly as it came. By Monday morning there were few signs that the campus had been such a busy place for so many people.

And Southwest began preparing for the arrival of the New England Patriots, only five days later.

Making dorms more liveable

In a move to make dormitory life more attractive to students, the administration this summer established a Director of Residence Life position and appointed their very own Henry Kissinger to fill the spot.

Kenneth Dean, a highly respected administrator and presently the acting director of food services, will fill the slot on a temporary basis for one year.

He says he wants to make dormitory life desirable so that students, if given a choice, would prefer to live on campus rather than off campus. This is good, he said, because "the real reason for living in dormitories is the educational experience one gets out of it."

Dean, who lived one night in Southwest last Spring, says two immediate areas of concern to students he intends to investigate are increased dormitory security and cleanliness.

The dormitory system was formerly divided into two distinct areas, business operations and residential programming. Former Vice Chancellor Thomas Campion overlooked the business aspects while vice Chancellor Robert Gage was responsible for residential programming.

"This made communication a little difficult," Dean said from his second floor office in Hills North. Under the new system, Dean will report only to Vice Chancellor Gage.

Dean said this will help students since they will have a more effective channel to direct their input to Vice Chancellor Gage.

Dean will still be responsible for the dining commons as well as the dormitory system. He says it's good they're now under one organization since the two are closely related.

The Director said there are two points students and administrators should consider when evaluating him one year from now: the degree of satisfied students, and the financial status of the organization.

He noted there will be no net increase in dormitory living costs this year and that apartment complexes have already begun raising their rents.

Dean will be assisted by Roger Cruff, Margie Lenn, and Robert Cambell.

They agree each person will have some special expertise to offer. All say they are highly motivated to better the dormitory system. Other universities, including Conn. and N.H., have adopted the Residence Life Director position. Dean said the system has been working well at both schools.

In a recent staff memo, Vice Chancellor Gage said he was "persuaded personally that this can be the beginning of a process in which problems of the past will be used only to outline opportunities for the future."

More jobs available

There was some good news from Whitmore this summer to refresh some students. Administration officials said they expect more work-study jobs to be available to students this semester.

Gerry Scanlon, head of the newly established Student Employment Task Team (SETT), also announced there should be a decrease in "red-tape" encountered by both students seeking jobs and employers seeking students.

Students who have previously participated in work-study will be pre-placed in jobs, Scanlon said. After returning to school they need only consult the bulletin board in the Financial Aid Office to get their job assignment.

The student workers will then report directly to their job supervisor. "This should save a lot of time," Scanlon speculated.

He noted, however, that students not satisfied with their job assignment may make an appointment with one of the placement counselors to discuss the situation.

Those who have never participated in the work-study will still be required to fill out the necessary forms in the Financial Aid Office and to be interviewed by one of the administrators.

Scanlon said his office will try, as it has before, to match student interests and experiences with the jobs available.

The SETT will not only handle work-study jobs, which is a form of financial aid and is thus based on need, but also jobs available through research grants and off campus employers.

If a professor, for example, is granted a sum of money and decides he wants a paid assistant, then that professor will call SETT which will then select a few persons for the job. In the end, Scanlon said, the professor still hires the applicant of his own choice.

The SETT director emphasized that "grant money" is not based on need as is work-study money.

"In that respect," Scanlon noted, "we're like any other employment agency ... not actually selecting a student."

Under the work-study program, the department or firm hiring the student only pays 20 per cent of the salary while 80 per cent of the wage is paid by the Financial Aid Office with Federally allocated money.

That, Scanlon said Tuesday, is one reason why there should be more jobs available through work-study.

Scanlon is also working out a method to standardize student wages. In the past, he noted, two students doing the same job might have been earning different wages because the money was coming from separate funds, or accounts.

Now, such students will be receiving the same salary no matter what account their wages are being drawn from.

During the semester, job openings available through SETT will be printed in the Daily Collegian.

Scanlon warned students not to decide for themselves if they are entitled to on-campus work.

"The best way for students to get employment on campus," he said, "is not to pre-judge their own cases ... Come over to the Financial Aid Office and make out the applications and let us process them."

Toma speaks

Those who were expecting a rather simple looking cop were surprised. Dave Toma, the Newark policeman with 9,000 arrests and a 98 per cent conviction record, was not that.

He looked Hollywood and sounded like the sincere cop the television series (based on his experiences) leads the viewer to believe.

At an informal Bluewall gathering before his speech, Toma held most listeners under his story-telling control. His experiences with the mob, drug dealers, prostitutes, and gamblers, sounded like a fairy tale good-guy-godfather ... but it was all true.

Toma was one stabbed by an assaulter who said, as Dave lay in his blood, "I'm going to kill you!" He thrust forward with his knife and still, Toma could not bring himself to fire the gun.

"I felt the damage was already done," he said. Thinking he was dead for sure (which he almost was), Toma recalls, "What good would it have done if I blew his head off?"

The Newark detective is best known for the disguises he uses to infiltrate gangs. "If you don't look directly at people," he said, "you can fool almost anyone." Toma has become so proficient at this trade, he has even fooled his best friends.

In the trunk of his car he carries a suitcase of disguises. He is thus able to change into whatever disguise fits the occasion. "When I'm in a Catholic area I'm not going to dress up as a priest. I'd be too obvious."

Instead, Toma likes to play the role of drunks, addicts and pimps. A highly sensitive, compassionate person, he notes, "It's a great feeling sitting in the gutter with kids ... not trying to find out where they got the drugs. I've reversed the role ... I've looked from the gutter up at policeman."

Toma jokingly relates how many people stop and say, "Hey, you can't fool me, I saw you dressed up as a lady selling pretzels the other day." Toma usually says yes, but to keep the information quiet. In fact, Toma disguised himself as no such person.

Threats are commonplace to Toma. His car has been blown up upon ignition, and some of his detective friends wait a safe distance until Toma starts up his car.

Another person telephoned many threats to Toma before one of his frequent public appearances. So he turned the tables around. "I know who you are," he said. "I had your mother last night and you're afraid I'm going to be related to you."

For all the fanfare and publicity, Toma remains a humble person who can see through the "bullshit." Citing problems he has had with publishers and network executives over what he writes and how he is portrayed, he says, "I could be a millionaire today, but I'm not going to do what they want me to do."

Toma is against marijuana but does not believe stiff sentences are the answer. He says he has seen many people "freak out" on marijuana because its potency may vary or be treated with another drug.

Biggest event of the summer:

Nixon Resigns

(Editorials, pages 6 & 23)

Dave Toma is not the honest cop — that's Serpico — but, in all honesty, Toma is a cop and is noted for, among other things, his 98 per cent conviction record.

Patriots picket

To many area fans hoping to watch their favorite Patriots player drill during summer camp here, it was disappointing.

The reason, of course, was the players' strike which only saw two stars, lineman John Hannah and defensive end Ray Hamilton, report to Amherst.

Sportswriters, instead of flocking here to write their feature stories on the likes of Jim Plunkett or Mack Herron, found themselves writing mechanical fill-ins on what rooky looked good in practice or who was not getting cut that would be getting cut if it weren't for the strike.

The one bright note was the play of wide receiver Steve Schubert, the 5'10" former UMass star. As summer camp broke, he was still with the team and head coach and general manager Chuck Fairbanks had high praises for the pigskin-plucker.

While at UMass, Schubert caught 51 passes for 989 yards and 11 touchdowns. Playing for the championship New England Colonials last season, he earned all-star honors.

The only questions did not relate to his sticky hands and good speed: is he big enough and can he avoid injuries?

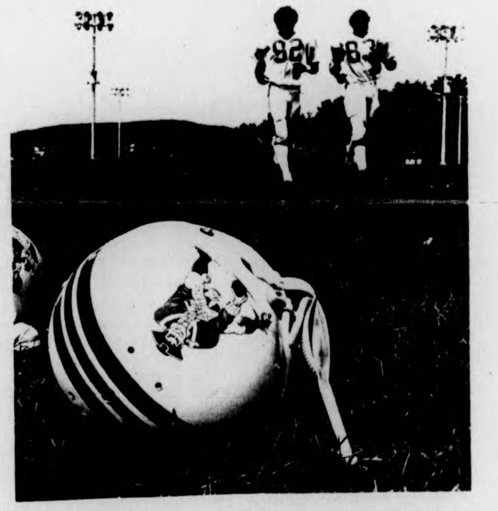
With a team rostering Randy Vataha and Mack Herron, only the latter remained an issue.

At first many fans anxiously watched the rookies; but the interest faded. One area sportswriter even noted that the Patriots were having a tough time with the women at such hot-spots as the Steak Out and Checkers.

The few established players here were not cracking helmets on the practice field but were, for a few early days, carrying signs by the locker room. Those players included Randy Vataha, Rick Cash and Jon Morris.

The University had told them they could not picket on campus ... but they did anyway. Negotiations between police and protesting players took place in quiet you're-my-idol-but-I'm-also-a-cop fashion and a settlement was reached. That didn't really matter because Jon Morris said he had already made his point.

Those players returned to "training camp east" while Chuck Fairbanks, facing the roughest NFL schedule and an opening game against Miami, remained optimistic at "training camp west."



The Patriots

Tobacco workers happy?

At first glance it looked like a typical union vs. management dispute — but when students learned that young teenagers were the heart of the issue, they became concerned.

Those youngsters were migrant workers picking tobacco at $1.65 an hour for Consolidated Cigar Corp. About 300 of them were living in various fraternity houses.

Members of the Association de Trabajadores Agricoles (ATA) union wanted to talk to the youngsters but Donald Prill, a director of 79 Florida youths living in Sigma Phi Epsilon, said no dice.

"The kids here," he said, "are perfectly happy and don't need anybody coming here to make trouble."

When the Mass. Department of Public Health (DPH) got wind of the situation, they voiced strong complaints to Consolidated Cigar. Willard R. Pope, a DPH lawyer, said the cigar corp. must let the children have visitors and if they didn't, the state would go to superior court to correct the violation of law.

When it was reported that uniformed guards were on duty outside the fraternities, preventing workers from leaving or visitors from entering, Student Government Association president Richard Savini decided it was time to act.

He got in touch with Amherst town officials and asked them to check onto the situation.

Meanwhile, Whitmore officials were saying they could do nothing because the fraternity houses were not UMass property.

Savini thought that attitude was hogwash, and he said it.

"I don't like that stand," the 25-year old student leader said. "It shouldn't matter whether you're an administrator or student. It's a disgrace to have that going on."

The press was eventually allowed to enter the fraternities and talk to the young workers. They seemed happy — there was no apparent mistreatment.

With the students assured the teenagers were o.k., the issue once again returned to a union vs. management dispute.

UMass grad will oppose Conte

Politics struck a little closer early July when a 1969 UMass graduate, presently a library assistant here, announced his candidacy for the First Congressional District.

Kenneth R. Mosakowski, 27-years old, will face Thomas Manning, an assistant district attorney for Berkshire County, in the Sept. Democratic primaries for the seat presently held by Republican Silvio Conte.

Mosakowski says Conte can be beaten, especially this year when public sentiment seems to be riding against many Washington incumbents. He also believes an increase in the number of young voters in the district will work in his favor.

"Conte hasn't been opposed since 1962. Since them UMass has doubled in size; there are more younger people than before."

The candidate says these young people "cant't relate to Conte very well" because "he's of the old school."

Mosakowski's main complaint with Conte's Washington performance is that "he plays both ends of the issues against the middle."

He says Conte has supported Nixon 43 per cent of the time and has opposed him 49 per cent of the time on various issues. "That's pretty strong support for a Mass. person, even though he's Republican," said Mosakowski.

If elected, Mosakowski said he would like to serve on the Appropriation's Committee. "That's where the power is," he said. He says he'd have a "good chance" of getting on that committee because "I'm a Democrat."

The Congressional hopeful says the allocation of money is the basic problem hurting the country. He says he'd like to re-allocate the money for something useful to the country on a long-term basis.

"I'd cut some of the wastefulness out of the military budget," he said. He says, however, that it would be absurd to abolish the military.

Mosakowski says he is qualified to fill the Congressional position because he "understands government." He has been a consistent, unpaid Washington lobbier against the Vietnam War and the draft.

The UMass graduate said he would like to close many tax loopholes. "They favor people with a lot of capital ... There's at least 200 millionaires who pay no taxes (legally) at all."

Mosakowski is also concerned with Vietnam veterans. He claims the Nixon administration abandoned the vets in many areas.

"Yet the Nixon administration," he said, "continues to throw away a billion tax dollars to support Thieu's fascist dictatorship in Saigon, instead of using the money for veterans' job training at home."

Mosakowski was an early supporter of George McGovern's bid for the presidency. He was elected as one of six first congressional district delegates to the 1972 Democratic National Convention.

Students set to unionize

Perhaps the most active group in the Student Government Association (SGA) this summer was the Student Organizing Project.

Operating with their SGA-approved budget of $44,000, the project hired a prestigious New York City law firm at $6,000 to do legal research on student rights.

The purpose of the project, in act, is to make students a more powerful campus voice.

Thomas Spriggs, a project chairperson, said the project is essential.

"The top student government leaders are concerned with keeping the system functioning and they have no time for long range plans," he said.

Sprigg's said the project's purpose is to reorganize the government structure and to get a more substantial feed-back from students; and in so doing, to obtain maximum student power.

That student power, he said, does not necessarily mean the students will for a union, "like the AFL-CIO." He sees, however, students getting more power to govern their academic structure and UMass as a whole.

The 13-membered committee will be trying to get much feed-back from students this semester, and to proceed with their plans.

Spriggs said he sees no major problems and does not believe the students will have to go to court to define their rights.

He said he does not want to see the SATF fee abolished.

A reporter's view:

The breaking of the President

by Mark Vogler

It came to many Americans as a great shock last month when Richard Milhouse Nixon — one who never quits — resigned from office as President.

But was it really a surprise? Should the news have stunned the masses as it did?

The American electorate is either grossly misinformed or short on memory. And President Nixon, the fox of chief executives, knew this.

While most of us thought it would never come to pass, President Nixon's resignation was really a logical course in a series of not-so-logical political events.

Resignation was the only fitting way to end it. The stage was set last summer during the Senate Watergate hearings after the astounding disclosure that the President kept tape recordings of presidential conversations in his office. All the evidence was there to bring him down. It was just a matter of time.

While he waged a stubborn battle to retain possession of the controversial and self-incriminating tapes, the cancer that John Dean talked of spread through his administration.

Then a persistent special prosecutor from Harvard University Archibald Cox, applied for the first blow — he would not give up the fight for those tapes.

In a now apparent illogical move by Nixon in what we refer to as the Saturday evening massacre, the President fired Cox — triggering the resignation of Atty Gen. Eliot Richardson and a storm of outrage on Capitol Hill and across the country.

The Monday following the ill-fated decision, a host of impeachment resolutions were introduced in Congress. Nixon's demise was on the way as thousands of telegrams flooded the offices of congressmen for the removal of the President.

He eventually released some of the tapes — one with the infamous 18-minute gap which further raised some questions as to his credibility. Operation Candor switched back to Operation Coverup.

Nixon unwisely withdrew himself from public view and the inquiries of the press. Periodically ending his hold-out, he decided to fight the never-ending battle. Yes, the press had Richard Nixon to kick around again. And every time he threw punches, they kicked harder.

All the while the President's ability to govern seriously eroded. All the while, the American Congress stood by stagnantly — nevertheless observing.

The rains cam eharder when Congress and the special Watergate prosecutor requested more tapes. The President flatly refused, asserting "executive priviledge" (cover-up).

Nixon rehearsed his resignation speech by repeating his vow to "continue the job that I was elected to do without walking away." Reporters are allowed one assumption. Let's assume that Mr.

A Traveller's Tale

by E. Patrick McQuaid

"The chronicle of a weary wayfarer's wanderings into the empire of Trickius Dickus, circa 974 B.C."

The unusual events related in this chronicle occurred over the space of two years between 973 and 974 BC; an era before the emergence of Rome as a thriving empire, dominating Europe.

It came to pass that all of the Union Empire was divided into three parts. This being the dictates of the emperor, Trickius Dickus, in 974. The first of these entities being the capitol, Districtus Colombius; the second being the Union of City-States; and the third being the ill-fated wastelands of Massachusetts, where castaways and political prisoners resided.

The noteworthy events leading to this decree occured one year prior to the severence of the Union Empire. All of this confusion were the results of the notorious Aquaduct Affair; a scandal that brought shame to the emperor's head.

During the aforementioned fateful summer, a traveling journalist did make his way to the regions of Massachusetts from the far North. He was stopped by centurions dressed in white with Persian hats at the border.

"I'm sorry, sir, but Massachusetts is closed today," stated the guard.

"Closed?" retorted the weary wayfarer.

"Yes, sir. This order comes direct from the Office of Higher Ideals."

"By whose authority?"

"Per order of the beloved emperor, Trickius Dickus. The notice just came in today, August 8, 974 BC." He glanced at his Spiro watch for surety.

Now this traveling journalist was a true zealot at heart, like most of his colleagues, and was determined not to return to the North. He produced his press pass in anticipation of quick results. He was, without any hesitation, arrested.

He was thrown into a cell with several other journalists, poets, priests, and politicians. One happened to be the emperor's former speech writer who was imprisoned for knowing too much.

"Tell me," began the traveler, "what did the emperor usually ask of you when ordering up a speech?"

"Ha," he began, "the emperor usually required three things in his speeches. If they are honest, sincere, and to the point he wants nothing to do nor will he hear about them."

"So what are the usual standards?"

"Well, the emperor wishes to adhere to the rules of his chief policy makers: his daughter, Rasputin, and George Patton reruns. Under this careful watch his speeches for the next twenty-three years have been drawn up."

"Twenty-three years. You mean to tell me that he has..."

"That's correct. They're already written. I have ten war progress reports, six denials of political corruption or immorality, eight reports of anti-Empire activities, four speeches on the evils of eating meat or using gas, three chats on the evil of tax returns, nine denials of involvement, and..."

"Involvement in what, sir?"

"It doesn't matter. You see, one simply fills in the blanks in these speeches. No matter what happens, he can within minutes appear before the public, fill in the blanks, and with a good prop man get out of anything."

"How do, or did you set up the pattern for them?"

"Well, they all follow the same style and character. First he either appeals to Mom, apple pie, or the flag. Second he swears he was either in his castle to the west or negotiating with the Romans. Third, he like the new emperor, asks you to pray for him."

"Doesn't he pray for himself?"

"Too risky. Bad relations with the gods right now. He must first establish diplomatic friendship with the heavens."

"Will he plan a tour, or send gifts?"

"Yes, yes. This indicated by the emperor's breaking relations with hell."

"Do you think that he would go that far?"

"Well, foreign relations weren't my specialty. But I doubt if that's possible. The other day, before my arrest, I heard him talking with his family. He was crying over some deal that he had made with the devil."

"So, what finally happened?"

"Well, the vice emperor stepped down and a new one was appointed. You know the old expression, son, in this great land of our's, anyone, anyone can become vice emperor. Well, he did. And now he's emperor, by popular demand. Trickius Dickus, I am told has exiled himself to island of Elba. Who knows what he will do next?"

Everything you've always wanted to know about the ~~UMASS LIBRARY~~ TOWER of BABEL

The University Library System consists of the new 28-story Library, several branch libraries and various reading rooms. The main Library houses most of the holdings in the social sciences and humanities. Principal branch libraries are:

Morrill Biological Sciences Library: Located on the 2nd floor of Morrill Science Center; contains biological and geological material.

Physical Sciences Library: On the 2nd floor of the Graduate Research Center; includes materials in engineering, chemistry, mathematics, water resources, computer science, food technology, wood technology and related fields.

Five College Libraries: The 5 Valley schools jointly operate the Hampshire Inter-library Center (HILC), a collection of important, but infrequently used research materials located in the basement of the Physical Sciences Library. HILC materials circulate only to faculty and graduate students, but may be consulted by all members of the University community.

UMass students and faculty have direct borrowing privileges at the main libraries of Amherst, Hampshire, Mt. Holyoke and Smith.

Catalogs

The Library system's main card catalog (main floor) is divided into two sections:

Author and Title Catalog: ... contains cards for names of persons and agencies considered to be authors of publications. Most works also have title cards in this catalog; periodicals are listed here by title and also in the Pioneer Valley Union List of Journal and Serial Holdings.

Subject Catalog: ... contains cards indicating the subject areas of materials. To find the exact subject headings used, consult the Library of Congress List of Subject Headings, located on tables near the card catalog.

Pioneer Valley Union List of Journal and Serial Holdings: Periodicals in the UMass system and in other major collections in the Valley are listed alphabetically here by title, with locations, call numbers and volumes held. The librarians at the Reference Desk will gladly provide assistance in using these catalogs and in locating other items, such as government publications which are not fully listed.

Borrowing

How to Borrow a Book: Identify the publication from the entry in the card catalog. Note the call number from the upper left-hand corner of the card and go directly to the stacks or to the special location indicated. Present the book with your ID card at the Circulation desk on the 1st floor. Books may also be charged out at the 2nd floor Circulation office, where renewals are made and requests for books not on the shelves.

Loan Period: Books circulate for 2-4 weeks. They may be renewed in person or by phone at the University library from which they were borrowed, unless they have been requested by another borrower. Periodicals circulate for a limited period only to faculty members and graduate students.

Recalls: Books are subject to recall after two weeks if requested by another reader, and at any time if needed for Reserve.

Reserve Books: Reserve materials circulate for time periods varying from 2 hours to 3 days. They must be returned to the Reserve Desk on the 2nd floor.

Book Returns: Books may be returned to the library from which they were borrowed or to the main library. There are book deposit boxes near the main extrance and on the west side of the building: do not use these to return reserve books.

Services and Resources

Archives: Located on the 25th floor, contains a collection of material relating to the University of Massachusetts and several groups of personal and historical manuscripts.

Audiovisual Department: Audiovisual materials and services are in Godell Building. The main Library houses an audiovisual reserve room on the 5th floor, for course-related materials, and the necessary viewing and listening equipment.

Government Documents: The Documents collection on the 21st floor houses official publications of the United States, United Nations and Commonwealth of Massachusetts. Most of these materials are not listed in the main card catalog, but are accessible through special indexes.

Interlibrary Loan: For faculty and graduate students engaged in research, the Interlibrary Loan service obtains materials not available in the UMass Library system. Undergraduates may also use it for materials in the Valley area.

Maps: A collection of approximately 80,000 sheet maps, geological and topographic, demographic and historical, is in Room 269 of the Morrill Science Center.

Microforms: Microtext copies of newspapers, government archives, and many other types of research materials ... are in the microforms room on the main floor, along with reading equipment.

Music Library: The Music Library, a non-circulating collection of thematic indexes, scores and recordings, is housed on the 1st floor of the Old Chapel.

What to expect at the Dining Commons this year...

What will you find at the Dining Commons this year?

1. Unlimited portions on all menu items except main courses. Each meal will have a designated "seconds" available main course item.

2. Lunch sandwich bars. Located in different places in different commons...Search them out if you like a soup 'n sandwich lunch.

3. Salad bars every evening...with a variety of salad fixin's for you to choose.

4. Special events like Harvest Festival, Halloween, ice cream sundaes, and steak are just some of the attractions the food service will have. Watch closely for these.

Some of the changes made for this semester include: orange juice served from jet spray dispensers and salad dressings served by pumps. Lots of advantages here...no more french dressing in the catsup, neater service, and the dressings are easier to get.

FOOD ECOLOGY is something we'll be hearing a lot about this year. Basically, it's something that comes down to using our resources wisely...by not wasting food. Plate or tray waste costs can really mount up, with milk at 8 cents a glass, ice cream over 5 cents a slice and margarine at 1.5 cents for every two patties. Salads, vegetables, desserts, fruits all have a cost attached. Food prices are rising so dramatically that we can't afford the luxury of throwing food away. The Commons prepare the food that you take. If you take less, we'll do our part by preparing only what you eat and "investing" the savings in food.

The Dining Commons offers a selective menu at all meals. The menu for the week is posted in each commons. The menu of the day is available by dialing 545-2626, 9:00 a.m. to 2:00 p.m. for lunch and 2:00 p.m. to 7:00 p.m. for dinner.

SERVING TIMES FOR MEALS are:

WORCESTER & HAMPSHIRE
Breakfast 7:00 a.m. to 10:30 a.m.
Lunch 11:00 a.m. to 2:00 p.m.
Dinner 4:00 p.m. to 7:00 p.m.

FRANKLIN & BERKSHIRE
Lunch 10:30 a.m. to 2:00 p.m.
Dinner 4:00 p.m. to 7:00 p.m.

BASIC FOODS, the vegetarian or near vegetarian alternative to the regular menu, is available at Worcester and Hampshire Commons: Lunch - 11:00 to 2:00 p.m. and Dinner - 4:00 p.m. to 6:30 p.m.

IF YOU HAVEN'T GOT A MEAL TICKET, HOW CAN YOU GET TO EAT AT THE COMMONS? Besides buying a ticket, two ways: by paying cash for your meal or by buying strip tickets. Cash prices are: Breakfast - $.15, Lunch - $2.00 and Dinner - $2.60. If you want to save a little money, buy strip tickets. These strips of 5 meals are available at the Meal Ticket Office at Worcester Commons and can be used in any Commons. Pricer are: 5 breakfasts - $4.95, 5 lunches - $7.75 and 5 dinners - $11.25.

Students with meal tickets in the 5 college area, who have academic reasons for being on a campus other than their own during a meal period should check with the secretary at Worcester Commons Office for information on how to get an exchange meal.

COMMUNICATIONS WITH FOOD SERVICES: If you're in a Dining Commons and you see something that's wrong...cold food, lumpy potatoes, no catsup...ask for the Manager or supervisor. These people can usually solve the problem immediately. Your D.C. Manager is also available during the meal to handly any problems, suggestions or comments you may want to discuss.

If you have general comments or suggestions, write a comment card. These cards go to the Director's Office where they are read and acted upon. You will be notified of this action if you write in your phone number.

If you lose your meal ticket, you may get a replacement at the Meal Ticket Office at Worcester Commons, Mon.-Fri. 9:00 a.m. to 4:00 p.m. A replacement fee of $5.00 is charged. Until you replace your book, you must sign for each meal eaten. You will be billed for those meals to which you were not entitled.

In the main office, there are several people who are available to assist you. If you have a problem with your meal ticket, Mr. Flynn is the person to see. If you are on a diet and need some help finding low calorie foods on the menu, Mrs. Crossmon, a Registered Dietitian, can be of service. If you are planning a picnic or dinner, Mr. Ellis, Manager of Catering, will smooth out the details. All of these people are located in Worcester Commons Main Office, tel. 545-2472.

If you have an idea for a policy or program or a suggestion about an existing one, contact the Student Food Services Board. They may be reached through the Student Senate Offices.

WORKING FOR FOOD SERVICES: If you have a meal ticket and are looking for work at the commons, check with the manager of the Commons, Snack Bar or Store you want to work at. This person will let you know what positions are available and what the procedure is to get cleared for work. There are some positions available in catering and in the offices. Come in to the Worcester Main Office for information about these.

SOME D.C. RULES AND REGULATIONS:

1. Only one main course item at a time. Go back for seconds.

2. Bus your own trays. When you don't, you have to pay the cost of having someone do it for you.

3. Use your own meal ticket and don't lend it out to friends. Meal ticket prices are based on the number of meals eaten, not the total number available on the plan. If all meals were eaten, cost of the plans would have to go up.

4. Don't take food or utensils from the commons. Like waste, this increases the cost of the board plan.

5. Ask for what you want...and eat what you take.

FOR NON-COMMONS EATING: Food Services operates snack bars in three locations. Worcester Commons, serving full breakfasts and hot lunches 6 days a week. Hours: 7:00 a.m. to 3:30 p.m., closed Sunday. Whitmore Snack Bar, open 8-5 Monday thru Friday, and Hampden Snack Bar. By popular demand, it's back downstairs. You'll find the atmosphere much improved. The menu is expanded. Now have pizza, freshed baked for you. Full breakfasts and complete sandwich selections are also available. Hours: 8:00 a.m. to 1:00 a.m., 7 days a week.

Munchys stores in three locations are good places to pick up those little items you need. Worcester store, under the stairs of the side entrance to the commons, open 9:00 a.m. to 6:00 p.m. Franklin store, dorm side of the building, open 11:00 a.m. to 7:00 p.m., and Hampden store, in the upstairs lobby, open 8:00 a.m. to 10:00 p.m. All stores are open 7 days a week. For fun, the Southwest Games Area, in Hampden Commons, will be open the same hours as the Snack Bar. Try it for a quick game of whatever.

SGA needs people, ideas

The Student Government Association has been working this summer to identify problem areas and their possible solutions. We decided our first and foremost problem was our relation to our student constituentcy.

It is imperative that our lines of communication are opened. We are hoping to receive more coverage from our campus media groups so that everyone can be more aware of what the Student Government Association is doing and where it is going.

We are also trying to open ourselves up so that we, S.G.A., are more aware of what student's needs are and where they feel we should be directing our resources. In order to accomplish this we need help. We need people. We need ideas. It is imperative that students begin to realize what can be done on this campus and what resources are available to us.

The S.G.A. realizes that it has a reputation to overcome, but the only way we can accomplish this is through more student input, more concern from students about students and a better understanding about what our Student Government has to work with.

For a publicity campaign, to inform students of what S.G.A. does, you will be seeing advertisements under the heading of "Yes We Are Responsible". So far we have two phases. The first is to inform students that we are responsible. The second will point out specific services that the S.G.A. is responsible for funding. These advertisements will be all over the campus, on the buses, in the residence halls and other buildings.

To start off the year, the Senate along with the Area Governments, Graduate Senate, Board of Governors and Summer Programming have come together to sponsor the "Summer's End Concert". It will be held September 5 at the far end of the football field. RSO groups, academic departments and others interested will have displays or information booths. There will be food and drink available. Meal tickets will be honored and for those who don't have them, the food will be at minimum cost. And of course there will be a concert. We hope that all will attend and enjoy.

In the process of redevelopment and restructuring is the Legal Services Office. A Legal Services Governing Board has been established totally made up of students. This Board will oversee the office and establish all policies that will govern the office. It will also act as a grievance committee for any student who is not satisfied with the office.

This Board is a result of a merger between the Undergraduate and Graduate Senates. It will therefore service both the undergraduate and graduate student populations. It has been restructured so that there will now be three lawyers and two paralegals available to give free legal advice. The office is totally funded by both the senates and is located on the nineth floor of the Campus Center. It will be open for full time operation the second week after school opens. The search for lawyers has been going on all summer. The Committee so far has selected a Director, William Dorsch. The other two positions will be finalized by September.

A Residential Life Governing Board has been established. A constitution is being worked out that will in effect by very similar to the Board of Governors constitution. The RLGB will have complete policy authority including veto power over policy set by the Director of Residential Life although ultimate veto still rests with the Chancellor. Hopefully as a result of this Board we will all see some positive changes made in dormitory living.

The President of S.G.A., Rick Savini, along with the Chairperson of the Board of Governors, Michael Curran, are preparing a questionnaire concerning minimum wage for students. This will be ready for referendum within 2 weeks after school opens.

S.G.A. now has an Affirmative Action Officer, Sylvia Franklin, who will be working out of the Student Attorney General's office which is in the same location as last year, 422 Student Union. The Student Attorney General is Cindi Iris.

It is important that everyone realize that at this point the economic crunch is being felt by the Student Government as well. Our financial situation is very tight. It is possible that we have over extended ourselves already and first semester has not even begun. It is very difficult to extend and retain services to the degree desired by all.

The Student Organizing Project is typing their resources together. They will be approaching as many students as possible explaining the goals of the project.

This is a brief summary of some of the major areas we have been working on. Please stop in the office for questions or to exchange ideas. The Student Senate office is located in Room 420 of the Student Union and each Area Government has an office in their respective areas.

Volunteers wanted at Belchertown

Up until about 10 years ago, Belchertown State School, a facility built to house the mentally retarded, maintained an isolated existence. The mood of society was one of segregation; as a result, people with special needs were ignored.

Since then the doors have been opened and student catalyst groups have found their way inside of the walls. One particular group, the Boltwood-Belchertown Project, has made exceptional advances in providing structured programming for volunteers in the five college community.

This fall, the Boltwood-Belchertown Project has twelve new programs being initiated. They will include areas that have never received volunteer programming before. In a sense, students will act as para-professionals, keeping alive the programming that takes place during the day. All kinds of volunteers are needed to work with all kinds of residents.

If you are a student who would like to become involved in our "social revolution", contact the Boltwood office as the State School (323-6311 ext. 296). Recruitment will begin the week of September 9, so watch area papers for more information.

SOME STRAIGHT TALK ABOUT JEANS
FROM THE AREA'S LARGEST JEANS STORE

THE RIGHT SIZE

Jeans come in your choice of waist size (a compact 28" to a big roomy 42") and length (30" to 36"). Smart jean buyers know that all jeans will shrink after washing, even pre-shrunk Sanforized denim jeans. You can expect jeans that aren't Sanforized to shrink about 1" in the waist and 2" in the length. Sanforized denim can be expected to shrink 2% to 3%. And if the seams pucker after washing, ironing will straighten them out, adding length.

FADING

Denim can be faded by years of wear, or more quickly, by bleaching.

Don't throw your jeans and some bleach into an automatic washer though. Instead, fill a bathtub with about 8" of water, mix in about a quart of bleach. Add jeans, turn often, check for color after 30 minutes, remove and wash in soapy water. Sandpapering the knees, seat and seam edges also gives a well-worn look.

MAINTENANCE

For the first several washings, launder your new jeans separately or you'll end up with blue under-shirts. A fabric softener and machine drying will make them softer. Strong iron on patches should be applied to any worn areas. After the knees finally pop out, you can cut them off, make a duffle bag or keep them for patches for your new jeans.

One of the ugliest clouds over America

> "Once a bright hope shared by all mankind, myself included, the rash proliferation of atomic power plants has become one of the ugliest clouds overhanging America."
> David Lilienthal
> first Chairman of the U.S.
> Atomic Energy Commission

by Bob Strachota

Atomic, or nuclear, power is not just another issue. It is one of the most critical problems facing the world today.

And the question cannot be put off. Nuclear power must be stopped in the next five years or it will be too late; by that time the nuclear power industry will be too large and it will be supplying too much of our electrictiy feasible. It will then take an inevitable disaster to force us finally to abandon nuclear power.

The nuclear question has arisen here in the Connecticut Valley because Northeast Utilities plans to construct the world's two largest nuclear power plants in the nearby town of Montague, just 15 miles north (and directly upwind) from Amherst. But don't think this is just a local problem; the nuclear industry foresees 1000 nuclear power plants in the U.S. within the next 25 years, 200 of those plants to be operating in New England alone.

Please read carefully the following information and decide for yourself whether you can remain on the sidelines or whether you will join us in our fight to stop this nuclear madness and redirect this country's energy policies toward the many safe, non-poluting alternatives.

Low-Level Radiation

Low-level radiation leaves the plant as part of normal operations. No radiation is safe. The Atomic Energy Commission says that 170 millirads per person per year is a "safe" dose, but an AEC-financed study by physicists John Gofman and Arthur Tamplin estimated that exposure to 170 milirads would cause 32,000 extra cancer and leukemia deaths per year and lead to at least 100,000 genetically-caused deaths each year. A single damaged cell can develop into a cancer although it may not be obvious until 5 to 20 years after the radiation hit.

Two cancer-producing by-products of nuclear fission are Strontium 90 and Plutonium 239. Strontium 90 gets absorbed into the food chain: cows eat it with their grass and it gets concentrated in the milk our children drink. Children and pregnant women are especially susceptible to radiation.

Plutonium 239 is the most deadly poison on earth. Manmade, it is highly radioactive and causes lung cancer. With a half-line of 24,000 of thousands of years. In February, 1974, the National Resources Defense Council said that limits on plutonium is a major by-product of the fission process; thousands of pounds of it are created each year, deadly wastes that must be shipped, buried, and guarded for centuries to come.

Accidents

There is no "fool-proof" plant. Every one is experimental. If only 10 percent of the radiation contained is a plant were to escape, people up to 100 miles away would be killed by acute radiation exposure. Agriculture and water supplies would be ruined for 150,000 square miles — an area the size of California. Thousands of people would die, many immediately, many later on from cancer, leukemia, and birth defects.

There have already been many minor accidents, a few very bad ones, and many that go unreported. In the last 25 years, 227,400 gallons of boiling, radioactive wastes have leaked out of storage tanks on the AEC's Hanford Reservation in Washington State. Of the 17 plants built before 1970, five have been shut down as unsafe or impractical. Another, the Fermi plant near Detroit, nearly had a core meltdown (nuclear reaction out of control) and the city of Detroit was threatened with evacuation. The plant was closed indefinitely.

Temperature inside a fission reactor may reach 2,300 degrees F. If there is an accident and the temperature rises too high, the reactor could collapse, releasing dangerous radiation. The ECCS — Emergency Core Cooling System — is supposed to flood the reactor with water within 5 to 10 seconds to control and prevent a meltdown. But all tests of the ECCS under simulated accident conditions failed completely. Yet the AEC continues to issue construction permits for nuclear plants, complete with ECCS.

We have only to think of the tortured history of the plant in Vernon, Vermont: mysterious "explosions", accidental radiation emissions, cut-backs and shut-downs. Must we wait for a major tragedy before we learn?

Dr. Hannes Alfen, a Noble Laureat in Physics, summed up the situation in the May, '72 issue of the Bulletin of the Atomic Scientists:

"Fission is safe only if a number of critical devices work as they should, if a number of people in key positions follows all their instuctions, if there is no sabotage, no hijacking of the transports, if no reactor fuel processing plant or reprocessing plant or repository anywhere in the world is situated in a region of riots or guerilla activity, and no revolution or war — even a 'conventional' one — takes place in these regions. The enormous quantities of extremely dangerous materials must not get into the hands of ignorant people or desperados. No acts of God can be permitted."

Alternatives

Large-scale, job-producing, low-cost, pollution-free alternative energy sources are not a pipe dream. Ex-President Nixon's Solar Energy Panel said we could have solar-heated houses in 5 years, solar building cooling in 6 to 10 years, and solar electricity in 10 to 15 years. (It takes at least 8 years for a nuclear power plant to be completed.) There are many other sound possibilities: fuel-cell generation, magnet-hydro dynmaics, hydro-electric generators, ocean thermal differences, wind power, geothermal power, coal gasification, methane.

One member of the Solar Energy Panel, U. Mass. civil engineering professor William Heronemus, testified at an AEC licensing hearing in January, '73, that wind-power could provide as much electricity for Long Island in 1977 as a proposed nuclear power plant — at the same cost or less, and with much greater reliability.

If the above alternatives had had the nuclear budget of the past 20 years, they would be a reality now.

There IS Something You Can Do

There is only one way to stop the proposed Montague nuclear power plants: public pressure. A primary vehicle for such pressure is the upcoming public referendum. Due to the signature-gathering efforts of a recently-formed group called the Alternative Energy Coalition (AEC!), on Election Day this November voters in Franklin and Hampshire Counties will have a chance to vote on the proposed plants.

While the Utilities can and will spend enormous amounts of money (supplied by us when we pay our electric bills) on fancy advertising, we must rely on people-power to get the truth about nuclear power plants to the voters and thus win the referendum. This is where you can help — by manning information centers, taking literature door-to-door where you live, showing films and speaking to campus and community groups, and registering voters.

Remember, you don't have to be a nuclear expert to make an intelligent decision about nuclear power and to help others do the same. Though it's important to understand the basic technical facts, the primary issues are moral and political.

If you're willing to help, or if you simply want more information, please call Seth Rockwell or Susan Bissell at 549-4518 in Amherst, or Bob or Randy at the Alternative Energy Coalition office, 863-2553, in Turners Falls. Our AEC needs you!

Students set to unionize

BY JEFF HOWARD AND DOUG PHELPS

Last Fall, during the faculty union organizing drive, this question occurred to many students: "Why don't we have a union?" Starting in early September, they began looking into the idea.

As a result, one of the newcomers to campus last Spring was the Student Organizing Project. Its goal was to lay the groundwork over the summer for a unionizing effort among students starting this Fall.

And indeed, according to the Project coordinator, Nesta King, "The summer has been very busy for the students and staff involved in the Organizing Project. A great deal of work had to be done to prepare for a student union, but it was worth it. It will pay off for students."

"The basic idea behind the student union concept is simple. Each student, by paying his or her fee bill, has tacitly signed a contract with the university for certain services.

But there are big problems with the contract. It is not ever really negotiated. There is no real "meeting of the minds." It is a contract of adhesion—take it or leave it.

As a result, the obligations for students are many, but the benefits few. Moreover, there are no guaranteed avenues of recourse for students when the contract's benefits (meager as they are) are not properly provided by the university. There are no "grievance procedures" formalized in the contract. We can yell and scream but, in the end, we have no real choice as to what happens.

The primary function of a student union would be to represent students in collectively bargaining a new contract with the administration and faculty, and in seeing to it that students' fights are protected.

Starting with the existing implied student-university contract, which all students agree to and must put up with, the union would attempt to get a better deal. The first step will be to inform students and enroll them as members in the union. The real task will be gaining recognition from the university and getting them to negotiate. Students will be asking for the same prerogative which the faculty has—to collectively negotiate their contract under given conditions.

In this regard, a student union would resemble any other union which exists to bargain collectively on behalf of its members, such as a trade union or a tenants' union. According to Ms. King, the issues which the union could address are numerous.

"The obvious things—tuition, fees, and such 'conditions of learning' as the quality of dorm life—do not exhaust the legitimate questions which students may want to raise in negotiations with the university," she said. "Every aspect of the educational and social impact of university policies are a concern, since students are, after all, those who the institution is designed to serve."

The Student Senate, which has committed considerable financial support to making the student union a reality, is a prime backer of the Organizing Project. SGA President Rick Savini was enthusiastic in describing it as "the number one priority for us."

Committe chairperson Tom Spriggs, who coordinated the student response to faculty unionization last year, called the Student Organizing Project "the most significant initiative ever taken by the student government."

Questions regarding just what could be negotiated in the student contract elicit various responses from the students working on the Project. Everyone seems to have their particular hopes—from tuition freeze, to no more mandatory meal tickets, to a public study of the environmental impact of university research being finances with student tuition money. This fact seems to emphasize that the Student Organizing Project and a student union are vehicles through which students could pursue many different goals and interests.

The S.O.P. hopes to build the union's membership primarily by educating people to the issues involved and the potential of the union. Another goal is developing new student services and economic cooperatives. Project staff member John Fisher is working initally on setting up a student credit union.

"Business skills need not be the monopoly of those in business who are intent on ripping off students," he said. "Students can develop their own economic systems. Rather than putting our money in Amherst banks, for example, which loan back a very small percentage of our money to us relative to the deposits that we provide, we can pool our money in our own Credit Union, which would loan money only to members!"

Fisher also noted that the Project will help set up various student cooperatives which would provide alternatives to "downtown" prices and "downtown" control.

The Student Organizing Project is intended to serve other special needs besides economic ones, even while the union is being organized. For example, organizer Alwin Schmidt has special responsibility for helping students employed by the university, who he described as "super-exploited students in most cases, working at wages below those that would be paid fulltime staff, and without a union to provide some protection."

Ms. King emphasized also that the problems faced by women and Third World students are a special concern.

Whatever the immediate returns of the student cooperatives and these special projects, the main goal for the long run remains to create a student union. Interestingly, the idea of student unionizations has been around for some time, according to various students working on the Project who have researched the question this summer. But two recent developments have paved the way for it to become a reality.

The first is the granting of majority rights, including the right to contract, to 18-21 year olds. Obviously, without this power, most students would not be able to take part in a union or in collective bargaining.

The second factor is the recent rise of faculty unionization. Faculties are increasingly accepting the idea that each group in the modern multiversity has its own interests, an had better organize to protect those interests. The myth that the administration does, or even could, represent every constituency has been shattered.

For UMass students organizing is, indeed, the challenge. Ms. King stressed the importance of unity, particularly in the beginning.

"A student union will concern itself both with high humanistic ideals and meeting students' basic needs," she said.

"But to do either one, we must also concern ourselves with power. A union must be coming from a position of strength to be effective," she continued, "and that will require unity. Unity and the union are the same thing."

Jeff Howard and Doug Phelps are S.O.P. staff members.

Students protecting the public interest

PIRG Begins Its Third Year

According to a poll taken in September, 1973 by a "prestigious, innovative, reference group," a clear majority of UMass students were for the first time able to identify correctly the organization, heretofore known as WMPIRG, as the local Nader-style group. This year, however, students will have to expand their vocabulary once again, since WMPIRG is no more. As of last January, WMPIRG merged with its eastern Massachusetts cousin to become the state-wide Massachusetts Public Interest Research Group, (Mass PIRG) with offices in Amherst and Boston.

While the name of the organization has changed, the goals have not. Mass PIRG continues to be the principal Massachusetts non-profit corporation, initiated, directed and funded by students concerned with protecting the public interest. Mass PIRG is one of more than twenty PIRGs nation-wide, all inspired by consumer-advocate Ralph Nader.

What's a PIRG

In the late sixties, many observers, such as Nader, perceived that students wanted to act on their social concerns, but needed an organization to facilitate their action. ThePIRG is that organization. Public Interest Research Groups provide the money which is needed to fund a full-time professional staff (which includes lawyers, an environmentalist, a journalist and other social science researchers), who are responsible for working with students in the areas of consumer protection and environmental preservation.

Students, often while earning academic credit, gain practical experience in public interest research by taking legal action, filing and supporting legislation, and providing expert testimony at public hearings. In short, by participating in the PIRGs, students can inform the public of irresponsible business practices, and unresponsive government agencies, therby effecting real and lasting social change.

Mass PIRG Past Projects

During the first year of the PIRG's existence in Amherst (August '72-73) more than 150 students, working with the PIRG staff, conducted research into areas as diverse as prescription drug price posting, unsafe toys, bank interest rates, and discrimination against women in housing and credit. PIRG also participated in legal action which blocked an environmentally unjustified $550 million interstate-standard highway in western New England, and was instrumental in the establishment of a federal district court in western Mass. PIRG staffers and students wrote, published and distributed the informative booklet, How to Sue in Small Claims Court. Mass PIRG plans to continue offering services designed to ensure that citizens know how to make use of these courts in the future.

MassPIRG's inquiry into the issue of nuclear power, initiated during its first year, has blossomed into an on-going multi-faceted analysis of what our state's energy needs are, and how they should be met. For example, a bill was filed this year to require legislative approval for the construction of new nuclear plants in the state. A preliminary report on the subject was published in January, 1974. Because complex and controversial problems of health and safety must be resolved before any new plants are built, MassPIRG will continue to oppose the further proliferation of these plants at this time, and will continue to urge citizens to educate themselves on this issue.

Summer Activities

Another facet of the PIRG is its internship program. Students can qualify for internships during the school year for academic credit, or during the summer on a paid or volunteer basis. This summer, several PIRG interns worked on projects reflecting their particular concerns.

Joan Cavanaugh, a student at Hampshire College, began her attempt to bring back the returnable bottle. She contends that the throwaway system of selling beverages not only depletes valuable resources and wastes energy while polluting the environment, but also costs more. The consumer not only pays for a beverage and its container, but also for the container's disposal. Ms. Cavanaugh is preparing a report on the economic and environmental benefits of implementing a bill that would require mandatory deposits on all beverage containers and ban the sale of bi-metal cans which are difficult to recycle. Since this type of legislation has in the past fallen prey to intensive industry lobbying, citizen and student support will be solicited throughout the coming academic year when the issue will be reconsidered again by the legislators.

In February, Anne Robinson began work on the Doctor's Directory Project. Anne, a UMass senior, worked this summer collecting data and preparing the Directory for publication this fall. The Directory will list information that is currently all too often unavailable to the public, including: office hours; fee schedules; qualifications; hospital affiliations; etc. Other sections being researched include a glossary of medical terms, a bill of patients' rights and a commentary on selected consumer health issues. The Directory should enable consumers to make a more informed choice when selecting a doctor, and also understand more about their present doctor.

Doug Stanley, an Astronomy major at UMass, spent much of the summer studying the complex struggle between rapidly expanding urban development and the need to preserve and protect the environment in Massachusetts. Every day the stat must decide whether a certain project should be allowed, and what controls should be applied to its development. The state legislature, recognizing the importance of citizen involvement in these crucial determinations, has passed various laws designed to encourage citizen input. Doug is concerned with the implementation of these laws and is conducting a series of small research projects designed to uncover any shortcoming in their effectiveness.

In the face of mounting pressure for relazation of standards, MassPIRG interns fought hard this summer to maintain the integrity of the Massachusetts air pollution program. In July, Louise Doucette, an Environmental Science major at UMass, testified in opposition to a request by Amherst College for permission to burn coal in the school's power plant. She criticized the College for not supplying supporting information required by the EPA, and criticized the state Department of Public Health for not demanding that information. Ms. Doucette also questioned the wisdom of allowing any unnecessary coal burning at this time. citing a recent EPA study which details the health hazards of suspended sulfates, a so-far unregulated form of air pollution. In the light of EPA's findings, she concluded, "sources should be emitting the minumum possible amount of sulfur oxides into the air and be burning the minimum possible amount of coal." Amherst College withdrew its request at the hearing.

Ralph Nader, the inspiration behind Public Interest Research Groups.

A Northeast Utilities request to burn coal also came under fire from Stephen Rider, another air pollution researcher and Chairperson of MassPIRG State Board of Directors. At a public hearing packed with concerned citizens, Rider charged that "the variance request is nothing more than a cosmetic attempt to pacify the company's outraged customers, which simply is not justified by an analysis of the economic, environmental and health implications of the proposal." NU's request is presently being reviewed by the DPH.

Finally, in July, MassPIRG was joined by the Stewardesses for Women's Rights and the Aviation Consumer Action Project, two groups concerned about the continued transportation of radioactive cargo on the nation's commercial airways, in its effort to remediate the problem in Massachusetts. Together, the three organizations charged that commercial airlines routinely carry a variety of dangerous substances only a few feet below the seats of unsuspecting passengers, and demanded that transportation of these materials be banned, or passengers be advised of their "travelling companions." Students and stewardesses leafletting at Logan Airport on July 30 brought this issue to the attention of citizens and airlines alike.

Projects For This Year

Plans are underway to continue the efforts of the summer interns, in the areas of health, land reform, air and water pollution, and legislation to regulate beverage containers. MassPIRG will also continue to investigate the issue of nuclear power. New areas for investigation include; auto repair fraud; alternative energy sources; the rights of patients to have access to their medical records; and, what reforms are needed to ensure that Massachusetts citizens will be able to purchase electricity and other

The Fall Political Scene

by Mark Vogler

"This year's gubernatorial race should be a dandy."

Inflation and Watergate woes have opened up the floods of political suspicions in Western Massachusetts.

Nixon is gone.

But the tempo has troubled administration set is still here for the fall's elections.

An air of skepticism seems to be brewing in the First Congressional District as primary time is nearing. No doubt it's the sign of the time -- not much different from the rest of the country, though.

For the first time in 12 years, U.S. Rep. Silvio O. Conte of Pittsfield will have to recognize opposition from the Democratic party in November.

Political columnists in Boston have even gone so far as to speculate that Conte was filled with apprehension as he sorted through the nomination papers of his opposition in what appeared to be an unusual trip to the Secretary of State's office.

Conte explained that it's been his usual custom to examine his opponents' papers to find out which areas of his district are dissatisfied with his performance, a gesture of any politician "worth his salt."

Perhaps.

But not so in the eyes of one of his opponents.

Kenneth Mosakowski, a former McGovern campaign organizer and UMass graduate, suggests that Conte may be compiling his own political enemies list, comparable to the one drawn up by Nixon's Committee to Re-elect the President (CREEP) in 1972.

Calling Conte "vulnerable and deserving of opposition," the 27-year-old UMass library assistant says the chances of a Democrat beating the incumbent "are very good this year.".

"Basically, Conte hasn't served the best interests of the district. An examination of his record will show that he's played both ends for years and years ... it will show he has contradicted himself many times in problem areas," said Mosakowski.

"Every incumbent should be challenged. Mr. Conte hasn't had a serious threat since 1962. And when you allow a congressman to go on that long, he becomes complacent and doesn't worry about his district," he said.

Besides coordinating McGovern activities in the district during the last Presidential campaign, Mosakowski was manager for Rep. James G. Collins' (d-Amherst) election drive in 1972.

If Mosakowski is to face Conte in November he must first defeat his Democratic opponent in Sept. 10 primary.

Thomas R. Manning of Pittsfield, former Hampden County assistant district attorney, is the man he will face.

Manning, who entered the race at the last minute (securing the necessary 2,000 signatures before dead-line to get his name on the ballot), said he believes Conte is vulnerable "because he has failed to communicate with the working man."

He said he supports a "low-cost alternative" to burning oil and coal for energy and took issue with Conte's vote against the Dickey-Lincoln hydroelectric project in northern Maine.

Conte seems to have a solid base in Pittsfield -- his home town -- and all across the district he seems to be popular. Considering the political backgrounds of both Mosakowski and Manning, it's highly unlikely that Conte will receive a serious challenge this time around.

But there are local politicians around who would like to run for Congress someday -- state legislators like Sen. John W. Olver (D-Amherst) and Rep. Collins -- and would like to see nothing better than the Democratic challenger put up a decent fight, to make things easier later.

Both Democratic candidates are hoping that voters, otherwise pledged to Conte, will feel disinterested in this year's race and will not show up at the polls -- while constituents fed up with political trends will make a point to vote for a change of pace.

This year's gubernatorial race should be a dandy.

Watergate again seems to be the dominate theme. The candidates are stressing more accountability to the people and openness in government.

Governor Francis Sargent. They're after his job.

The incumbent, Francis W. Sargent, should not expect much support from this end of the state -- particularly after his visit to the University last spring.

An effort by students here to "free" a 29-year-old mentally retarded man from Norfolk prison succeeded in June.

After months of intense pressure on the Governor's office, Russell Daniels was transfered back to Belchertown State School. His transfer came 52 days after Sargent told the group that a seldom used legal statute existed which would enable the State Department of Mental Health to assume responsibility of the resident from the Department of Corrections.

Daniels was convicted of murder last year while living on his own after having spent 13 years at the Belchertown institution.

He was serving a life sentence at Norfolk Prison. The sole basis of his conviction was a signed confession which Gov. Sargent conceded had been "illegally attained."

The group under the guidance of UMass Professor Benjamin Ricci brought the circumstances surrounding Daniels' incarceration to light -- much to the embarassment of the Sargent administration.

Ricci has made it a point to spark clamor across the state for reform in human services -- particularly in the area of mental retardation. And this year it has become an important campaign issue.

In separate visits to the Belchertown State School this spring, Democratic challengers Michael Dukakis and Atty. Gen. Robert H. Quinn denounced the delivery of human services under the present administration and promised to do better if elected.

It was Ricci who two years ago made Belchertown an issue of the two Second Hampshire County House seats after sparking a suit against the state for inhumane conditions existing in the institution for the mentally retarded.

The institution late last year won $3-million for additional staffing and major building upgrading after a 14-month legal battle.

The Walter E. Fernald State School of Waltham has a suit now (pending against the Commonwealth for insufficient services) rendered the residents of that institution -- after encouragement from Ricci.

Dukakis, the Lt. Governor candidate on the Kevin White ticket which lost to Sargent four years ago, seems to be a favorite among students and should draw support from the liberal Democrats.

However, Atty. Gen. Quinn should provide Dukakis very strong competition as the chief state law enforcer who has never lost a Democratic primary.

It's conceivable that Quinn could prove a more appealing choice to disenchanted Republicans. He simply comes across more as one of their kind.

While Sargent is likely to receive a tough go regardless who the Democratic challenger is, support from Republicans has very much withered away. He'll be opposed in the Republican primary by his former state commerce commissioner Carroll P. Sheehan.

Although Sargent has written his one-time associate off the list as a serous threat, Sheehan seems to be proving him wrong.

Arica

Not a religion, not a therapy

The Arica Institute, described as "the closest thing to a university for altered states of consciousness" (Psychology Today, July 1973) is abody of theory and technique presented in the form of practical, experiential trainings.

The school's goal is to stimulate and nourish a new consciousness of ourselves, our cultures and our planet. It recognizes that the solutions to our problems are already inside us and offers specific tools to accelerate our natural interior growth process.

All of us live in a body. In Arica the first order of business is to strengthen, free and awaken the body. Many methods including sound, vocalization, movement, dance and relaxation are used to make the body into a light, responsive energized and expressive vehicle.

All of us live with ourselves and other people. Arica gives a new theory of ego types and life development that guides each person in understanding his own self-restricting patterns. Work is done to clear up one's personal past, turning old pain into new wisdom. Finally, new and powerful methods are learned and practiced for making deep, honest, energizing and loving contact with others.

All of us live in a complex, demanding, dynamic world. Arica offers a way of understanding how things happen, seeing the processes by which a situation moves from low to high and high to low, rather than focusing dialectically on the situation being either high or low. Besides having undereducated bodies and hearts, most of us have overeducated minds which chatter incessantly with ideas, plans, worries and fantasies. Methods are used to regain the energy lost in this activity so the mind may serve rather than rule us.

The training is done in a supportive group atmosphere and the "plus" is the energy generated by the group working together. Individual growth, Arica claims, is dramatically speeded up in this fashion.

Arica is not a religion nor is it therapy. It is a nonprofit organization with 25 centers called Teaching Houses across three continents whose sole purpose is to teach experiential methods of human development.

Under certain specific arrangments, Arica training is available for UMass course credit. Contact Arica-Amherst for details.

Charging that the Governor is responsible for the high unemployment rate in Massachusetts (and is driving business from the state, Dukakis and Quinn have also joined the rap on Sargent's economic policies.)

The liberal Republican may have further alienated himself when he chose to run against the state's Democratic legislature.

At the close of the 1974 session, Sargent said he allowed the General Court to adjourn only because he felt nothing further could be accomplished by keeping it in session.

While Sheehan is cutting his own throat by concentrating on the state's economy under Sargent -- (the fact that business and industry eroded more while Sheehan was there) -- the Republican party is behind him more than Sargent would anticipate.

One Sargent staffer acknowledged to the Collegian that "things are going to be rough this fall. Staying here (in office) isn't going to be that easy."

Anyway, all incumbents are in for a dog fight this fall. Sargent just happens to have the misfortune of being Republican and not having a strong party backing.

The two-party system may cease to exist in Massachusetts. To the liberals, an uglier thought exists that we may be a police state if Quinn gets in."

While Sargent has his problems the Democratic party may experience a serious fracture. Although Quinn and Dukakis have managed to maintain party unity by not attacking one-another (yet), the two have markedly different policies and views. -- almost to the point of collision.

Mark Vogler is a former Collegian political reporter.

UMass Local Board

The Local Board is of particular concern to the UMass community. Local board members attempt to keep students and other interested citizens advised as to the status of PIRG projects. In addition, it serves as a resource center for students and faculty interested in participating in MassPIRG projects, and ensures open lines of communication between the PIRG and local student, faculty and administration representatives.

The local MassPIRG chapter at the University will be in full swing this fall semester with new plans, new projects and new people. Students who can spend only an afternoon, as well as students who are willing to commit an entire semester, are needed to research and help solve many environmental and consumer issues. Fresh ideas and suggestions are always welcomed.

If you are interested in joining the local chapter, working on a PIRG project, or just receiving more information, please drop by the PIRG office on campus in Room 411-B of the Student Union or call 545-0712. And don't forget to pick up your copy of the Fall 1974 *MassPIRG Reports,*which will be available on campus soon.

WMUA to increase emphasis on Third World programming

Having completed its third consecutive Summer of broadcasting, WMUA (91.1 FM) looks toward an even bigger Fall. With am increased emphasis on Third World programming, WMUA will be offering programs never before heard on its airwaves.

Ujamma Drum, a production of the Black Mass Communications Project, will move into the Fall with several musical programs successful over the summer. Latin Contrast and the Sunday Gospel program will complement the other contemporary Black Jazz and Soul Programs. Presently in the works are plans for WMUA's first Black News Service.

Also new on MUA's air waves will be the weekly syndicated National Lampoon Radio Hour. Although only one-half hour in reality, its probably 30 of the funniest and most pointless minutes of time you could possible spend.

The Shadow stealthily makes it's way to the airwaves this fall, featuring the adventures of Lamont Cranston as The Shadow. This original network radio series contains 30 minutes of mystery and adventure every week.

Gay Break, WE the People, and Focus had up the fall Public Affairs schedule. High Tides, a daily astrological forecast comes your way every morning. Host Jeff Jawer will be primarily dealing with the moon, as well as the planetary influences of the coming day.

Also in the works for the fall is MUA's first cooking show, From Soup to Nuts. Currently in the planning stages, the show focuses on better ways to prepare food as told by several cooks in the Valley. Farmers and co-op people will be featured on the program as well.

Able bodies are always a necessity to make WMUA operate at its fullest capacity. Areas where openings are available include news reporting, announcing, and investigative reporting. Individual work is urged for many of the specialized Public Affairs Programs.

Take advantage of your student-run radio station. Even if you don't care to actively take part, at least stop by and look around. It is located at 42 Marston hall. Ask for any of the following people. They comprise the management board for the Fall, and will be glad to show you around.

OUTREACH: still many administrative problems

BY HOWARD L. LEVIN

The OUTREACH Program offers many types of internship programs in many different cities. This program, to my knowledge is one of the best of its type in the country, offers assistance and support for students wishing to establish an intership in virtually any field. Still, OUTREACH has many problems, most of which are traceable not to the nature of the program itself, but to those who administer it.

For the prospective intern, I have a few words of caution regarding your dealings with OUTREACH. The guidance and information program that OUTREACH operates is somewhat anemic, although some marginal improvements have been made recently. The administrators of OUTREACH (not the program itself) have developed a cocky, unchallengeable, and often misleading stance. The information and advice they offer about where to go and what to expect is often incomplete and sometimes inaccurate. They are master of the art of excuse and of passing the buck.

Many of the problems that the program has are due to the lack of professionalism on the part of the admisistrators of the program. They abuse the often virtuous administrative tool of informality to an extent that causes severe problems with effectiveness. Internships 500 miles away are set up most often on a verbal (unwritten) basis with a minumum of understanding on either side as to the needs and expectations of the intern or the agency accepting the intern. Internships, critically important to individual students, are often left hanging on verbal threads which OUTREACH administrators pass for firm commitments. There is rarely any direct communication between the agency and the intern prior to the arrival date.

In at least one case this spring the agency involved was not even expecting any intern. In several other cases, the agencies did not know when to expect the interns and, when they arrived, had no idea what the purpose of the program was, what to expect from the intern, or what the intern expected of them. The all too frequent result was dissappointed interns and bad impressions left by OUTREACH.

The administrators are particularly adept at making false promises and showering interns with lip service. A frequently suggested solution to one problem has been the development of a standard information form that would inform agencies uniformly what the intern expects of them and what they may expect of the e intern. The implementation and use of this sort of pseudo-contract would eliminate the problem of major misunderstandings which frequently occur when the intern arrives. The mutual dissatisfaction has ruined several internships and eliminated some promising agencies from the future intern market.

A major problem that OUTREACH has is a lack of follow through. The program will get you to Washington and place you, but then the administrators will practically forget about you. Their professions of following up on placements and problems are largely empty talk. Several poorly placed interns this spring were fortunate in locating other spots. Others were not, and consequently wasted weeks knocking on doors. Despite continued requests for assistance, OUTREACH was unresponsive. In other words, if difficulties are not easily solved on one's own, the OUTREACH administrators will provide a copious quantity of words, but little or no concrete assistance.

In both their dealings with internship problems and with the landlord from whom the university leases the house on 16th street, they have domonstrated their consistent desire to shirk responsibility. When the landlord defaulted on several important provisions of the lease, OUTREACH replied with a modicum of promises of action, all unfulfilled. The OUTREACH people prefer to fabricate specious excuses that even the legitimate problems of unsuitable placements are based on overblown expectations or other irremediable difficulties.

Another problem, related to this lack of follow through, is that the administration of the program is so spineless that, at least during this last spring semester, several of the participants were, with the consent of the administrators of the program, allowed to deviate so far from the prescribed educational emphasis of the program as to endanger it for future students seeking academic credit for a semester in OUTREACH. If the program is to be administered so loosely, it risks losing much of the hard-earned respect it has developed among the faculty and the administration.

The OUTREACH Program is based on an excellent educational concept. It has only recently developed a large degree of legitimacy within the various academic departments. An essential course that the program must take is that students should have easier access to university credit for their legitimate learning experiences in the field. It is necessary for the university departmemts to more fully recognize the value of internships as educational experiences, in and of themselves. For those who seek graded credit so as not to prejudice their records with pass-fail credits when they apply to graduate schools, a more enlightened policy of granting graded university credit ought to be developed. At present, in order to receive a semester's full graded credit, one must take on an oppressive academic load while interning.

If this is to be ahcieved, and the OUTREACH Program is to continue to grow as a viable educational tool in many areas including, but not limited to, political internships, it must be administered more effectively. I hope that, with support from Whitmore, the recently formed student advisory board to OUTREACH will become an effective force for positive reform.

Free checking accounts with $100 minimum balance at Hampshire National Bank!

That's right — Hampshire National Bank has done away with service charges on personal checking accounts — just so long as you maintain a $100 minimum balance in your account.

The average cost of service charges is $15 to $20 a year. This is the cost that you'll save by maintaining a $100 minimum balance. Where else can $100 earn you that kind of money?

And it's easier to balance your checkbook, too! There's no service charge to remember to deduct. Just add your deposits and subtract your checks — that's the only bookkeeping necessary!

If your balance should drop beldw $100 in any month, you pay a $3 charge for that month.

This minimum balance checking account is offered to individuals only — not for business accounts.

Nixon's resignation: In our haste to forget the whole bloody mess, will we leave behind

Unfinished Business?

By Karen Lynch

First there was the summer of that third rate burglary, an outstanding example of how not to commit a break-in.

Then there was the summer of the Watergate hearings. John Dean set all the ladies' hearts a-throbbing, and we were all assured that the American folk hero was alive and well and living in North Carolina.

Now we have had a summer of impeachment proceedings, cut short by the resignation of President Nixon. The moral of the story is: "Don't Mess With The Constitution."

The season has provided some fine material for a book (there will be many, I'm sure) on the Rise and Fall and Rise of the American Political System, subtitled Ripley's Believe It or Not.

In the heat of our greatest constitutional crisis, the Congress demonstrated that it can be decisive, the Courts that they are truly impartial. Representatives, who only a short time before had seemed unyielding, crossed partisan lines to vote on the issue of impeachment according to their conscience. And finally Nixon's team, men of arrogance and ruthlessness, whose greatest crime was serving their President all too well, were toppled one by one from their pinnacle of power, like so many Humptey Dumpties.

Below the surface of Watergate something black and foul had been festering in this country, and now it has been exorcised.

There are still areas where we must tread softly, of course. There is the danger that a reactionary Congress may become too strong, as hard as that is to comprehend.

But the greatest danger, I thought as I watched the proceedings on the telly last month, was not that the country could not heal itself, because it will, with almost no effort at all. Rather the danger is, that in our haste to forget the whole bloody mess, and understandably so, we will leave behind unfinished business.

Americans have always favored the underdog. (Think ... which did you like better, the coyote or that obnoxious roadrunner? Be honest.) After the resignation speech people began saying but with less conviction than before, that yes, Nixon should be tried for the obstruction of justice, among other things. As the man said, how can you raise a defense in the face of an admission?

Mr. Nixon deserves our sympathy, but wouldn't we be doing the nation the greatest disservice of all if we were to forget the appalling events of the last administration, in the name of charity?

I remember also thinking at the time that if Mr. Nixon is granted immunity from criminal prosecution, and certainly his appearence in the courts should be the subsequent link in this chain of events, then all that has gone before-the Washington Post's gamble, the resignations of Cox and Richardson, the Watergate hearings and the House Judiciary Committee, the lives that have been changed so drastically from Ellsberg to Haldeman to Frank Wills-these will be reduced to events of little consequence and will be recorded in the history books in an orderly fashion.

I cannot believe that the purpose of this summer's proceedings was to spite Mr. Nixon, to slap him on the wrist and send him home to San Clemente.

Nor can I believe that it is demeaning and humiliating to stand in assumed innocence in a high court of these United States. Do we have such little faith in our court system to doubt any verdict, guilty or innocent, on any matter?

It is vengeance we should fear, but never justice.

Karen Lynch is editor-in-chief of the Collegian.

Nixon had long before last week contemplated resignation.

So he made a compromise — releasing voluminous transcripts of his key conversations. The contents proved appalling and invited Congress and the special prosecutor to take their case to the courts.

There were diversions, though. The Energy and Middle East crises made the public want to forget Watergate. But the President in his unwillingness to be open and reveal the truth of the national scandal continued to bring himself down.

He was beyond help. The country was fully aware of the impeachment process — many rejecting it as something "too long and tragic a process for the nation to undergo." But Nixon kept muttering the words — just as his fallen comrade Spiro Agnew — "I will not resign."

The House Judiciary Committee convincingly voted articles of impeachment while the Supreme Court unanimously ruled that tape subpoenaes must be honored.

The President acknowledged impeachment as a "foregone conclusion," but vowed he'd be aquitted in a Senate trial.

Public opinion was unfavorable toward the President. Most favored impeachment. But most doubted he would resign.

The tide turned for worse when on Aug. 5 he decided to release taped discussions — apparently under pressure from his attorney James St. Clair — which documented his involvement in the Watergate cover-up.

The result — a firestorm in Congress with the increasing demands for President Nixon's resignation.

A day later, he acknowledged that he had considered quitting but decided that he would ride out the constitutional process to the very end, for better or for worse.

But would it be logical for Richard Nixon to become tangled up in Watergate to the point of impeachment? Would he allow himself to join his associates in disgrace, or would he achieve a compromise with more dignity?

Meeting with Senate Republican Leader Hugh Scott, Sen. Barry Goldwater of Arizona and House Republican Leader John J. Rhodes at his own request, President Nixon saw he could no longer postpone resignation. No longer could he stonewall the proceedings.

The proof is in the pudding. Richard Nixon never dreamed that the public would become aware of his tapes. Once they did, he had two options: 1) ride out the storm, or; 2) resign.

Destroying the tapes would be outright suicide. In the end, though, the tapes destroyed him. No, Nixon would never have allowed himself to be impeached and convicted — not after his overwhelming re-election victory in 1972. Resignation most certainly was on his mind from the time of the tapes disclosure to the time of the last bombshell.

A guided tour through WHITMORE

with Judy Wolinsky-Soloway

If you aren't familiar with it yet, it is only a matter of time before you become acquainted with the Whitmore Administration Building. Usually students are reluctant to approach it unless they have a problem. But fear not! Whitmore can and does help students with administrative questions and problems. Whitmore is also the home of the Chancellor, Vice-Chancellors and other administrative officers. The following is a list of some of the offices in Whitmore you may come in contact with in your days here at UMass.

Admissions - 255:

As you have already been admitted, you might use this office only to pick up a general undergraduate bulletin or a Boston Interchange Form.

Bursar's - 225:

This is the place to pay all University charges, with the exception of laboratory fees which are to be paid in the Campus Center. A check cashing service for students is available, Office hours are 8:30 - 3:30 weekdays only.

Commuter Student Affairs - 229:

This office handles problems commuting students have. It also has a Babysitters - Housekeepers notebook, car pool listings, and has general information available about the University.

Dean of Students - 227:

This office considers itself "a cutter of red tape and-or referral service". If you have a general problem, this might be a good place to stop. The office also has notary publics available.

Financial Aid Office - 243:

Sources of financial aid handled through this office are loans, grants, scholarships, and the work-study program. If you are in need of financial aid, this is the office to visit. They also have a notebook of area jobs that are phoned in by the community.

Foreign Students - 239:

There are some 600 foreign students from 69 countries enrolled on campus. One of this office's main responsibilities is an advisory capacity for foreign students. The office handles problems dealing with immigration, visa, and gives general advice. In cases they cannot handle, the office has referral service.

Greek Affairs - 236:

The office serves as liaison between the School and students who live in the Greek residential area (fraternities and soroities). Specific areas of concern are chapter advisory work, the establishment of new programs for the benefit of the whole area, ie., colloquia, and general counseling of residents who have any sort of problem. If you are interested in joining a Greek organization and have any questions, this would be the office to visit.

Handicapped Student Affairs - 227:

A relatively new office, the Office of Handicapped Student Affairs handles problems a student with any form of physical disability might have.

Housing - 235:

The 3 components of this office are on-campus, married student housing (University owned), and off-campus. The experimental Off-Campus Housing Office, presently located in room 229, will be moving back to 235 mid-September. The on-campus segment handles the process of getting into and out of a dormitory living situation. An important point to remember; if you change your local address, be sure you notify the Housing Office of this change. This is for general information purposes.

International Programs - 239:

There are approximately 25 overseas programs run from this office. If you have been thinking about studying abroad, stop in. Students can also apply for an International Student I.D. Card here.

Records - 211:

All grades are issued from this office and with a valid I.D. you can check you record card. You can also pick up a group insurance form, a prior approval form, and find out about your core requirements. If you want a reference form from a company you worked for inserted in your grade file, have them address it to the Records Office.

Registrar's - 221:

The Registrar's Office performs a record-keeping function for various information about each student. Make sure you notify this office of any changes in your billing address. The office also has various forms you may need sometime in your career here. If for insurance or other reasons you need a letter saying that you are a currently enrolled student of the University or are a student in good standing, this is the office to obtain it from.

Scheduling - 168:

If you need to find out where a class has been scheduled or if you have more than two final exams on one day, the Scheduling office would be the place to have these problems taken care of. The Scheduling office could rearrange that third final exam.

Transcript Office - 209:

With a valid I.D. you can obtain copies of your transcript here; the first two copies are free, all subsequent ones are $1.00 each. You can drop off your transcript request in the morning and get one day service by returning to the office the same day at 4:00 p.m. for pick-up.

Veterans Affairs - 239:

As its name implies, this is the office that handles all sorts of services for veterans.

UMASS SOUTH

Spending a semester on Capitol Hill can be a valuable experience, as one Washington, D.C. intern discovered...

BY HOWARD L. LEVIN

Washington is a strange place.

Among other things, it is the home of U Mass South, located at 1515 16th Street N.W., Washington, D.C. (Keep that in mind if you ever find yourself nearby looking for a place to sack out).

Washington, home of the infamous malady of "Bureaucratic Bloat," (the cause, of John Mitchell's three-and-a-half chins and Richard Nixon's swelled jowls), is also the destination of one of the UMass OUTREACH Program's largest contingents of student interns. Since last January, each Washington OUTREACH group has lived in the bleak looking gray structure at the corner of 16th and Church Streets. This fall's group of Washington UMies should be moving down there this week.

Viewing the opportunity to spend a semester working on Capitol Hill as both a valuable educational experience and a chance to get away from Amherst, I traveled down to UMass South last February for four months of working in a Congressional office. I can say now, and with some authority, that the experience was extremely valuable both as a practical experience and as an educational one.

My tenure in Washington, which lasted seven months, fulfilled all of my major expectations. As a political science major, the chance to work inside of Congress (rather than just study it from without) provided an opportunity that simply cannot be duplicated on campus in a classroom. Working on Capitol Hill one finds himself sitting in the midst of that mass of legislative and political activity that others can only read about in the printed treacle of newspaper interpretation. Each morning it is possible to check the pages of the Washington Post for the little box that proclaims most of the legislative activity and committee hearings to be held that day. Through the use of the privilege of staff I.D.'s and by simply knowing the where, why and what of that which is going on, the intern on Capitol Hill can view and come to understand a large portion of the processes of the legislative branch of the government. One has the opportunity as an intern to follow the legislative course from the function and nature of the various committees to the final debate and vote on a conference report on the floor of the House and the Senate.

In particular, as a spring intern and then a temporary staff member through the summer months in the office of Congressman Robert F. Drinan (D. Mass.), I had special access to the impeachment proceedings in the Judiciary Committee, of which Drinan is a member. Other interns had similar opportunities concerning the activities of the committees with which their members of Congress were involved.

It is also only through the close association with Congressional staff members and Congressmen themselves that one can come to understand to any real extent the nature of the role which personality and individual character plays in the whole process. Some of the most powerful and influential members of Congress are not nearly the most senior, active, intelligent of energetic; they have earned their various positions of eminence by virtue of their own political cunning and exercise of personality. Lyndon Johnson, for one, was famous for his ability with and use of this combination. Some of the most powerful people on Capitol Hill are not even elected; they are merely the obscure aids, assistants and researchers of various Congressmen and Senators. It is not impossible for some congressional interns to acheive or to fall into the position of being able to significantly influence the course of their Member's activity in certain areas of legislative concern. I can attest to the fact that several interns from both UMass and other schools have been able to exercise influence over significant legislative issues.

Most interns do not find themselves in such positions of influence simply to the role that is delegated to them in the offices in which they work. Depending on the office, interns are most often occupied with legislative and general research, letter writing, special projects of a wide variety, and running errands (a good way to learn your way around Capitol Hill). If you are interested in an internship, it is best to check with someone who has worked in that office, as they are all very different in character, or sometimes the

Is college worth it, or is your diploma a ticket to nowhere?

Too late, the majority of college graduates are discovering that it no longer pays for them to go to college. Most of them "aren't likely to get into graduate schools or find jobs," says investigative reporter Roger Rapoport, who reports that 24 percent of all American freshmen want to be doctors, lawyers or teachers because, "against all evidence," they believe these professions are "secure."

The cold facts of life after college are frightening. According to his study, 41,000 applicants are competing for 14,400 medical openings; 86,000 applicants are competing for 38,500 law-school openings (one top-rated law school had 3,800 applications for 290 places), "and equivalent proportions of applicants to many other graduate program places."

Presently, college graduates are glutting the job market. The American Bar Association reports that there were only "16,000 jobs for the 29,000 lawyers admitted to the bar last year." Teachers are even worse off. "Last year," reports Esquire Magazine, "there were 117,000 positions available to the 231,000 certified elementary and secondary-school teachers looking for work." One advertisement for an assistant English professor's job at Missouri Southern University drew 253 applications from candidates at 101 different schools. Apparently the worst is yet to come.

Government studies predict that for approximately 9.8 million college graduates entering the labor force during the 70's "only 6.6 million jobs requiring more than high school educations will be available to them." And according to The National Education Association, by 1980 only one out of every five Ph.D.s graduating annually can expect to find university jobs.

Because of the scarcity of jobs in their chosen fields, many qualified college graduates are forced to take any available jobs. For example, a number of Ph.D.s recently graduated from Berkeley are now "driving cabs, working in ski shops and even scrubbing floors," says Esquire. It seems that for most college graduates, a diploma is a ticket to nowhere.

Apparently, the worst is yet to come. Administration studies predict that for approximately 9.8 million college graduates entering the labor force during the 70's, "only 6.6 million jobs requiring more than high school educations will be available to them."

It's not always the fittest who survive in times like these. Pre-med students at one Michigan college admitted they were willing to "lie, cheat, steal, sabotage or do anything else it takes to get into medical school." A chemistry grader and tutor told Esquire how, after exams were handed back, an average of 50 studentss would flock to his door "clamoring for a few extra points." "Many made crude attempts to change wrong answers and would try to bluff their way to better grades." That's what's happening to tomorrow's would-be doctors.

Fewer students are buying the college - as - the - road - to - success illusion: there are not 680,000 vacancies on American campuses, notes Esquire, Fewer students means fewer teachers. Many colleges have fired both tenured and non-tenured faculty. Apparently, teaching is no longer the secure profession it once was.

Is college worth it? According to Esquire, "nearly one third of college graduates don't earn more on the average than high school graduates." Harvard educator Fritz Machlup and Princeton economist Christopher Jencks both agree with Esquire that college graduates earn more "because they were brighter or better off to begin with," and most of them "would earn just as much if they didn't go."

Two debate programs offered for undergrads

The UMass Debate Union is looking for people interested in developing research, anaylsis and delivery skills who also enjoy the challenge of intercollegiate competition and-or the thrill of live audiences.

We offer two programs for the undergraduate. The first is the INTERCOLLEGIATE DEBATE PROGRAM. Students who participate in intercollegiate debate receive training in argumentation theory and debate skills to enable them to represent UMASS at debate tournaments held on college campuses throughout the United States. Individual instruction is given to all debaters, regardless of previous experience, by a staff of well qualified debate coaches. This year's topic is: "Resolved: that the powers of the Presidency should be significantly curtailed."

Our second program is the PUBLIC DEBATE PROGRAM. Participants in this Debate Union activity appear before high school and service club audiences throughout Massachusetts to present programs on controversial topics. This coming year we hope to expand the Public Debate Program to appear before prison groups, social agencies, and on radio and television. Possible topics include: women in society, victimless crimes, energy problems, prison reform, obscenity, pornography, the development of nuclear plants.

This program is tailor-made for pre-law students, education majors, political science majors and any man or woman interested in combining learning experiences with the fun of travel, friendship and competition.

We are located in South college. Come in Door A, go through the first door on your right, and come to offices 133 and 124 on Thursday, Sept. 5 and Friday, Sept. 6 from 2:00 to 5:00. Our phone number is 545-2066. Drop in for a chat and more information.

Philosophy course evaluations ready

Last semester, a group of undergraduates conducted a course evaluation in the Philosophy department. Hopefully, the results will be of use to students choosing Philosophy courses.

The questionnaire consisted of a set of objective questions and a supplementary essay question. The results of the objective questions have been tabulated, and are now available at the Honors Office (Mach E23), CASIAC (Mach E20), and at the Philosophy department (7th floor Thompson). Essay evaluations are kept in an open file in the Philosophy department.

Women's Studies Program underway

Last Spring, the University approved the proposal for a Women's Studies Program. Presently undergraduates may approach Women's Studies in either of two ways:

(1) A student may earn a Certificate in Women's Studies which would be equivalent to a minor concentration. This is in addition to the student's regular major.

Under this option a student will be required to complete a basic interdisciplinary course (to be offered for the first time in Spring, 1975), an advanced integrative seminar in Women's Studies as well as 18 additional credits in Women's Studies related work through courses in various departments at UMass and in the five colleges, independent study, field work projects, Project Self workshops, Northeast, Orchard Hill and Southwest area courses.

(2) A student may major in Women's Studies through BDIC.

This is a two year pilot project. A full major in Women's Studies will be proposed to begin in Fall, 1976.

Women's Studies will have an information table in Boyden during registration. A list of Fall semester courses as well as a new 15-page detailed course description guide are available in the Women's Studies office. Students interested in finding out more about any aspect of the program-the Certificate, the BDIC major, or individual courses or projects should stop by the Women's Studies Office in Goodell Building (in the lobby outside Everywoman Center) or call 545-1922.

Media course to examine sexism

All university women are invited to take part in the Women's Media Project and course in the Southwest Women's Center.

The course is designed with the understanding that the content of media shapes the way we think about ourselves and the world. This course is designed to provide concrete remedies to sexist and racist stereotyping, and give women a sense of their own power to effect change.

The class will be responsible for a weekly production on WMUA. Production will be divided among small groups and the class will provide material, direction, criticism and support. In addition it will discuss women's roles in other media-film and video, t.v. and journalism, both traditional and alternative. Women in the course will be encouraged to get their F.C.C. liscences and keep a journal of their progress.

Because this is an ongoing media project on campus, women will be expected to take part in projects contributing to the development of progressive radio (such as broadcasting news of people involved in fights against racism, sexism, and inequality compiling lists of positive women's music, producing a Women's Show or "We the People" talk shows, helping to develop educational workshops at WMUA, and many more.

For further information contact the Southwest Women's Center 545-0626 - or S.W. Academic Affairs- the course is worth 3 credits and meets twice a week. Women who can't take part in the course but who are interested in involvement in projects at WMUA, leave your name and number at WMUA 545-2876. Women from the class will also be part of WMUA so the various project are of course open to the participation of all students, men and women.

Carry it on!

All advocates and agents of social change! An unprecedented learning experience may await you, as organizers of "CARRY IT ON!" Working Conference on Social Change invite all interested persons to participate in a day of discussion and idea exchange, Saturday, September 14, on the UMASS campus.

With the intent to help shake off from activism-inclined shoulders the twin weights of inertia and pessimism, and the further wish to take a first step toward promoting local leftist solidarity, the coming conference will offer the following workshops; What is Radical Political Economy?- Health Care: The Present Illness- University Complicity: The Dance for Research Dollars- Corporate Power in America- Teaching and Political Conscousness- Racism and Political Repression: Report from North Caroline- The New Labor Movement- Why Students Should Unionize- Community Organization in Western Massachusetts: Problems and Prospects.

Though the structure of the workshops is expected to vary from the presentation of reports to informal conversations to panel discussions, each session will be convened by Valley area activists knowledgable in the particular area and responsible for posing questions and stimulating discussion.

As it is taking shape, "CARRY IT ON!" promises to advance the common advantage of all—students, workers, professors—who care to become involved. Inquiries concerning the conference should be addressed to: "CARRY IT ON!", Working Conference on Social Change, Room 416, Thompson Hall UMass. or call 545-0450

Applying to grad school?

Seniors in the College of Arts and Sciences who would like information concerning graduate school application should attend one of the three meetings scheduled by CASIAC this month. Since most graduate schools require application one year prior to admission, seniors should begin planning for this process right away.

The pre-graduate orientation meetings are scheduled to take place on the first three Thursdays in September:

September 5 at 7:30 p.m. Room 113 Campus Center

September 12 at 3:00 p.m. Room 113 Campus Center

September 19 at 10:00 a.m. Room 113 Campus Center

The meetings will stress the following topics: Why Graduate Study?; The Experience of Graduate School; Selecting a School; Financing Graduate Education; The Mechanics of Application. Time will be allotted for questions.

Even students who do not plan to attend graduate school the September after their June graduation from the University nevertheless will find the meeting useful in planning a timetable for application.

Make your jeans unique

If there still exists an American high school where jeans are not de rigueur, then there's certainly no American college where jeans are not the byword, password and only word in campus fachion.

So you've got a pair of jeans, of course. Now what ? Make them your own. The trouble with jeans is they tend to look alike. So dress yours up and make them autobiographical. If you're from New York but going to school in Arizona, maybe a city skyline done in patchwork around your cuffs will tell people something about you. But if you're from Arizona and going to Yale, put a cactus on a hip pocket to tell people you're somebody special.

Techniques for brightening jeans are limited only by imagination, but the more popular are painting, applique, embroidery, stenciling, cutting out peek-a-boo spots, sewing on commercial trims-or a combination of all these.

Painting is the easiest. Acrylic paints, the tube kind, are best. Although you use water to thin them, when dry they're impervious to water. Sometimes you'll need two coats of paint. Painted jeans can be washed by machine but avoid harsh detergents or very hot water.

Stenciling is just one step removed from painting. The trick to it is to hold the stencil down firmly and dab the paint on rather than "paint" it on. Be sure the paint isn't runny or it will slip under the stencil and smear.

Applique is a fancy French word for a very simple process. It's sewing patterns of cloth on the jeans at random. Use colorfast, preshrunk fabrics. (Old clothes that you know don't fade or shrink are best. However, don't use worn fabrics or they'll wear out before your jeans do.) The easiest way to make appliques is to cut out a cardboard pattern. Lay the pattern on the wrong side of your fabric and cut aroung it leaving a one-quarter inch seam allowance. Then press the seam allowance over the cardboard, slashing edges on curves where necessary so the seam allowance lies flat.

Embroidery is a skill that borders on an art (and in the Middle Ages it was an art). To embroider on jeans use all six strands of cotton embroidery floss. You don't really need the hoop unless you're really fussy about getting the stitches even. The easiest way to learn embroidery is to have someone show you the stitches, but any dime store has embroidery books which illustrate the basic stitches. Or else invent stitches.

Nailheads make colorful designs. Instructions for applying them come with the package. Don't soak colored nailheads in enzyme detergents. Hovever, gold or silver ones can take any washing punishment. Rhinestones and sequins are other possibilities. Ask the people in a trimming store how to apply them.

OUTREACH intern "experience" files in their office.

As for living in Washington, it certainly bears no resemblance to living in the peaceful Pioneer Valley. The Washington metropolitan area is one of the most expensive places to live in the country. Some say it is, in many respects, more expensive to live in Washington than in either Boston or New York. Living conditions in much of the city are deplorable, but the U Mass house is in a reasonably decent area -- just don't walk too far to the east or north, particularly at night. Many of the inner city food markets, monopolized by the Safeway supermarket chain, are deplorably dirty, understocked, overpriced and feature poor quality food. It is especially distressing to note how little the federal city has done for most of its black citizens, which make up 71 percent of the population. Many of the scars of the riots of the late sixties still await the appropriate salves and much of the apparent healing that has occured is merely due to the encroachment of modern office buildings and hotels onto spoiled residential areas.

Still, much of Washington is a very special and beautiful place. The character of Georgetown, its architecture and streets, is unique. Unfortunately most of the commercial area is a honky-tonk and overpriced evening attraction. Upper Northwest Washinton cloaks some of the most beautiful residential areas and parks that can be found anywhere. The museums of the city, led by the many buildings of the Smithsonian Institution, are sufficient to keep any museum lover busy for many months worth of weekends.

The national monuments and the sense of the important role which Washington plays in world affairs cannot help but affect even the most insensitive visitor. It is an experience in itself just to be a part of, living in, and knowing this city which pulses and contorts to the rhythmic vicissitudes of the nation. The mood and mind of the city is deeply political. It seems that all everyone ever talks about is domestic politics and world affairs, so much does the city infuse the minds of its inhabitants with the subject matter for which the city was created and has come to be known for. Washington has virtually no industry except for government, its politics and its bureaucracy.

Looking back on my Washington experience, I cannot recommend too highly the advantages of spending a semester on Capitol Hill. If you are interested in government, social or political agencies, the OUTREACH Washington internship offers a tremendous opportunity to learn and apply knowledge to a practical situation. It is also a great chance to get away from the campus atmosphere for a constructive and pragmatic purpose. It can be a tremendous learning experience, far exceeding the virtues of a semester's academic studies in government. If you are interested in what is going on and want to further your understanding of how to effect change, a semester in Washington coupled with a placement in a good office, could be one of the most valuable experiences of your college career.

UMass' answer to the Gallup Poll

Project PULSE seeks your views

Did you know that "81 percent of the people favor impeachment"? Sound familiar? Well, that figure represents the number of UMass students favoring impeachment as far back as MARCH!! Once again, UMass is in the fore of national opinion.

Or did you know that veterans on campus don't want to be treated like 18-year-olds by their professors, but would rather keep their service background unknown in social situations?

And although nearly half of a sample of UMass students expressed general satisfaction with Governor Sargent's administration, only 17 percent said they supported his re-election.

Why do students move off campus? What do students want and need during "January Break"? What are student's reactions to co-ed living now that it is well-established "tradition" on campus? All of these facts, figures and issues are part of the normal work of SAREO, Student Affairs Research and Evaluation Office, a service department within Student Affairs.

SAREO provides research and evaluation services to agencies primarily within Student Affairs. During this past year's operation, in addition to the Impeachment Survey, Veterans' Survey, and Political Awareness Survey, SAREO collected data on The Elections of 1974, Student Development Center, Special Programs, BDIC, The Lettuce and Grape Boycott issue, and many other topics.

The primary research tool used is Project PULSE, UMass's answer to the Gallup and Harris Polls. Each week a random sample of UMass students are telephoned by PULSE interviewers who ask a series of questions on the issue of concern.

If you pick up your phone some Tuesday evening and hear "Project PULSE calling," you'll know that SAREO is seeking your opinions or attitudes.

Health Center addition opens

After several delays, the new Health Center addition is now in operation. The old building was designed to handle only 10,000 students and has been tremendously overcrowded during the last few years.

The new entrance and automated health records area is larger and more efficient and should eliminate confusion when seeking care. The enlarged outpatient area is divided into three smaller clinics, which will provide students a more personal environment.

Expanded physical therapy, laboratory and x-ray facilities are located in the new additon, as is the new dental clinic. The Dental Health Division has been established to provide emergency dental care and dental health education services as part of your health fee. The staff will provide routine preventive care, such as examinations and cleaning, and routine restorative services on a modified fee-for-service basis.

New services to be instituted through the year in the Health Center are fluoroscopy, as well as ophthalmology, obstetrical and gynecological and psychiatric consultation. The opening of the new addition has provided more space within the existing building for the Division of Health Education Environmental Health and Safety, and a Women's Health Counselor.

Work is now underway to convert sections of the old building into a new improved pharmacy area, emergency and acute care clinic. and employee health clinic. Completion of this work is expected in early fall. Special adaptations to make the building accessible to the handicapped will also be completed at that time.

The Health Center is negotiating with the University for more patient parking area. Until then, to insure adequate parking in the Health Center area, students are asked to cooperate with the extablished regulations. The loop road to the health Center should be open at all times for access by emecgency and service vehicles. Metered parking is available for patient parking.

View of part of the new laboratory facilities in the Health Center. In addition, expanded physical therapy, x-ray and out-patient facilities are now available to students.

Health Services summary

The University Health Services has been organized to help students with health problems and promote maximum effectiveness of their college experience. All students pay the health fee, and are encouraged to use the Health Services as they would use their family physician and other health resources.

All health records are confidential and will not be released without your authorization. A brief summary of programs provided by the Health Services follows.

Medical Care
[549-2671, Health Center]

Students may seek unlimited consultation from the physicians, nurse practitioners, and nurses in the outpatient unit of the Health Services. Students may consult on a walk-in basis or by phoning for an appointment (549-2600). Emergency treatment is available 24 hours a day. A minor problem, such as a mild cold or infection, can often be treated effectively by a nurse and save you waiting time, or you can visit the cold self-treatment center at the Health Center Pharmacy. Specialty services are also provided, including wart, allergy, eye care and contraception clinics, immunizations, and nutrition, and problem pregnancy counseling. The x-ray, laboratory, pharmacy, and physical therapy departments provide services to students upon recommendation by Health Service staff. The Health Center is also a hospital providing bed care for students with more serious illnesses who require closer supervision.

Dental Health
[549-2671, Health Center]

The dental health staff will provide routine preventive care, such as examinations and cleaning, and routine restorative services on a modified fee-for-service basis. Because staff and facilities are limited, you may be referred to either a local dentist or your family dentist for restorative care.

Mental Health

Life at the University can sometimes become a perplexing experience, and it may be helpful to talk out your feelings, sort our confusion, and develop new perspectives with a member of the Mental Health staff. Social workers, clinical psychologists, and psychiatrists are available for short term, one-to-one consultations, and they also provide group therapy and couples consultation when appropriate. Staff members are also involved in consultation with student groups and other campus personnel. If you would like to talk with someone in Mental Health call for an appointment. The Division is in Machmer, Room 303. Emergency after-hours consultation is always available.

Health Education
[549-2671, Health Center]

The Health Education staff promotes programs and activities dealing with a variety of issues, such as first aid, alcohol use, and nutrition. A large supply of printed materials is available. The staff also coordinates the Peer Sex Education and Health Aides Programs, and fosters consumer involvement within the Health Services, works with the Student Advisory Board, and promotes consumer evaluations.

Environmental Health and Safety
[545-2682, Health Center]

The staff works to provide a safe, healthful University environment, being responsible for such things as kitchenette and dining commons inspections, radioactive material control, injury prevention, and fire extinguisher servicing.

Field Hockey for women

Interested in exciting competition and enjoyable times? If you are, come try out for one of the best hockey teams in the area-UMass's.

Try outs will be conducted during the normal daily practice time of 4:00 to 6:15 p.m. at the fields next to the North Phys. Ed. Building. If you are interested, come to the first session on Sept. 9 prepared to play, or contact Mrs. Carol Albert (coach) in Rm. 106, 545-2557, located in North P.E.

Like to sing?

Like to sing? Like choral music? Like to make a lot of new friends and have good times? Well, the University Chorale may be your kind of group! To find out more about it, wander up to Cottage C (on the hill behind Worcester D.C.) during the day on Sept. 3, 4, or 5 and see Dr. duBois for an audition.

Student Judiciary

By CINDY IRIS

UMass is one of the few universities in the country with a student judicial system. It is run for the students, by the students.

This Fall marks its fourth year in existence. Each year it gains more strength and credibility and, therefore, heavier work loads. We intend to make this its best year yet. Hopefully a good number of you will become involved. However, some of you may get involved involuntarily. Either way, it's important that you know about it.

The judicial system structurally consists of- the attorney general, advocates, and judges. My job as attorney general is to advise and assist any undergraduate in this judicial process, to train student advocates and judges, to guarantee student rights under the Student Government Association Constitution, and to prosecute, on behalf of the SGA, any person or RSO group for violations of the SGA Constitution and General Laws.

Advocates are the "lawyers", preparing and presenting student cases in and out of court.

Judges interpret the SGA Constitution and hear the cases being brought to court.

Last year the court heard such cases as shoplifting, dorm thefts, test cases on the Southwest Endangering Behavior Policy Act, and a major case on the misuse of purchase orders, misappropriation of funds, and the validity of certain hiring practices by a former member of one of the RSO organizations.

The work often takes a good deal of time, effort, ability, and diplomacy. At times, it's even exciting and rewarding. Any undergraduate can become an advocate or judge. The people involved get training and they know their stuff. Because of that the judiciary has gained a status and strength.. We need good, fair people. Already the issues and cases are more numerous, stronger, and deeper than last year especially because people have seen the good job the judiciary did last year.

Spending your Health Fee

Remember your Health Fee? It is the students who make the decisions on health fees are spent. The problem is, often times these decisions are made in a vacuum, without any broad student involvement.

Students neither have to be elected or appointed to join this decision-making group. They just have to have paid the mandatory health fee.

The stated goals of this student group, the Health Advisory Board (HAB), are that health programs remain sensitive to the students and responsive to student needs. As long as various student groups remain unrepresented and unheard, however, these goals are merely empty words.

Besides reviewing the infirmary's budget (and the subsequent fees levied on student), the Board will be evaluating health programs, interviewing doctors, dentists, and generally playing the role of consumer advocate to the Health Services administration.

During the first weeks of school, students are overwhelmed by information about various campus groups. Not to burden anyone further by detailing the significance of the Board here, simply stated the Board is involved in many positive programs, often to the educational benefit of students. It is hoped that interested students will contact the Board at 549-2671, extension 181, or watch for notices of meetings in the Collegian.

ROSH HASHANAH: The Jewish New Year

BY RABBI SAUL PERLMUTTER

For Jews the academic new year and the calendar new year coincide. The Jewish new year's day, Rosh Hashanah in Hebrew, is a day of quiet celebration and introspection and prayer. Although according to legend several events such as the birth of Isaac were supposed to have taken place on Rosh Hashanah, it is the only Jewish holiday (along with Yom Kippur) that is not associated with any historical event in the life of the Jewish people as a whole.

The period from Rosh Hashanah through Yom Kippur (the Ten Days of Repentence) is the period in the Jewish year dedicated to and centered exclusively around the individual. It is a time to examine oneself and one's relationships with others. It is a time, especially appropriate for students at the start of a new year, to question where we are going and for what purpose. And it is a time to seek forgiveness and to do teshuvah--the act of turning away from one way of acting and being in order to turn towards another.

To see our faults and to improve ourselves is never easy. It takes preparation. Elul, the month preceding Rosh Hashanah, foreshadows the high holidays with the blowing of the shofar at the traditional morning prayers. As Rosh Hashanah approaches, another preparatory exercise is added: the saying of selichot, literally forgiveness prayers, either late at night or else very early in the morning. We will prepare ourselves for both new years by having a selichot vigil at 12:00 midnight on the night of September 7, in the Cape Cod Lounge of the Student Union. It will be preceded by a speaker (to be announced) and a snack at 10:30 p.m.

Jews mark the new year (5735 this year) by communal prayer. Our Rosh Hashanah services will take place on Monday evening, Sept. 16, Tuesday morning and evening Sept. 17, and Wednesday evening, Sept. 25 (Kol Nidrei), and Thursday morning and evening (5:30 p.m.), Sept. 26. All high holiday services will take place in the Campus Center Auditorium--evenings at 7:00 p.m. and mornings at 10:00 a.m. unless otherwise noted. A break-the-fast-dinner will be held immediately following services on Sept 26 in the Colonial Lounge of the Student Union. People who would like to attend the dinner should sign up in the Hillel office by Sept. 23

All students and faculty are welcome to attend these services and are encouraged to share in planning and leading them. Anyone who would like to help should contact the Hillel office SU 302 as soon as possible.

New Rabbi at Hillel

Rabbi Saul Perlmutter

For the past month there has been a new person working as an advisor to Hillel, the Jewish student community at UMass. Rabbi Saul Perlmutter comes to us via Vermont, Brandeis, Israel, and Philadelphia. He replaces Rabbi Aryeh Meir who has returned to Israel, and lives in Northampton with his wife Shoshana and his dog Tikva.

Why did he decide to work in Hillel? "I wanted to work in an informal setting, on involved in K'lal Yisrael—the community of Israel, as opposed to any subdenominational group," he said. "I aslo like the excitement and challenge of life on campus. Hillel is the only framework that provides for all that—plus it offers a lot of room for freedom and creativity."

He sees his role as one of a facilitator and advisor, rather than as a "director".

"Hillel is for students to create a place where they feel comfortable, where they can share ideas and feelings, and express their Jewishness," he said. My role is to help them as much as possible without dictating any particular orientation that they must follow."

He has already made a mark on campus. Starting in the spring semester there will be a kosher food line. (All interested should contact him in the near future.) He has also enlarged the scope of the Beit Midrash (House of Study) to include one credit courses on the Jewish Woman, Israel Government, Chassidic Mysticism, Basic Hebrew, and others.

One of his latest projects is to try to spruce up the Hillel office in Student Union Room 302. (Any artistically talented students who would like to design a large mural should contact him.) But most important, he hopes to foster an attitude in Hillel where both traditional and non-traditional students will feel at home. Judging from his consideraable involvement in traditional as well as creative forms of worship, in Zionist and communal affairs, it seems like he may just be able to pull it off.

He hopes that students will stop in at Hillel, SU302, to introduce themselves, and talk over a cup of coffee. But if you don't see him there, you might bump into him riding on his bike or hiking on one of the area's mountains, two of his favorite pastimes. (His secret ambition is to be the first rabbi to finish the Boston Marathon.)

Intellectually he finds himself guided by Kaplan's sociology and Heschel's poetry. He has a great interest in Israel, where he has lived for over a year, and in developing Jewish ceremonies which synthesize traditional practices with the contemporary scene. He would also like to encourage involvement of Jewish students in social issues, as he believes that Judaism has a lot to say and do in the world today.

The Jewish Community: exploding some myths

BY RABBI SAUL PERLMUTTER

Hillel is one of the last vestiges of a Jewish community that once was. Except instead of disappearing, Hillel is growing considerably all over the country. Perhaps it's more accurate to say that Hillel's approach may be in the vanguard of what the Jewish community could and should be like in America.

All too often the Jewish community in America is fragmentized. There are organizations that take care of the troubled, organizations that pray, organizations that foster the cause of the oppressed Jews in Russia, Syria, and elsewhere. The part is often mistaken for the whole. For many Jews, involvement in one facet of community life (i.e. in one organization), becomes a substitute for partaking in the totality of Jewish concerns. You pray in one place, collect money in a second, and work for social justice in a third.

That's not the way the Jewish community used to be and that's not the way Hillel is today. People first associated with the kehilla, the community as a whole; they realized that Judaism represents a totality of concerns. Jewish life was and is more than taking care of the needy only, more than prayers only, more than a desire to share events and emotions only. It is all these things together.

This is the same approach that Hillel takes to Jewish life on campus. It invites Jewish students to be involved with Soviet Jewry, with Community Action Projects, with prayers, and with parties, and to be able to do so within the context of the community as a whole. Interested in something Hillel does not offer? Fine. Hillel does not represent a mold that everyone must fit into. Students are invited to share their projects and concerns with others through Hillel. Nothing will be changed except that the totality of Jewish life on campus, our entire Kehilla, will be enriched.

All too often the Jewish community, like other communities in America, is religiously specialized. People go around with labels—reform, orthodox, atheist—labels that represent increasingly less substantive differences but which paradoxically succeed in creating gaps between people. Hillel is perhaps unique in that it follows no religious "party line". Students are welcome whatever their religious background may have been. The assumption is that we, as Jewish students, can try to find meaning and spirituality without regard to predetermined labels and sets of beliefs.

The American Jewish community today is often , of necessity, big on organization—committees, subcommittees, third vice presidents and testimonial dinners. Hillel on the other hand is short on bureaucracy—as an organization it is highly unorganizational, informal, and ad hoc. If you'd like to help plan, program, or publicize—just come and work. If not, you don't have to. There's one thing we can't avoid—money. Without student support, we simply would not have enough money to function. Therefore we encourage payment of a $5 registration fee.

The American Jewish community is in a state of flux. Whether it will continue as it is in its present state of fragmentation or whether it will take on an old-new form of diversity within unity, sharing and wholeness, will depend on what happens in this generation. Hillel offers the second option for those who would like to join in the quest.

Aikido: a martial art

Aikido is a way to an awareness of Ki. Being the center of Aikido, it is important to understand Ki. It has many shades of meaning, ranging from power to spirit; but in Aikido it is generally accepted as the source of all things. Ki is the power behind you and I, and all combinations of things in the world. Thus, it is also the reigning force or center of all our movements. As such, the techniques in Aikido, aid in the development of Ki. A simple demonstration of Ki and its power can be sensed by letting a baby grab hold of your finger. There is no strength as we know of, since the child's muscles are hardly developed; yet there is a power in the grasp because the child puts all of its being into the act of holding on. In a similar manner, in Aikido, we try to become aware of our Ki and how to utilize its power.

Today, we are faced with a dualism between body and spirit. With Aikido and through its movements, we unify ourselves through the exercises and techniques developed by Prof. Moechi Uyesheba. This unified combination creates a power in movement unsurpassed by mere flex of muscle. As a martial art, Aikido is quite functionally practical for everyone regardless of body size or strength, since Ki is common to all, who become aware of its presence. In fact, those of greater strength must learn to control it, because the tenseness of muscle inhibits the flow of Ki through the body.

If anyone is interested in this non-competitive martial art, which goes beyone self defense into self-development, Aikido might be of interest to you. At U Mass, there exists an Aikido Club with several permanent members and an accomplished teacher-master. There will be a demonstration as well as some Aikido movies shown on Sunday, Sept. 22 at about 2:30 p.m. (it will be posted in the paper just prior th that date with an exact time).

Ticketed unjustly?

Did you ever receive a parking ticket that you felt you didn't deserve? If so, the University has a unique appeal process available to you. The Parking Appeals Board, an independent campus committee, is empowered to review the circumstances concerning the issuance of a parking citation, and, if justified, may nullify the penalty.

The Appeals Board consists of two undergraduates, one graduate student, one faculty member, one classified and one professional (non-academic) employee. Meeting throughout the year, they review and decide the validity of parking appeals submitted to them.

If you are the recepient of a questionable parking ticket, you should go to Dickinson Hall and fill out an appeal form within seven (7) days of the date of violation. Fill out one form for each ticket you are appealing, and attach the ticket to the form. Leave the completed form with the officer on dutv at the desk. If you desire, a ten minute personal appearance before the Board may be scheduled, but this is not a necessity.

If an appeal is granted, the charges against you are dismissed. If an appeal is denied, the citation is forwarded to District Court in Northampton. A notice of denial is sent, at which time you may pay the fine involved, or await a summons to court, where you may plead your case before a judge.

All parking violations listed in Article IX, Section 2, of the University MOTOR VEHICLE RULES AND REGULATIONS may be appealed. However, the Board urges everyone to consider the situation involved in the issuance of a parking citation, and appeal only those in which mitigating circumstances may justify a review. This would ease the case load on the Board, and speed the appeal process for fellow campus members.

Lesbian feminists

by DIANE BELLAVANCE

Being a lesbian feminist is living on the fringe of both the Women's Movement and the Gay Movement. Lesbian feminist represent the synthesis of women's and gay oppression.

What many gays and many women, both on the right and on the left, do not understand is that gay oppression and feminist oppression have identical roots — a sexist society. Gays cannot be free until women are free. People cannot be free until all people are free.

Can we remind ourselves that there are still thousands of gays who have never heard of Stonewall (the 1969 gay riot in New York City where many were killed), who are jobless, are ostracized by family and church, and arrested on the streets for holding their lover's hand? Alternative institutions (gay churches, feminist communes, centers, classes) are necessary in a society which gives us so little support.

This is why the Gay Women's Caucus exist. It will provide the women of the community with counseling, legal referral, a library of books on the Women and Gay Movements. Most of all, it hopes to provide support to those sisters who are just coming out. We also hope to have a Gay Women's line, a speakers bureau which will be available to the entire community, and a newsletter.

The Caucus has just obtained a new office which is located on the second floor of the Student Union, Room 413 (next to the Student Homophile League Office), and should be open by the second week of classes. The first meeting is on Thursday, September 5 in the Campus Center, Room 903 at 7:30 p.m. This meeting is open to all interested women.

Diane Bellavance is treasurer of Gay Women's Caucus.

UMass Arts Council announces 1974 & 1975 concert season

The Intimate P.D.Q. Bach.

Empire Brass Quintet.

Jose Limon Dance Company.

THIRD WORLD CULTURAL SERIES

For the third consecutive year, the Umass Arts Council will present a Third World Cultural Series as part of its 1974-75 Program. Mr. Alan Light, Manager of the University's Arts Council, announces that the Council has engaged eight attractions for the coming Season, representing diverse cultures from throughout the Third World.

The Emperor Dele Ojo and His Africana Internationals will launch the Series on Monday evening, September 23, at the Student Union Ballroom. Dele Ojo and Africana Internationals will perform native cultural dances and the Band will paly a variety of music, including indigenious african music for dancing.

The Collective Black Artists, featuring an 18-piece Big Band, which is the musical performing facet of the Collective Black Artists and which is composed of some of the best Black musicians on the American scene today, will appear in concert on Saturday evening, October 5, in Bowker Auditorium. Among the well-known members of Collective Black Artists are Frank Foster, Roland Alexander, Jimmy Heath, Eddie Preston, Richard Williams, Charlie Persip, and Reggie Workman.

On Friday evening, November 1, the celebrated Chiang Ching and Company will present An Evening of Chinese Dance. Chiang Ching, a graduate of the Peking Dance Academy, has received critical acclaim for her concerts around the United States and Asia. The Program, which will be presented in Bowker Auditorium, will include traditional and contemporary Chinese Dance Forms.

The fourth Third World Cultural Series offering will feature one of Latin America's favorite bands, the Willie Colon Latin Band in a Dance-Concert on Sunday evening, November 24, in the Student Union Ballroom. Noted for its unique style of the "Latin beat", this famous big band will be visiting the Amherst campus for the first time.

The remaining four attractions on the Third World Cultural Series will be presented in the second semester. On Friday evening, February 7, 1975, The Wastsa Theatre Company, under the direction of Sati Jamal, will be seen in Clay Goss' ORNETTE. This event will take place in Bowker Auditorium and will mark the second appearance of the Wastsa Theatre Company at the University.

ALI AKBAR KHAN, Master Sarodist, will be on-stage in Bowker Auditorium on March 17, 1975. Khan recognized the world over as India's master musician and virtuoso of the sarod, has contributed greatly to the popularization of Indian classical music and continues to thrill concert audiences whenever he plays. The Arts Council is especially pleased to bring this great artist to the University for the second time in 3 seasons, since Ali Akbar Khan's concert tours take him literally around the globe, playing in the capitals of Europe, Asia, and in North and South America.

M'Boom, the noted percussion group, will appear in concert in Bowker Auditorium on Monday evening, April 7, 1975, also as part of the Third World Cultural Series. Founded in the summer of 1970 in New York City by six gifted percussionist-composer-arranger, M'Boom's purpose is to explore in depth the limitless dimension of percussion music and present these findings to the public for its enjoyment and enlightenment. Among the greats with M'BOOM are Omar Clay, Warren Smith, Max Roach, Freddie Waits, Joe Chambers and Roy Brooks.

The final event on the Third World Cultural Series will take place on Sunday evening April 20, 1975, in Bowker Auditorium when the Khogen National Comic Theater of Japan will appear in a program of centuries-old Japanese theater, fully-staged, and elaborately costumed.

Tickets for the Third World Cultural Series are now on sale and may be obtained by contacting the UMass Arts Council Office at 125 Herter Hall (Tel. 545-0202) and are priced at $12.00 for UMass Students, and $24.00 for the general public for the eight-event Series.

CHAMBER MUSIC SERIES

The Chamber Music Series being presented by the UMass Arts Council for the 1974-75 Season will feature some of the world's most outstanding musicians.

Inaugurating this popular Series on Tuesday evening, October 1, will be the Guarneri String Quarter, which has received international acclaim for its absolute mastery of the ensemble form. Comprising the Quarter are Arnold Steinhardt and John Dalley, violins; Michael Tree, viola, and David Soyer, cello. Each of these gentlemen had achieved renown as a soloist before their debut as the Guarneri String Quartet in New York City in 1965. The most popular and praised Quartet of this era, their sold-out tours have taken them to cities and colleges throughout the United States and Canada, to the major Music Festivals in Europe, Australia and New Zealand. The Guarneri String Quartet records exclusively for RCA Red Seal and their best-selling albums have won them many international awards.

For their concert at the Amherst campus on October 1, the Quartet will play works by Mozart, Berg and Beethoven.

Maurice Andre, trumpet virtuoso, and the Wuerttemberg Chamber Orchestra under the direction of Jorg Faerber will be presented as the second attraction on the Chamber Music Series on Monday evening, November 11. They will offer a program of works by Hindemith, Vivaldi, Tartini, Stamitz, Bartok and Albinoni. Acknowledged as Europe'a classical music sensation, Maurice Andre attracts "standing room only" crowds in Europe's major concert halls and at international festivals wherever he appears. Throughout the world he is hailed as "the king of concert trumpeters."

The Wuerttemberg Chamber Orchestra, now on its first North American tour, broadcasts regularly over BBC and is one of Europe's most sought after performance groups.

The Empire Brass Quintet will lead off the Series in the second semester on Monday evening, February 10, 1975. Described by Gunther Schuller as "A brilliant Quintet of young musicians, representing the highest standards of American brass playing," the group is composed of Rolf Smedvig and Charles A. Lewis, Jr., trumpet; Raymond Cutler, Trombone; Samuel Pilafian, Tuba; David Ohanian, Horn. Mr. Ohanian and Mr. Smedvig are principal players in the Boston Symphony and the Boston Pops Orchestras. Concertizing as an ensemble since 1972, the Empire Brass Quintet has won the praise of Michael Tilson Thomas who says of them "...a group of young super-virtuosi ... whose musical perspective is reflected in the drive, excitement and togetherness of everything they do."

Anthony Newman, one of the world's most exciting and brilliant performers on the concert stage today will bring the Series to a close with a harpsichord-organ revital on Friday evening, March 7, 1974. In addition to his extensive concert appearances, Newman teaches at the Juilliard School of Music. He also records for Columbia Recrods.

Mr. Newman invariably receives exstatic reviews after each of his concerts and to quote just two, the New York Times has called him "a keyboard technician of staggering facility ... on the scale of Horowitz. Paul Hume, reviewing a performance of Mr. Newman's in the Washington Post avowed, "he makes the music live as it rarely does."

All Chamber Music Series events will be held in Bowker Auditorium, Stockbridge Hall, at 8 p.m.

Season tickets for the Chamber Series are now on sale and may be obtained by contacting the Arts Council Box Office, 125 Herter Hall, University of Massachusetts, Amherst, 01002. (Tel. 413 545-0202), and are priced at $6.00 for UMass students; $12.00 for the general public.

DANCE SERIES

The opening event in the Mass. Arts Council Dance Series for 1974-75 will feature the Jose Limon Dance Company in two evening performances, Friday, October 18, and Saturday, October 19. A different program will be offered each evening. Following their triumphant performance in Moscow last year, Ella Bocharnikova, leading ballet critic of the Soviet Union, said of the Company "...Jose Limon Dance Company provides an evening feast of theatrical pleasure."

The second offering on this Series will bring the Boston Ballet to the Amherst campus for two performances; one on Friday evening, November 15 and the other a matinee performance on Saturday, November 16 at 3 p.m.

The Boston Ballet has just completed its tenth year as a performing group and has been featured on many occasions with Arthur Fiedler and the Boston Pops Orchestra, National Education, all Television and the Chicago Lyric Opera. The Company has received glowing reviews form critics across the country following each of its performances. Clive Barnes, writing in the New York Times following their performance at the Music Hall last Season said, "...The Boston Ballet has establised itself as one of the leading companies on the East Coast."

The Dancers of Senegal will be presented in a single evening performance on Friday, December 6. This is the National Dance Company of Senegal and they perform their native dances in wildly extravagant and colorful authentic costumes. This Company promises to be one of the most exciting troupes to tour this country this Season. This event will take place in Amherst Regional High School Auditorium.

The next two Companies on the Dance Series will be presented during the second semester. The Hartford Ballet Company will be seen in two evening performances, Friday, February 21 and Saturday, February 21 and 22, 1945, followed by the 5x2 Dance Company on Tuesday evening, March 4, 1975.

The Hartford Ballet Company, Connecticut's only resident professional dance company, has received national and international press coverage during its tours which has taken the Company throughout Massachusetts, Maine, New Hampshire, Vermont, New Jersey and, of course, Connecticut. At the end of the 1973 Season, the Hartford Ballet Company was selected as a participant under the Dance Touring Program of the National Endowment for the Arts, which now enables this young and sparkling Company to extend its travels to include two major tours out of the Country as well as visits to the South and Mid-West in this Country during this coming Season.

The 5x2 Dance Company is the final event scheduled for the Dance Series and will take place on Tuesday evening, March 4, 1975. A modern Dance Repertory Company composed of Jane Kosminsky and Bruce Becker, 5x2 offers a program that is frankly dramatic and eminently theatrical and demonstrates that just two dancers can be a "multitude."

All Dance Series events will be held in Bowker Auditorium, Stockbridge Hall, with the exception of the Dancers of Senegal, and all UMass Arts Council events commence at 8 p.m.

Season Tickets for the UMass Arts Council Dance Series are now on sale and may be obtained by contacting the UMass Arts Council Box Office, 125 Herter Hall, UMass, Amherst, 01002, (Tel. 545-0202) and are priced at $7.50 for UMass-Amherst students, $15.00 for the General Public.

CELEBRITY SERIES

The UMass Arts Council has announced its Celebrity Series for the 1974-75 Season which will bring to the Amherst campus artists of world renown.

Launching the five-event Series on Monday evening, October 21, will be the Japan Philharmonic under the baton of Maestro Kazuyoshi Akiyama. Curry Hicks Cage will be the setting for this very special evening of music, and for their first visit to this area, this internationally acclaimed Orchestra will be heard in works by Berlioz, Prokofiev, Debussy and Franck. Appearing with the Orchestra as a piano soloist, Minoru Nojima will also be paying her first visit to Western Massachusetts.

The second offering in the Celebrity Series will feature the Goldovsky Grand Opera Theatre in a fully-staged production of Verdi's La Triviata (in English). The Council has scheduled the opera for Sunday evening, November 17, in Bowker Auditorium. This Company includes orchestra, chorus and

MacPherson looks to banner year

Coach Dick MacPherson begins his fourth season at the helm of the Minutemen gridiron fortunes and is looking optimistically to what could be a banner year. Co-captains Ed McAleney and Dennis Kiernan head a cast of twenty-seven returning letter-winners and as Spring Drills got underway, a veteran defensive unit appeared to be the forte of the squad. Replacing quarterback Peii Pennington, who rewrote the shcool's passing records during the past three seasons, could be a problem although seniors Fred Kelliher and Mark Tripucka have both moved the team well while lettering during the past two seasons. A more aggressive interior offensive line performance is a must in order to improve last fall's anemic running game and sophomores from the 3-1 frosh unit of a year ago could be the answer. The schedule lists five rugged independent clashes in addition to six Yankee Conference contests and bringing the Bean Pot back to Amherst is the number one priority of the team.

Some coaches would be happy with a 6-5 record at the end of a football season, but MacPherson makes no bones about his disappointment with the Minutemen's gridiron performances of last fall and promises some noticeable improvement this season.

There were a lot of factors that contributed to the demise of the perinnial Yankee Conference Champions a year ago, but, "This is another year," according to MacPherson, "And we intend to bring the Bean Pot back to Amherst where it belongs."

Twenty seven (of forty two) letterwinners return to form the nucleus of this fall's contingent with experience being equally divided between the offensive and defensive platoons. Quarterback Peil Pennington and flanker Tim Berra accounted for more than half (124) of the team's 231 points scored a year ago and two thirds (1900 of 2900) of the yards gained on offense and will be extremely difficult to replace.

On the offensive platoon the strength appears to be at tight end where Gary Mika, Billy Wolfe and Walter Parker all have excelled. Lee Harriman, a junior, is the only letterman at wide receiver but could be an outstanding one as the year develops. There are five lettermen at interior line positions — guards Ned Deane, Don Sokolnicki, John Santoro and Jim Shea, along with center Bruce Pinto, "But since we averaged only 68 yards rushing a game a year ago as these performers lettered, I'm sure all interior line positions are wide open at this time," MacPherson has confided.

The quarterback position is turning into a real dogfight with seniors Fred Kelliher and Mark Tripucka (back after sitting out last year with an injury), both experienced and talented signal callers. The running back will be much improved if Bob Wolfe and Jerry Mondalto stay healthy although the latter missed spring drills to play baseball. Some help will be needed at fullback to back up Jim Torrance since Paul St. Onge will probably be switched back to the defensive line.

An experienced defense appears to be the real strength of the 1974 UMass football squad, however, with a trio of outstanding seasoned performers, end Ed McAleney, linebacker Dennis Kiernan, and cornerback Bob Parrott being, "Worth their weight in gold," according to MacPherson. Tom Bradshaw and Bill Cooke will join McAleney and St. Onge to form an outstanding forward wall and Dave Butterfield, Bill Toner and Doug Adgurson are linebacking lettermen. Parrott and Earl Brown appear to have the inside track at cornerback position and Bob Levine, Steve Wood and Joe Kulis have all defensive secondary game experience.

Andy Dutkanicz, who handled most of the kicking game so effectively a year ago, has graduated and sophomore Gregg Sprout appears capable of taking over the placement chores with a minimum of difficulty but a search is on for a consistent punter. There is a possibility that several members of last fall's 3-1 freshman team could break into the starting lineup on opening day and this group includes center Dave Williamson, guard Russ Cooke, defensive lineman Dennis Fenton, linebacker John Toner, and cornerback Rich Harris.

"This will be the fourth class we have recruited," MacPherson has stated, "And the fruits of our efforts should be evident this fall." The schedule is certainly just as difficult as that of a year ago and with most Yankee Conference teams returning substantial groups of experienced personnel the race for the Bean Pot could be an unpredictable affair. MacPherson has indicated he will use freshmen for the first time if the situation warrants, especially at the skill positions. In a nutshell, it looks as though the Minutemen could be a very fine football team this fall but needed depth must come from the underclassmen and injuries must be minimal as the season unfolds.

"The prime objective of our football team this year is to be as good as we can be," MacPherson told his squad when they finished Spring Drills, "And if we make every effort to exploit our given talents with discipline, personal sacrifices and plenty of hard work, the season will be plenty of fun with an outstanding record the end result."

Approximately twenty five lettermen will form the nucleus of MacPherson's fourth Minuteman squad with the defensive unit being a bit more experienced as six starters return. No radical changes are anticipated in the "Wide Out" offensive look that has produced an average of better than twenty-five points a game for the past two seasons and defensively the 4-3-4 alignment should predominate.

HOW TO USE THIS SCHEDULE

- From SEQUENCE OF STOPS find how many minutes to your stop from Stop No. 1 (e.g., NORTHBOUND, Post Office would be 11 mins.)

- Add this number to the start time for Stop No. 1, on FREQUENCE OF SERVICE section, 7:35 AM. (Post Office would be 7:46 AM).

- Therefore during periods of 10 min. intervals, NORTHBOUND buses would stop at the Post Office 7:46, 7:56, 8:06, etc., until 9:35 when 20 min. interval starts; then buses would stop at 9:46, 10:06, 10:26 . . . etc.

"THE PRISONER"

by E. Patrick McQuaid

The blue and white Facel-Vega came to a screeching hault outside of a large, gray-pillared building known as the State University Office of Admissions. The student stepped from the vehicle and headed for the great brass doors which opened inwardly.

His heels clicked loudly and the resounding echoes followed him down the hallway to the office of the administrators. The doors burst open with a thunderous clap and the man at the desk remained calm as always.

"I am withdrawing; dropping out of the University!"

Before the seated gentleman could get a word in, the student exited in a furious rage. He returned to the auto and drove to his Cambridge apartment.

While packing his bags, for he intended to take a long-needed vacation, a green fume suddenly filled his small bedroom. His vision became hazy and blurred as he sank down upon the mattress. Everything went black...

Slowly his eyes opened and focused on a cubicle shaped room composed entirely of cement blocks. He was lying on a rather uncomfortable bed beside a desk with a bookcase atop it. A bulletin board and a closed wooden cabinet with an attached half-length mirror were the only other furniture present in the room.

He rose slowly and walked to the draped windows, pulling the curtains aside. Of course he did not anticipate seeing his familiar surroundings, but was certainly not prepared for what suddenly appeared before him.

The sun streamed into the room blinding him for a second. He caught his grip on the window ceil and looked out at an immense city of concrete. Huge towers of cement were stretched out for a quarter of a mile; smaller buildings, but of the same design, were also visible. Occasional trees marred his view of smaller but likewise constructed edifices. A small, multi-colored bridge separated the conctete city from one of grass and brick.

Looking into the other sector he could see two collosal towers the likes of which he had never seen. He banged his fist on the window and ran from the room. He found an elevator, but as it didn't work, he hurried down a long set of steps.

Outside he hailed down an orange and white bus reading UMieland on the side. He stepped in.

"Lovely day," said the driver.

The student said nothing but sat down on the empty bus. Without warning the vehicle stopped in front of a large white building, shaped like something from a childhood fantasy; an adult nightmare.

"I don't wish to get off here," he said.

"Sorry, but this is as far as I go, sir," replied the driver politely.

In rage the student jumped from the bus.

"Be seeing you!" exclaimed the driver as he left the stop.

"I don't think so," thought the student and he walked off.

As he slowly approached the white building, the doors opened and a short man dressed in a blue jacket with CC imprinted upon his lapel stepped forward.

"I'm from ARCON, sir. This way please."

The student said nothing but followed his guide. They entered a set of elevators and were rushed up some unknown amount of floors. The machine came to a hault and the student was escorted off.

Before him was a sign reading TOC. He headed for the door. It opened and a large, denim-dressed brute confronted him.

"You gotta card?"

"A card?"

"No card, no deal."

"I'm not here to make a deal."

"Let him in," came a voice from one of the back rooms.

The man opened the doors and allowed the student to enter. Inside he saw a black man of medium height sitting on a small oval chair.

"Come in, come in."

"Where am I?" demanded the student.

"The campus..."

"Who are you?"

You are number 6008893, I am 'The Chancellor'."

"I am not a number...I'm a free man!" he exclaimed with defiance.

"Who's in charge here. Who's responsible?"

"In charge...responsible? That's something we'd all like to know."

"What do you want?"

"Your mind..."

"Well...you won't get it!"

"They all say that at first, but soon you'll be quite happy here. You will submit and everything will work out fine. Everything will be perfect; all you must do is surrender your mind to us..."

"I want to move off campus!"

"Move off campus?..Ha Ha ha ha ha ha!"

The student stormed out of the small chamber and pushed the doorman aside. The Chancellor's voice filled the halls as he exited: "Be seeing you! Catch you later!"

[THE PRISONER is a television series about a man who resigns from the secret service and is abducted to "the village" where everything is perfect provided you surrender your freedom. It is aired in Boston on Friday nights and in Amherst on channel 18.]

many talented young American soloists and is under the personal artistic direction of Boris Goldovsky. This Season will mark the fifteenth cross-country tour for the Goldovsky Grand Opera Theater, the most successful traveling opera company in the United States.

During the second semester, the Israel Chamber Orchestra will make a "first time" appearance at the University as the third attraction on the Celebrity Series. Wednesday evening, February 19, 1975, is the date to hear this outstanding Orchestra, which is under the direction of its founder, Gary Bertini.

Also during the second semester, the Intimate P.D.Q. Bach, with Professor Peter Schickele and the Semi-Pro Musica Antiqua will be offered as the fourth presentation on the Series on Thursday evening, March 20, 1975. For its appearance at the University this group, which has no peer on the American Musical scene, will continue in the tradition of hilarious concert hall humor which has made "An Evening with PDQ Bach" the enormous success it has been with major symphony orchestras for the past seven seasons. Each performance has elicited rave reviews, among them the New York Times" ... PDQ Bach is a master not to be missed."

The final event on the Celebrity Series will be the appearance of the noted violinist, Itzhak Perlman, together with the Springfield Symphony Orchestra and conductor, Robert Cutter, in an April 23, 1975 concert. Mr. Perlman, described in a recent review by the Chicago Tribune as "one of the most commanding talents of our time", will perform Mendelssohn's Concerto in E Minor for Violin and Orchestra and the Springfield Symphony will offer Smetana's Richard III and Prokofiev's Symphony No.5.

All concerts, with the exception of the Japan Philharmonic, will take place in Bowker Auditorium and all Arts Council events commence at 8 p.m.

Season tickets for the Celebrity Series are now on sale and may be obtained by contacting the University of Massachusetts Arts Council Office, 125 Herter Hall, University of Massachusetts, Amherst, 01002 (Tel. 413 545-0202). Tickets for this five-event Series are priced at $7.50 for UMass-Amherst students; $15.00 for the General Public.

"What to look for when buying stereo equipment"

Getting Ready To Buy Equipment

The intense and growing need for music on the part of our generation has inevitably caused "stereos" to become big business, and in the best American tradition the consumer is now dazzled, razzled, and hassled with propaganda. Buying a music system is a major investment, so it calls for some thought and careful shopping. Long before getting down to the nitty gritty of what to buy and where to buy it, you should ask yourself these basic questions:

. How serious are you about music? How much will you listen?

. What source will you listen to most: records, tapes or FM?

. How much can you afford to spend, and how long do you expect to keep the equipment?

. If you already have some preconceived ideas about what you want, how valid are your choices in terms of the above?

It's necessary to spend a minimum of $250 to $300 to acquire a decent, complete music system (AM-FM stereo receiver, two speakers and a changer with magnetic cartridge). The $179.95 super-duper-complete specials seen in most mass-merchandising outlets are usually lacking in performance or serviceability to some major degree. If music component systems are properly chosen, there is a solid relationship between "dollars spent" and "quality of sound received." There is also a similar relationship between "dollars spent" and "how loud the music system will play without audible distortion and breakup." In other words, you can HEAR the difference, meaning from a good store or a good mail order house, you get what you pay for.

However, somewhere around a price tag of $1,300 to $1,500 these relationships fall off sharply. After that point, you can spend hundreds more and receive very little additional in terms of overall performance, especially at normal listening volumes.

Start your shopping in the yellow pages. Get a good idea of the dealers in your area, and be prepared to travel, if needed. Start with the larger dealers, who carry all the major brands, such as Pioneer, Marantz, Sony, Harman-Kardon, Dual, Garrard, TEAC, JBL, Altec, KLH, AR, Advent, etc. In this way you can do the most comparing. After that, find a salesman you can relate to: one who will patiently answer all your questions; who is interested in you. Ask him what kind of equipment he owns and what kind of music he likes. Listen carefully, and you can soon tell if he knows what he's talking about. A knowledgeable and friendly salesman will be your best ally, especially if you take the time to know him a little. These salesmen are usually young, usually found in true stereo component shops, and are rarely in mass-merchandising outlets. Let the salesman know you're serous about buying, but also let him know you are aware of the other stores in the area.

Choosing Equipment:

Mechanical and electronic devices such as turntables, tape decks, receivers, amps and tuners can be measured very accurately and therefor, are relatively easy to compare. The glossary with this article has some basic terms you'll need to know, and your befriended salesman can explain the confusing games some manufacturers may play in listing specifications and features of their products. Speakers, on the other hand, are a differen animal. While the receiver and changer (or tape deck) are essential parts, the speakers really make it happen, and, really, they can only be judged subjectively.

There are several publications which can be of help to beginning audio buffs. They include Pioneer's Understanding Hi-Fi,Irving Green's book, The Practical Handbook of Stereo & Quad, and the Warehouse Sound Co. catalog. Stereo Review's annual Stereo ectory Buying Guide (available at newsstands) is good for a simple listing of current equipment.

The Equipment Itself:

There is more truly good equipment on the market today than ever before. It is impossible to generalize about which brand is better; You really have to compare manufacturers model for model. However, we can make general recommendations regarding the very best manufaturers. For amps, tuners and receivers in the popular price ranges Pioneer, Marantz, Sony or Sherwood are excellent choices.

The amount of power (measured in watts) you need in your amp or receiver largely depends on the efficiency (see basic terms list) of the speakers you wish to buy, the number of speakers you want to hook up (now or in the future) and how loud you want to listen. This is an important facet in choosing your system and is one of the main points to cover, again, with your befriended salesman. As for the reel-to-reel and cassette decks: TEAC, Sony-Superscope, Tandberg and Revox make outstanding machines. Garrard and Dual are our favorites in the record changer business. BSR also makes some good units. Pioneer, Sony and Thorens make excellent turntables, although the Thorens is more expensive. There is an abundance of good speakers, and they include Bose, Altec, JBL, Advert, AR, Dynaco, Electro-Voice, EPI, KLH, Marantz, Pioneer, ESS and Infinity to name some of the most popular. There are of course other companies which produce fine components. The above merely represent the most popular nationally distributed brands which we feel are both superior and easily serviced.

One part of the system that is often overlooked, but is just as important as the others, is the phono cartridge. The cartridge picks the sound up off the record and sends it out as a tiny electrical signal to your pre-amplifier. The amplifier can reproduce no better signal than it receives and neither can the speakers. Preferably, you should have an elliptical cartridge. You can't go wrong with medium-priced Shure, Pickering or Stanton, especially if it complements the sound of the speakers.

A final "component" could be stereo headphones. Headphones, properly called "Stereophones," are the most economical way to hear your favorite music, soft or loud; and they can give good fidelity. You can purchase a top-notch pair for around $40. It's an especially good investment if your roommate doesn't get off on your tunes as loud or as often as you do. As for the best units-try Sennheiser HD 414 (about $35), Koss 727B (about $28) or Superex ST PRO-B V (about $50). You can purchase sterophones for much less (or more) than these but the difference between a pair of $20 and $35 sterophones is generally very noticeable, so you might do better to save, and wait.

Stereo Versus Four-Channel

Four-channel sound is now practical and can greatly broaden the potential for musical enjoyment. Discrete four-channel means that there are four separate and "discrete" signals which originate from four separate recordings, and each is played back simultaneously through four different speakers. Instead of mixing 12 or 16 track recordings down to two tracks (stereo), they are mixed down to four separate tracks. The less the recording is mixed down, the more it sounds like the original recording studio session. Discrete four-channel sounds fantastic, but the major area of new development has been in several different types of "synthesized-four-channel sound."

Manufacturers have developed new four-channel electronic equipment which is capable of reproducing "four-channel-sound" with the use of normal stereo records, or even better, the new quad records. The diverse methods of electronically achieving four-channel-sound accounts for the confusing terminology (if you have been reading the advertising). At this point in time, manufacturers have not yet agreed however, and you may well want to buy your music system with plans of eventually building to four-channel at a later date. Stereo, however, will remain the most popular form for some time to come; also remember that a good stereo music system costs considerably less than the equivalent four-channel system.

Bargains and Otherwise

You'll quickly find that the "pricing" of stereo equipment is confusing and inconsistent. To start with, different types of stereo equipment are inconsistent in terms of markup. For instance, stereo cartridges, headphones, accessories and recording tape generally have a tremendously high markup included in the manufacturers' suggested retail price. So therefore, merchants typically discount sterephones at least 20 percent, recording tape and accessories 20 to 30 percent and stereo cartridges 30 to 50 percent. In contrast, tape decks of all types are marked up very little, so are discounted very slightly if at all. Receivers, amps and tuners are reasonably marked up so they are only mildly discounted. Record playing equipment is healthy in markup; you should expect at least to receive a good free cartridge when you purchase any changer or turntable. Most stereo outlets are geared to sell complete music systems, and you can genuinely get the best deal if you buy a complete system at one time.

The above markup rules apply to most name-brand stereo equipment. However, to add to the confusion, there are two other categories of stereo equipment pricing:

1. Fair-Traded equipment: This means that the company has applied to the government for permission to "fair-trade" its products. A dealer must then sign a "franchise" in which he agrees to maintain the company's preset fair-traded price on every component. However this does not mean that the prices are rip-offs. On the contrary, most fair-traded equipment is of the highest quality and is well worth the price. Components by such companies as Pioneer, Revox and TEAC are prime examples. Nonetheless, when fair-traded equipment is packaged in a music system together with no-fair-traded equipment the law has virtually no effect, since the dealer can then adjust the overall price to suit his own profit margins.

2. Private label or house-brand equipment: Products which are not nationally advertised nor available to all dealers usually reflect the this equipment is generally "as much as the traffic will bear." Trying to compare the claimed "specifications" and "list prices" of house-brand merchandise with name brand equipment is at best difficult.

This applies particularly in the case of speakers. Many stereo shops now have "house-brand" or "private-label" speakers found only at their particular store. These speakers often come from small garage-type operations of furniture manufacturers, and nearly always fall short in terms of sound quality and professional engineering. Since there is no competetive pricing on these speakers, the "list price" or "regular price" reflects a profit margin that is two or three times higher than that of an equivalently priced name-brand speaker. This enables the retailer to quote "super-discounts," but the consumer may end up paying $100 for a "$200" speaker which is actually worth only $50. We suggest sticking to professional name-brand equipment. When shopping by price, it's not very meaningful to compare a $50 savings on a name-brand speaker to a $50 "reduction" on the "list price" of a house-brand speaker.

Some dealers make a living selling discontinued closeout merchandise, but here again watch your step. Some products are discontinued because they're inherently unreliable or were poorly designed. These turkeys inevitability cause misery, regardless of "the price." However, some products are discontinued solely for cosmetic reasons or merely because it's "time" for a model change. If you're familiar with the various component lines and models, it is possible to get truly fine components at substantial savings. These legitimate values are found at most stores; but be suspicious of any outlet which features an abundance of "bargains" because there are only a very limited amount of good closeouts available at any given time. The worst rape of the consumer (and it happens all the time) comes when a dealer throws two even three turkey closeouts together regardless of compatibility and calls it a music system.

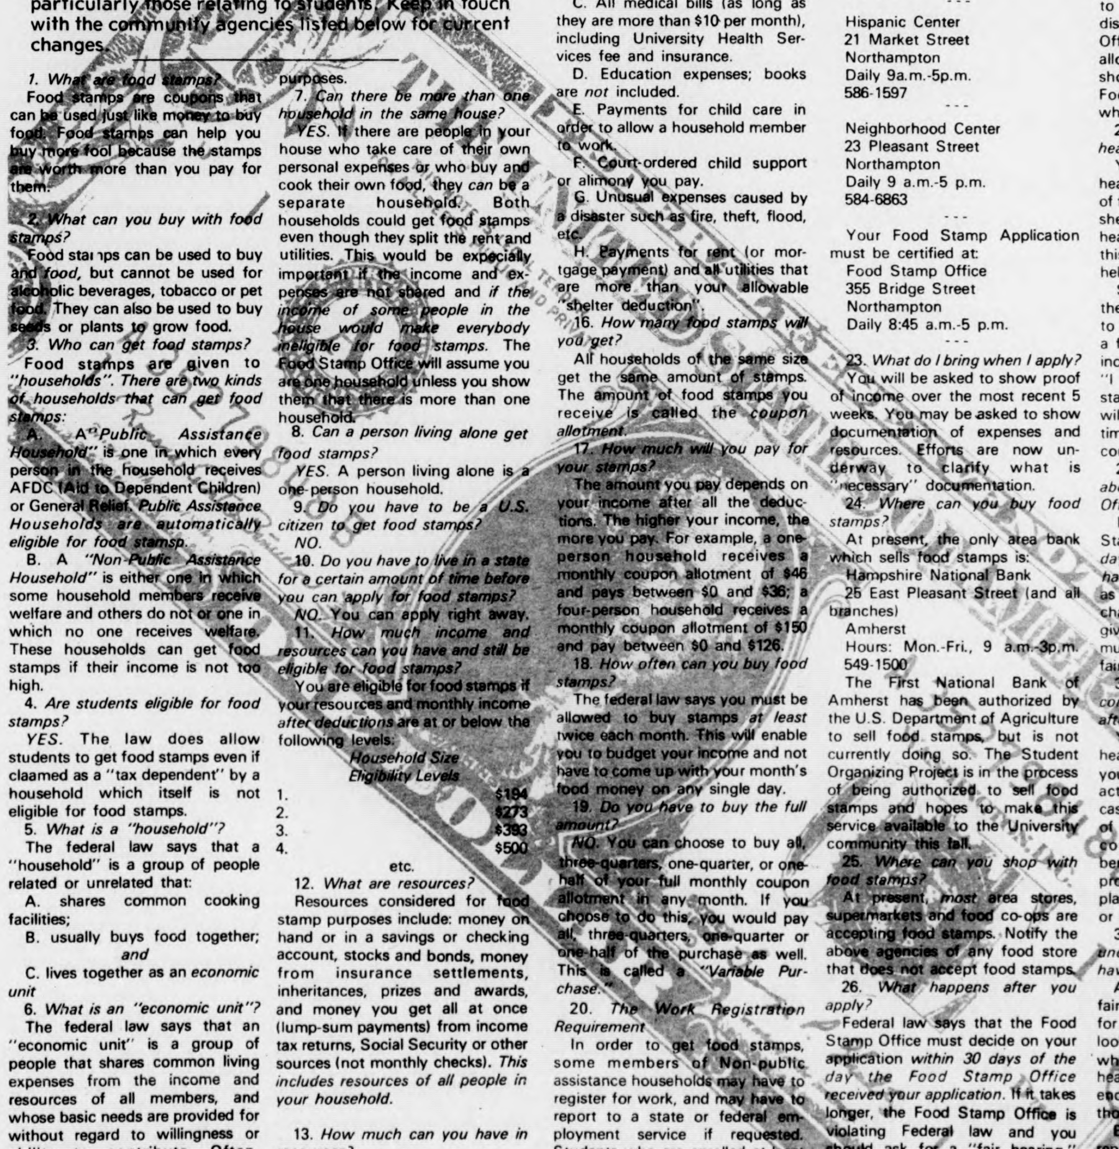
S-T-R-E-T-C-H-I-N-G Your Food Dollar

31 things you should know about Food Stamps

by Anne Robinson and Jane Holappa

The new Food Stamp Program went into effect across the country on July 1. More people are eligible for food stamps now than ever before because eligibility standards are higher and are based on net income. The benefits to eligible households are higher, too, and that means more food buying power. Food stamps S-T-R-E-T-C-H your food dollar.

Take a few minutes and read the information below. Many of the regulations are being clarified, particularly those relating to students. Keep in touch with the community agencies listed below for current changes.



1. What are food stamps?

Food stamps are coupons that can be used just like money to buy food. Food stamps can help you buy more fool because the stamps are worth more than you pay for them.

2. What can you buy with food stamps?

Food stamps can be used to buy and food, but cannot be used for alcoholic beverages, tobacco or pet food. They can also be used to buy seeds or plants to grow food.

3. Who can get food stamps?

Food stamps are given to "households". There are two kinds of households that can get food stamps:

A. A "Public Assistance Household" is one in which every person in the household receives AFDC (Aid to Dependent Children) or General Relief. Public Assistance Households are automatically eligible for food stamsp.

B. A "Non-Public Assistance Household" is either one in which some household members receive welfare and others do not or one in which no one receives welfare. These households can get food stamps if their income is not too high.

4. Are students eligible for food stamps?

YES. The law does allow students to get food stamps even if claamed as a "tax dependent" by a household which itself is not eligible for food stamps.

5. What is a "household"?

The federal law says that a "household" is a group of people related or unrelated that:

A. shares common cooking facilities;

B. usually buys food together; and

C. lives together as an economic unit

6. What is an "economic unit"?

The federal law says that an "economic unit" is a group of people that shares common living expenses from the income and resources of all members, and whose basic needs are provided for without regard to willingness or ability to contribute. Often, however, everybody in the house does not contribute to all basic expenses, so it is sometimes important to a group of people in the house to be a separate "household" for food stamp purposes.

7. Can there be more than one household in the same house?

YES. If there are people in your house who take care of their own personal expenses or who buy and cook their own food, they can be a separate household. Both households could get food stamps even though they split the rent and utilities. This would be expecially important if the income and expenses are not shared and if the income of some people in the house would make everybody ineligible for food stamps. The Food Stamp Office will assume you are one household unless you show them that there is more than one household.

8. Can a person living alone get food stamps?

YES. A person living alone is a one-person household.

9. Do you have to be a U.S. citizen to get food stamps?

NO.

10. Do you have to live in a state for a certain amount of time before you can apply for food stamps?

NO. You can apply right away.

11. How much income and resources can you have and still be eligible for food stamps?

You are eligible for food stamps if your resources and monthly income after deductions are at or below the following levels:

Household Size	Eligibility Levels
1.	$194
2.	$273
3.	$393
4.	$500
etc.

12. What are resources?

Resources considered for food stamp purposes include: money on hand or in a savings or checking account, stocks and bonds, money from insurance settlements, inheritances, prizes and awards, and money you get all at once (lump-sum payments) from income tax returns, Social Security or other sources (not monthly checks). This includes resources of all people in your household.

13. How much can you have in resources?

Non-public assistance households can be eligible for food stamps if they have resources of less than $1,500. It does not matter how many people are in the household. Remember: Public assistance households are automatically eligible.

14. What is income?

All wages, salary, and tips are counted as income. Also included as income are any contributions from parents, cash gifts or awards, and the following forms of Financial Aid: scholarships, grants (including loans for which payment is deferred until education is complete), fellowships and veterans educational benefits. Such income will be pro-rated over the period which it is intended to cover.

15. What deductions can you take from income?

You can subtract these deductions from your income:

A. Ten per cent (10 per cent) of the pay from working or a work training program. This deduction cannot be higher than $30 a month.

B. Payroll deductions for local, state, and federal taxes, and union dues.

C. All medical bills (as long as they are more than $10 per month), including University Health Services fee and insurance.

D. Education expenses; books are not included.

E. Payments for child care in order to allow a household member to work.

F. Court-ordered child support or alimony you pay.

G. Unusual expenses caused by a disaster such as fire, theft, flood, etc.

H. Payments for rent (or mortgage payment) and all utilities that are more than your allowable "shelter deduction".

16. How many food stamps will you get?

All households of the same size get the same amount of stamps. The amount of food stamps you receive is called the coupon allotment.

17. How much will you pay for your stamps?

The amount you pay depends on your income after all the deductions. The higher your income, the more you pay. For example, a one-person household receives a monthly coupon allotment of $46 and pays between $0 and $36; a four-person household receives a monthly coupon allotment of $150 and pay between $0 and $126.

18. How often can you buy food stamps?

The federal law says you must be allowed to buy stamps at least twice each month. This will enable you to budget your income and not have to come up with your month's food money on any single day.

19. Do you have to buy the full amount?

NO. You can choose to buy all, three-quarters, one-quarter, or one-half of your full monthly coupon allotment in any month. If you choose to do this, you would pay all, three-quarters, one-quarter or one-half of the purchase as well. This is called a "Variable Purchase."

20. The Work Registration Requirement

In order to get food stamps, some members of Non-public assistance households may have to register for work, and may have to report to a state or federal employment service if requested. Students who are enrolled at least half-time (as defined by the University) do not have to register for work.

21. How long will you remain on the food stamp program?

Federal law says that once you apply for food stamps you will remain eligible for a certain number of months (called the "certification period"). The certification period varies from one month to one year, but most households will be certified for three (3) months. You should try to be certified for as long a period of time as possible.

22. Where do you apply?

23. What do I bring when I apply?

You will be asked to show proof of income over the most recent 5 weeks. You may be asked to show documentation of expenses and resources. Efforts are now underway to clarify what is "necessary" documentation.

24. Where can you buy food stamps?

At present, the only area bank which sells food stamps is:

Hampshire National Bank
25 East Pleasant Street (and all branches)
Amherst
Hours: Mon.-Fri., 9 a.m.-3p.m.
549-1500

The First National Bank of Amherst has been authorized by the U.S. Department of Agriculture to sell food stamps, but is not currently doing so. The Student Organizing Project is in the process of being authorized to sell food stamps and hopes to make this service available to the University community this fall.

25. Where can you shop with food stamps?

At present, most area stores, supermarkets and food co-ops are accepting food stamps. Notify the above agencies of any food store that does not accept food stamps.

26. What happens after you apply?

Federal law says that the Food Stamp Office must decide on your application within 30 days of the day the Food Stamp Office received your application. If it takes longer, the Food Stamp Office is violating Federal law and you should ask for a "fair hearing." Contact a community agency for assistance when applying for a fair hearing.

If you are found to be eligible, you will either be given or mailed an identification card. Each month you will receive an "Authorization-to-Purchase Card" (ATP Card). The ATP Card will show how many stamps you are entitled to and how much you should pay.

27. What is a fair hearing?

A fair hearing is the way to appeal any action taken by the Food Stamp Office that is harmful to you. You always have the right to a fair hearing whenever you disagree with any Food Stamp Office action. The fair hearing allows you to tell your story, and to show why the action taken by the Food Stamp Office was wrong and why it sould be changed.

28. How do you ask for a fair hearing?

You should always ask for a fair hearing in writing. Either the head of the household, or someone he or she appoints can ask for the fair hearing. If you have trouble doing this, the Food Stamp Office must help you.

Send your fair hearing request to the Food Stamp Office. It only has to be a statement saying you want a fair hearing. (For example, "My income was figured incorrectly" or "I was wrongly denied food stamps".) The Food Stamp Office will arrange the hearing, but the time, date and place must be convenient for you.

29. You have the right to be told about any action the Food Stamp Office plans to take against you.

Federal law says that the Food Stamp Office must notify you 15 days before it plans to take any harmful action against you. (Such as not giving you food stamps or charging you more). They must give you reasons for the action, and must inform you of your right to a fair hearing.

30. 'You have the right to continue receiving food stamps after you appeal.

You can appeal (ask for a fair hearing) usually up to 30 days after you've been notified of a planned action against you. But in most cases, if you appeal within 15 days of the notice you have a right to continue receiving the same benefits until the fair hearing process decides whether or not the planned action against you is right or wrong.

31. You have important right under the fair hearing process. You have the right:

A. To adequately prepare for the fair hearing. This means the right for you or your representative to look at all documents and records which might be used at the hearing. This also means giving you enough time to review them thoroughly.

B. To have someone with you to represent you at the fair hearing (a lawyer, friend or anyone you choose).

C. To bring witnesses to support your arguments.

D. To ask questions of any witnesses used by the Food Stamp Office, or of anyone else.

E. To present arguments or evidence to support you and to reply to the Food Stamp Office's arguments.

F. To a final decision on your fair hearing within 60 days from the date you requested the hearing.

A little bit about life in FRATERNITIES & SORORITIES

The first fraternity at UMass was established over 105 years ago. Six members of what was then Massachusetts Agricultural College first graduating class founded the first fraternal organization on campus in a ceremony at South College--then a new dormitory-study hall.

The year was 1869. The first fraternity was then known as Q.T.V. Today Q.T.V., along with 23 other fraternal organizations, compose the UMass Greek System. The 15 fraternities and 9 sororities on this campus offer a lifestyle which continue to attract large numbers of undergraduates, for it has truly proven to be an alternative lifestyle that has been able to adapt and evolve through 105 years of changing attitudes and beliefs.

Thousands of previous students at Massachusetts Agricultural College, Massachusetts State College and the University of Massachusetts have experienced and benefited from membership in a sorority or fraternity.

HOUSING

The 15 fraternities and 9 sororities on campus providing living and dining facilities for their members, Live-in capacity ranges from 15 to 60 people with dining facilities able to accommodate all members. Although there is no Greek Row as such, many of the chapter houses are located along or near North Pleasant Street.

Other chapter houses are situated near Southwest Residential Complex, across from the Central and Northeast Residential areas and off East Pleasant Street. Three houses are located in Fraternity-Sorority Park which is located near Orchard Hill and off East Pleasant Street.

Like the rest of the campus, the architecture of the fraternity and sorority house depicts deep contrasts in style. Some houses have been converted into Greek Residence units from what use to be private homes. Others were built from start and represent architectural styling of their respective eras. You can find the resemblance to a private home, the more traditional fraternity structure or houses that were constructed in contemporary design.

The rooms in the fraternity and sorority houses are generally larger than those found in the University Residence Halls, both old and new. Although most of the rooms were constructed for double occupancy, there are some chapters which have single rooms available.

Each chapter generally has a living roon, kitchen, dining room, television room and restroom facilities. Many of them have social facilities, study rooms or libraries, recreational rooms and a variety of other facilities contingent on house needs and space. Every house has its own private parking facilities for its members.

Food, an item of major concern to many students, can be generally rated good to excellent in the Fraternities and Sororities. A 21-meal plan, along with kitchen or snack privileges, is offered by almost every chapter. Each house has its own private cook. Students who live in the residence halls but who decide to become fraternity or sorority members may transfer their dining commons meal tickets to a fraternity or sorority once they decide to pledge.

The good food, small group living atmosphere comradie, good times and adverse times, autonomy and a great degree of control offer the University student a place he or she can really call a home.

BECOMING A MEMBER

During the first few weeks of September, fraternities and sororities will begin their membership recruitment period. Known more familiarly as "Rush" all newly entering students and upperclassmen will have the opportunity to visit the fraternities and sororities. These visits will provide you with the opportunity of meeting the people in the chapter. It also provides you with a chance to ask any specific questions that you might have regarding finances, pledge programs, membership responsibilities, social activities and academic offerings.

Rush for each chapter lasts for approximately a 1-or 2-week period in September, with several rush events being held on the evenings of each week. Rush events are informal. Ordinarily many chapters will host rush parties on the same evenings. This allows you as a prospective member the opportunity to visit several chapters.

An orientation meeting for all people interested in fraternity-sorority membership will be held Sunday, September 8 at 7:30 p.m. in Room 101 in the basement of the Campus Center. People interested in Rush should attend this informal session. Announcements about rush dates and times will be given out at this time. Rushing events will also be publicized in the DAILY COLLEGIAN and on WMUA, the campus radio station.

At the end of the Rush Period you will be extended a bid. This bid is your invitation by a Fraternity or Sorority to become a pledge, or a member on a trial bases. This trial period enables you to get to know the other members of the chapter and especially those people who have chosen to become members along with you.

Pledging is a time for you to learn about the chapter and its programs and to adjust to the Greek lifestyle. The average pledge period lasts between 8 to 12 weeks. At the end of this time you are initiated into a chapter with full voting rights and responsibilities.

ESTIMATED EXPENSES

The student interested in fraternity or sorority living may expect to spend an average of $100 to $150 dollars more per semester than the cost of living in a University residence hall. The first year of membership is generally more expensive than successive years due to pledge and initiation fees.

The added cost of Greek membership tends to average out when you consider the addition of 6 more meals per week and added kitchen privileges which are not available under the 10- and 15-meal plan presently offered by the University. The large number of social activities sponsored by the individual chapters also is added into the cost.

ACADEMICS

The Greek Residential Area has developed an academic program centered around one-credit colloquia. These colloquia are offered on week nights and are held in the various fraternity and sorority chapters. Previous colloquia have been sponsored in Sign Language, Food Preparation, Table Tennis, Dynamics of Racism, World Food Outlook, Women and Their Bodies and Computers and their Language.

The Academic Affairs Committee of the Greek Council, the Greek Area Government, this year will be sponsoring a Peer-Sex Education Program for the area along with a number of new colloquia. Throughout the year the Greek Residential Area also lends financial support on a cooperative basis for special programming. This year the Greek Area was a co-sponsor of the Cell Block Theater Program.

Another one of the cultural features of the UMass fraternity-sorority system is the sponsorship of special programs on an individual chapter basis throughout the year. This type of programming may include speakers or panel discussions on topics which are of interest to the particular chapter.

SOCIAL ACTIVITIES

The individual chapters along with support from the Greek Council Activities Committee provide the members of the Greek Area with an active and comprehensive Social Program. Fraternities sponsor a number of weekend band parties, exchanges with sororities and residence halls as well as open houses which are usually open to all University students.

Every chapter annually sponsors their special theme parties such as "Greaser Nights", "Farmers Frolic", "Oldies Night", "St. Patrick's Day Celebration" and others along with the annual house formals. Special events are usually sponsored during Homecoming weekend and Winter Carnival for the benefit of both Undergraduate and Alumni. Parents and relatives are also included in the programming with such events as "Dad's Days", Mother's Day activities and a number of open houses which are held periodically throughout the year.

The Activities Committee of the Greek Council is responsible for setting up a calendar of social events which are open to all members during the year. Sponsorship of Homecoming Events, an all-Greek Christmas party and Winter Carnival Snow Sculpture Competition are just a few of the activities that are planned by the committee.

The major project, however, is Greek Week. Greek Week has become an annual event in the Greek Area and is usually held in the spring. This past year each fraternity and sorority was responsible for individual sponsorship of an event.

Oldies' Night, Schlitzarama, a dance marathon for Muscular Dystrophy, the Greek Olympics, and all Greek Athletic Competition, a Block Party and a marathon run from the state capital to Whitmore were a few of the 20 different activities which composed Greek Week 1974.

These social activities offer the undergraduate a great opportunity to meet new people and to expand campus contacts.

GREEKS ARE ACTIVE

For years, Greeks have been a major contributing force to active participation in campus organizations and activities.

ARCON--the University Guide Service was founded and is financially supported by the Greek Area. This organization over the years has provided a valuable service to the University by giving tours on a daily-basis to prospective students, parents and a number of campus visitors.

Greeks can also be found on the staff or all major University media such as INDEX (the University Yearbook), the DAILY COLLEGIAN, SPECTRUM (the campus literary magazine) and WMUA (the campus radio station).

Volunteer Programs have also received many Greeks into their membership along with the University Student Government and its subcommittees as well as the Residential Area Governments.

Many Greeks are varsity athletes both men and women who represent the University in basketball, football, gymnastics, swimming, lacrosse, field hockey, track, ice hockey, soccer, softball, tennis, baseball, rugby and golf.

Traditionally the members of the Greek Area have proven their interest in the University by active participation in University affairs beyond graduation. It is this interest in the campus which makes the Greek Area the most active residential area at the University.

GREEKS ARE PHILANTHROPIC

Over the past few years the UMass Greek System has raised thousands of dollars for various charities and philanthropic endeavors. The Greek Area is the only residential area on campus which participates in fund-raising activities to this extent.

The Muscular Dystrophy Dance Marathon and the annual running marathon for the March of Dimes from the state capital to Haigis Mall have been very successful with over $10,000 being raised for those charities in the past two years.

The Sigma Alpha Mu "Bounce for Beats" and "Water Dunking" have also provided funds for the Heart Fund.

The Spring Cancer Crusade and Christmas and Halloween parties for underprivileged children have also found a permanent place in fraternity-sorority programming.

Many of the individual chapters take part in other philanthropies such as financial support for hospitals, orphanages, childrens' homes and schools located in other countries.

INTRAMURALS

Group participation and the spirit of the fraternity or sorority are quite visible in the extensive participation of the Greeks in virtually all campus intramural sports. Every chapter encourages not only individual but team participation. Over the years the Greek Area has won many campus championships in various sports; however, the most noticeable aspect of Greek participation is the fact that even those who are not playing for the chapter lend their active support as fans. This show of unity is an element of competition relatively unique to the fraternities and sororities.

NATIONAL AFFILIATION

Nineteen of the 24 fraternities and sororities on the UMass campus are local affiliates of national organizations. National fraternities and sororities supplement many of the programs that are offered by the individual chapters.

Many nationals offer scholarships and loans which are made available to any member of a local affiliate. This financial assistance along with leadership workshops and institutes, chapter consultant services, resources for officer training and other special programs designed for solving individual problems are all a part of the national organization service orientation.

One very unique feature about belonging to a national fraternity or sorority is the fact that if you happen to move to other parts of the country you can stay at the member chapters on other campuses.

Any student wishing to obtain additional information about Rush or the Greek System is invited to come to the Greek Affairs Office in Room 236 Whitmore Hall across from the University Housing Office or by calling 545-2711 and are invited to attend the Greek Rush Orientation on Sunday, September 8, at 7:30 in Campus Center Room 101.

HANG GLIDING

by Hank
Herschel

"If the Gods Had Meant That We Remain Earthbound, They Would Have Given Us Roots ..."

By this time just about everyone has seen someone 'sky surfing' or 'hang gliding' as it is more commonly called: the usual initial expletive from the onlooker being something to the effect, "Oh Wow, Gosh, Golly, I'd really like to try that," or most often "Jees dat looks like lotsa fun."

This article, then, will serve as a brief introduction to the fast growing and beautiful sport of hang gliding. Better than 90 per cent of the hang gliders seen today are of the "Rogallo Wing" type, (this is the type that you have probably already seen in the Schaefer Beer commercial, Sports Illustrated, on TV, or any other of hundreds of places). The Rogallo hang glider is a balance of simplicity, incredible durability, low cost, and most important, very forgiving flight characteristics. It is ironic to note that the original "Rogallo Wing" was developed by Dr. Francis Rogallo of NASA as a possible steerable re-entry device for a multi-ton spacecraft after its penetration of the earth's atmosphere. The "Rogallo Wing", it was believed, would be of far greater benefit to the safe return of the spacecraft than the three reliable, but essentially non-steerable, parachutes commonly employed. While forty million dollars were spent on the project, NASA never did use it on any major programs.

But that is not the end of our story for after the NASA study was published some knowledgeable freaks in California with engineering backgrounds made a few miniature versions of the 'revolutionary' airfoil with hippies as a payload rather than a gargantuan spacecraft. And lo, the ancient sport of hang gliding was reborn. It has been nearly ten years since those first crudely constructed craft appeared on the beaches and dunes of California and while the hippies may have cut their hair and gone in to peddling life insurance, the Rogallo hang glider will be with us as long as old Beatle records. Hang gliding, it should be mentioned, is non-polluting and can be done year round on snow, sand, grass, or rocky ledges. It's also cheap, for once you have invested an initial six hundred dollars for the ship, she is yours forever and should last until long after you hang gliding days are over.

It has been the dream of nearly every kid at one time or another to fly like a bird or like Superman and, at last, nearly everyone who can walk and chew gum at the same time can realize his childhood fantasy all thanks to a few free flying freaks, one very gifted NASA scientist, and forty million bucks.

Flying a Rogallo Hang Glider ...

Hang gliding is to snow skiing as shooting the curl at Waikki Ki is to skateboarding.

It is difficult, even for an experienced hang glider pilot, to describe the thrill of elemental flight but, let me tell you, it's a real rush. You might say it's kind of a natural high. It is, in all sincereity, a most incredible feeling to come floating down the side of a rugged mountain with but the thunder of your heart and rush of wind in your ear and being so elated that tears come to your eyes. At first, though, while still learning to fly, elation is usually precluded by plain fear; but this is only temporary, for as one develops his airborn skill and ventures higher and higher, a confidence builds in one's craft and one's abilities. It is not long before the aforementioned ecstasy displaces earlier trepidation.

Learning to fly a Rogallo should be done slowly and carefully. The first step for the neophyte is to become completely familiar with how and why his ship works as it does. The platform (looking at the kite from above) of a Rogallo resembles the Greek letter delta with the apex of the kite being split longitudinally by a keel member. The pilot is suspended from the center of gravity by a harness and affects control of the craft by simply shifting his weight relative to a fixed control bar directly in front of him. Thus if flying straight and level and a descent to the left is desired, one has to merely shift his weight forward and to the left and the desired descending turn is effected. This, you will remember, is exactly how Superman used to fly. Moreover, most harnesses allow the pilot to fly either in the sitting or prone position (again, a la Superman).

Unlike in Air Force flight school, one does not learn to first master straight and level flight, for hang gliding is by definition a solo sport. So before you work on your straight and level technique, learning to take off is a prerequisite.

First, find a suitable unobstructed 12 degree or better slope (the dunes on the Cape are great for this), unpack your kite, don harness and helmet — (when learning to fly a helmet is de rigeur) — and you're ready. Also don't be alarmed if you're a bit nervous at this moment in time. Like skiing, it surely helps both confidence and technique to have an experienced instructor to bolster both confidence and technique at your side (this is how Jonathan Livingston Seagull finally learned to fly like a sonofabitch). A slight headwind also helps, but is not a prerequisite; a tailwind makes your take off run a lot longer and sometimes results in your running to the very bottom of the hill like some angry outsized moth. But hang glider pilots can always take a joke; remember that always when you fly.

With the shop's control bar resting on your shoulders, lean slightly forward with the nose slightly raised. Nose angle on the initial take off run is critical — too high and you can't run fast enough to get airborn — too low and you nose her in before take off. It just takes practice. Now you are ready for your take off run, and it is exactly that. You have to run as fast as you possibly can with the thirty-nine pound kite upon your shoulders keeping the nose up at the same time. Much to your amazement, you will find that after a few steps, the kite is supporting its own weight and is doggedly pulling you skyward. Don't stop running now! Run, run, run, you crazy fool! If at this point you feel you are running as fast as you can, and you should be close to that maximum, gently push forward on the control bar and Shazam! you will find your feet leaving the ground. At this point the neophyte has a tendency to often become somewhat discontenent seeing the earth dropping away, but just keep your head together and remember that this is what we are trying to do in the first place. Once airborn, pull back on the control bar a bit to lower the nose slightly, and build up a little airspeed. You should be trucking down the slope at the amazing speed of 18-24 knots; that's about as fast as a seagull can fly after swallowing a mackeral whole.

If the kite is trimmed up correctly, you should actually be able to let go of the control bar and fly 'hands-off' until it's time for landing. Your first landing will probably be less than graceful, but if you are aware of what to expect and what to do, it should not be too difficult. As you approach the bottom of the hill, gently push the control bar forward so that you don't run out of hill and crash and burn into the sand. What is desirable at this point, then, is to skim the ground at an altitude of two to five feet, and as the air speed bleeds off, keep the altitude constant until the wing stops flying. If done properly you will land standing up as gently as a leaf falling to earth. At this time it is common to yell, scream, chortle, or, as in my case, at the culmination of my first momentous flight, give the old "Hell, girls, that was nothing. I do this all the time."

At the end of each flight it is well to sit and reflect on what one did right and more important what one did wrong from beginning to end. After a few dozen such reflections, flight control becomes more and more instinctive and presently one is ready to soar with the eagles. Let me add at this point that only the major techniques of learning to hang glide have been touched upon and there are a great many other facets of the learning process which must be demonstrated on an actual aircraft.

Hank Hirschel is a graduate of UMass and Amherst College where he majored in Classical Latin. He was graduated in June of 1970.

After being inducted into the USAF and entering flight school, Mr. Hirschel nearly met his untimely demise due to an imprudent solo final approach in a rather expensive government jet trainer. He resigned his commission in 1971, and is now the president of Bo Wing Aircraft, manufacturers of fine quality Rogallo hang gliders.

When his schedule permits, he teaches hang gliding to those interested. Further inquiry as to lessons or purchase of a Rogallo may be addressed to: Bo-Wing Aircraft, Box 454, Amherst, Mass. 01002.

SLOW FLIGHT

I have soared with the falcon — dived and climbed with the gull
And flown the crystal sky with but the thunder of my heart and rush of wind in my ear.
From that lofty precipice with a peaceful smile and bubbling laughter
I have watched the earth slip beneath my gentle craft
And for those brief moments the heavens and I were as one.

Need a typewriter?

The 4 a.m. hassle...typing your term paper with the only thing you can find...a fossil, or more explicitly, your roommate's mother's typewriter. Every five letters this little dynamite of a machine forgets its profession and skips two spaces.

A typewriter is practically a college necessity-and should be selected carefully. It does not have to be an older model to have mechanical problems.

The following is a list of features to check for in any typewriter:

Character alignment. Type the following letters and check to be sure the lines are distinctly parallel lines: HF, HF, ID, ID, MN, MN.

Character legibility. Are the letters c, m, o, e, g and r easy on the eye?

Frequently missing characters. Check for such characters as the number 1, the exclamation point, the plus sign, and the equal sign. If you're a math major these are necessities, not luxuries.

Touch control. Check the range of adjustment; can the typewriter be set for your personal touch?

A smooth carriage return (electrics only).

A removable platen for easy cleaning or a hinged paper meter that can be lifted away from the platen to permit cleaning.

A transparent paper meter for quick realignment of letters.

A copy control mechanism to adjust the type force when making carbon copies.

Automatic ribbon reverse.

Carrying case.

Adequate carriage size (about 10 inches).

Fully adjustable tab stops and a half spacing key.

If you enjoy the outdoors . . .

In recent years, mountaineering, cross-country skiing, canoeing, techincal rock climbing, camping, and outdoor activites of every sort have undergone a surge in popularity. In our impressive outdoor arenas such as the White Mountains and Mount Katahdin, thousands throng where formerly dozens picked their way. Vendors of down parkas and lightweight packframes have sprung up on every corner. New techniques in climbing and "ultimate" specialized equipment are developed and become obsolete as quickly as Pentagon weaponry. Through it all, conservationists, once a small cadre, have viewed with dismay the over-exploitation of our outdoor resources.

As a result of these changing circumstances, the UMass Outing Club has suffered growing pains. While becoming the largest and most active club on campus, it has recognized the need to temper enthusiasm for the outdoors with a feeling of restraint, a reverence for the delicacy of the wilderness.

The 1974 - 75 school year promises to see the Outing Club approaching this double function. In its effort to bring people together out of doors it offers trips an a full range of activities: hiking, kayaking, cave esploring, mountaineering, traying, rock climbing, cross country skiing, canoeing, partying, snowshoeing. Most trips are oriented for the inexperienced, and everyone is welcome to go on a trip regardless of membership status.

All upcoming trips are posted on the Outing Club bulletin board and are generally mentioned in Collegian "Notices". Interested persons sign up on a first come first served basis. The OC bulletin board is located to the left of the main entrance to the Student Union ballroom.

In order to make it possible for the ill-equipped to safely take part in outdoor activities, the Outing Club rents out tents, sleeping bags, climbing gear, skis, canoes, and other equipment at reasonable rates.

In its responsibility to the environment, the community, and its members, the Outing Club this year is offering programs in conservation, safety, and trail maintenance, and will have workshops in equipment use and maintenance, instruction in various techniques, and some program of leadership training. The club meets every Monday night in the Campus Center for slides, films, discussions, and other programs. Meetings are open to everyone and are free of charge.

To find out more details about the Outing Club, drop in at the club office in room 428B of the Student Union. It is your chance to meet a full spectrum of interesting personalities and to share with them some new experiences.

Swans & cameras

"They always seem to be staring at each other"

by Jim Paulin

The most photographed objects on campus are the swans in the campus pond.

They are photographed so often that they have become a cliche shot, like pictures of sailboats, the New York skyline and the rocky coast of Maine.

When the New England Camera Club was on campus last Spring for a conference, the swans were under a constant state of siege. Their lenses focused on them from all sides of the pond. When they were close to shore, somebody in front of them would be clicking away with a wide angle lens, while on the other side of the pond several zoom lenses would be filling up viewfinders with those white creatures.

All this attention has made them quite vain by now. Even the ugly one must feel pretty good since he's included in all the pictures.

The goldfish must be somewhat jealous, since they probably consider themselves pretty attractive. The only way they could make it on to everyman's film would be to jump on the swans' backs.

I am constantly being asked if I have any nice pictures of the swans. I'm sure someone could make a few bucks selling pictures of the swans in the Campus Center.

They've really got some bad habits. They pluck at their feathers with the same zeal a clearasil kid goes after his zits.

They'll be gliding around out there for a month or two longer now. Grab a camera and get on over to their press conference.

ARCHITECTURE AS DESIGN

Through the use of photography as his medium, and by focusing attention on some of the architectural forms, spaces and details of the Fine Arts Center, an artist has dramatically revealed some of the dynamic spirit of this newest addition to our campus.

The photographs help us see how exciting, refined and elegant with subtle and visually compelling patterns, materials and design this new structure really is.

This photo essay is, in a way, an invitation for all of us to enjoy the excitement and drama for ourselves, by personally moving around and through this structure.

It is only then you fully experience the exciting variety of spaces, patterns and forms.

Perhaps then you will also sense that this is not just another new building, but rather a sculptural environment, in harmony both with its place and time.

The Fine Arts Center was designed by two distinguished American architects, Kevin Roche and John Dinkaloo.

Associate Professor of Art and Design

ROOMMATES

You can't live without 'em, but you can't live with 'em

by Zamir Nestelbaum

You've all heard it said that "the only good roommate is a dead one." And except for the stench, you all know it to be true. A good roommate, as the veteran dorm hawker has learned the hard way, is more valuable than an ounce of Columbian, more valuable than a meal-ticket exemption, more valuable than a fart in a crowded room.

A roommate can make or break a semester. A roommate can cause you to hate your room, despise your courses, piss off your friends. On the other hand, a roommate can brighten up your day, make the University seem insignificant, offer you some good smoke.

come and share a room and after a month depart bitterly, cursing the sight of each other. And you've also noted, no doubt, how two relative strangers can hit it off and remain fast friends forever. Barring none, though, to not have a roommate is preferable to even the most ideal roommate, unless of course your roommate also happens to be your mate.

I've compiled a list of possible roommate types. This is especially relevant to you unsuspecting freshmen who may be trapped with some lurking monster in a cell deemed unfit except for the most hardened felons. Remember that most UMies pay eighty bucks a month for HALF A ROOM, and it's what's in the other half that counts. As Abe Lincoln said, (with no doube UMies in mind): "A house divided cannot stand." Well, what about a ten by ten cinderblock cubicle?

JOE NEAT

By my humble estimation the most despicable of any possible roommate. He's the kind who buys drapes and matching bedspreads for both of you. He's the kind that is constantly vacuuming the floor — two, three times a day. Every time you see him, you expect to hear a big VROOM! VROOM! VROOSH! He's the kind who has the nerve to get pissed off when you use the floor as an ash tray. What else is it good for?

Joe Neat's most irritating maneuver is to smooth over your bed cover after you've gotten up off of it, and he constantly refuses to let your friends sit on his bed, for fear of they're wrinkling the surface. When Joe Neat finally does manage to learn, after many hard months of bad feelings, to overlook many of your living habits, he still persists in sweeping your dirt and general mess, into neat little piles.

And smell! Joe Neat's sense of olfaction is more acute than the South American anteater's. The first words, in fact, that you ever heard him utter were: UGH! Housitosis!" and "It smells like burning rope in here! What could it be?" Joe Neat is the kind of person who is revolted by the smell of the room after a session with your girlfriend. What price friendship!

JACK JOCKSTRAP

This is a common roommate, but one that can set you into a terminal case of headbanging within a very short time. Jack Jockstrap prides himself as being the world's foremost athlete. He lives, breathes and thinks athletics, right from his bowl of Wheaties in the morning to his "Jockstrap Shortcake" for afternoon snacks.

Jack Jockstrap majors in sports. His classes include Basketball 101, Football 110, Golf 220, and Horseplaying 385. And what's especially irritating is that he's always cutting his classes to go play basketball, or football or golf. What's more, Jack Jockstrap is always practicing dribbling and his move to the hoop, at nice hours like three in the morning, yelling things like: "Three seconds left, Havlicek fakes, pumps, shoots, and HITS!!!"

As if this isn't enough, Jack Jockstrap persists in such activities as tackling you in the room and screaming things like "Downed At The One!" or "Thrown For A Loss!!", even when your parents are in the room, visiting for a day.

Jack Jockstrap's habits are terrible. He does a half hour of calisthentics every morning with Jack Lalane, and once, on one of his famous squat thrusts, knocks over your stereo. Moreover, Jack Jockstrap owns 40 pair of gym trunks, 19 pair of sneakers and cleats, fifty towels and 365 jockstraps,(one for each day of the year), which he keeps strewn about the room — for effect.

And living habits? For two months straight, Jack Jockstrap plays cards every night till 4 in the morning, and then announces to the world that he's "in training" and starts going to bed at nine o'clock. Holy Carl Yastremski, JJ is certainly destined for a stint in a Polish Paraplegic Circus.

JOSHERINA TOUGHCOOKIE

This is the self styled Women's Liberation. She tells you that right off when she breaks your arm in your opening handshake. She hates men and when one has the tenacity to walk past the "Men Keep Out!" sign on the door, she pulverizes him with her laser beam which she has set up, aimed right at the vital organs. In fact, she has mounted over her bed a Samurai sword with twenty-two notches in it, one for every male she has castrated. And she has the proof.

Josherina Toughcookie is the kind of roommate who will rip down your poster of Chairman Mao, screaming "SEXIST PIG!" all the while. The only male picture she allows in the room is that of Frank Perdue holding a chicken, other than of course her Burt Reynolds dart board.

list is very limited. The only books she has are Don't Touch Me, You White Honky Motherfucker which she wrote herself, and The Male Eunich by Frenchy Greer. Among the artifacts that she has collected are an actual autographed model of Robin Morgan's vibrator, and a Certificate of Valor from Ms. Magazine.

Josherina is quite famous around U Mass dating back to her efforts to make Bill Baird number twenty-three on her Samurai sword. Her frigidity is so famous that it is widely known how she can make ice cream without the use of a refrigerator or freezer. She's a true derelict from the Green Bay Packer Dressing room. It's cold in Green Bay.

SAMMY STUD

Sammy Stud is the roommate who considers himself the greatest gift to women since the birth control pill. And Sammy is a pill. He still keeps what they used to call the "little black book" filled with phone numbers of his little friends, be they Marcia, Jemima or Joe's Pizza. It's funny how often he's eating pizza.

One of Sammy's most annoying behaviors is what he does to get ready to go to the Bluewall and try to put the moves on some chick. He spends three hours in the bathroom shaving, picking at his sideburns and drowning his face in cologne, so that with a wind at his back, people in Belchertown belch.

He's constantly admiring himself in the mirror, taking little poses and singing his Duane Eddy classics. And when he finally does escort his beautiful body down to the Wall, his opening lines are straight from Laurel and Hardy: "Pardon me, but have you seen my Congressional Medal of Honor? I seem to have misplaced it", or "Haven't I seen you somewhere before? Was it Walpole in '72?" Clever. So clever in fact that all Sammy Stud brings back is some dog he picked up — of the canine variety.

But Sammy still throws you out of the room that night so as to save face. In fact he keeps you out the entire weekend. (It appears that he enjoys bestiality.) And how he brags afterwards. He rolls his eyes backwards and delivers his pock-ridden leers and tongue-rolling inuendos. Sammy Stud appears to be an apt candidate for the syphletic ward. Public toilets indeed!

DOYLE DEALER

Doyle is a common roommate experience for many. Upon first meeting this frolicsome type, he grasps your hand sluggishly and manages to utter out: "Heyyy Mannnnn What's Happninnn!!!" and proceeds to light up a joint.

Since Doyle is a horticulturalist at heart, he begins without delay to turning what once appeared to be a cement cubicle known as a dorm room, into an arborium complete with special infrared lamps, photosynthetic shields and atmospheric humidifiers. The only botanical species is of course that of cannabis. No weeding is necessary. Sometimes it gets so bad that you imagine you're in an Amazonian jungle. Doyle loves herboral influence. He spends his entire waking hours in its pursuit: smoking, eating, snorting and drinking the magic stuff.

Doyle is always stoned. The last time he was straight was the day he got accepted into U Mass. That taught him. No matter what time of day — 9 o'clock in the morning or at night, Doyle is still bug-eyed. But Doyle is not stupid. Underneath that dull exterior is a sharp businessman. Doyle handles thousand dollar turnovers each week in his favorite stuff. People come from miles around, and call day and night for Doyle's wares. People with similar glassy-eyed appearances, people with nervous paranoia, and people with silver badges come and browse. Doyle doesn't care — he'll sell to anybody — part of his affirmative action policy. Though Doyle Dealer would be a natural botanist or a born businessman, he prefers to wallow in his Woodstockian splendor. Nirvana exists, here at U Mass.

SIGFRIED STUDY

Sigfried Study displays very pronounced un-U Mass tendencies. He has a lifetime 3.98 cume —(he flunked sex education once in Junior High)- and is a pre-med with an obsession for the grindstone. Outside of his few clothes and his stacks of books, his only worldly possession is his grindstone — mounted on the wall. Each night before he goes to bed, he rubs his nose against it several times. Sigfried Study is always blitzing for an exam — weeks before it's scheduled. Outside of attending every lecture — something unheard of in the annals of modern times) — he tape records all of them and listens to each of them half a dozen times. His books are so underlined and scribbled over, that you need another Rosetta Stone to decode the hieroglyphics.

Even when you throw a party in the room and fifteen people squeeze in and are having a good time, there's Sigfried, wedged into a corner with his tattered copy of Morrison and Boyd, his eyes beating ferociously — the whole weight of his universe hanging on every syllable. He's a legend at the University Library. The custodians there just gave up and gave him his own personal key to the building. He's burned out four chairs in there from his constant pressure.

He can spout off at any given moment the volume of the known universe in cubic angstroms. Even while sleeping, he lies on a book to try to absorb even more. And this saves time in the morning — he merely has to open his eyes and begin studying. The epitome of illiteracy.

ELMER G. CONSERVATIVE

Elmer G. is a prime candidate for the straight jacket. Elmer displays a disgustingly clean-cut demeanor. Right from his Brooks Brothers cuffs to his Railroad Salvage shirts. Elmer still dons his "Goldwater in '64" button alongside his faded "Nixon's the One" button. His prehistoric hairline, trimmed neatly above the ears, suffers the Wet Look. Elmer's head is so wet, that he's always dripping with grease. Elmer put up a flagpole in the room with an enormous American flag and a Sears & Roebuck fan blowing right next to it to make it billow. And he stays up every night to watch High Flight on television. The first thing he does in the morning is scream out "TEN HUT!" and sing reveille.

Richard Nixon is Elmer's favorite person. When he found out you enjoyed the Dick's resignation, he went into a rage, and tapped your phone. But when he realized that it was his phone too, he bought you a ticket to new Jersey instead. Love it or leave it, he said. Great guy, that Elmer. Elmer is so conservative, that if somebody yelled fire in a crowded theatre, Elmer would consider the alternatives. Elmer furthermore is always goading you into arguments — for their own sake. He loves talking about Jane Fonda and Jerry Rubin, and when you casually mention Ronald Ziegler or Spiro Agnew, he goes into a rage and does his Kate Smith imitation.

His second favorite country is Taiwan, and hardly a day goes by without an arduous discourse on the red menace or the yellow peril or even the blue meanies. Since individual freedom is his credo, you sometimes must wonder if one doesn't have the individual and God-given right to perform "roomiecide". Elmer G. Conservative would be a great match-up with Bozo the Clown in an ear-tugging session.

FLORA FLIRT

Flora Flirt is the most hateful of hypothetical roommates. This is the type of female that is known in the vernacular as a "tease". She has an obsession for casually attracting and dangling men. With her, a week isn't a week without five or six dates and five or six different guys. And she keeps a scoreboard. After each "performance", she delivers her "rate-the-stud" monologue to you while you're trying to get to sleep.

Flora is fairly attractive with an affinity to looking saucy but suggestibly demure. She has in her repertoire a giggle which she machine guns indiscriminantly, in the presence of any males. "Heeeee; Teee Heee!" announces her escorted approach down the hall. You once tried to take a giggle-per-minute count but failed meserabley. No stenographer in existence could have accomplished the feat.

Flora flirt leaves her telephone number (the same one as yours) with any one who'll take it, be they friends, acquaintances, busdrivers, derelicts or junkies. And so your phone is always ringing with some clown on the other end who read a "For A Good Time Call 378-5948" message he found scribbled on a men's room stall. And Flora leaves detailed instructions as to what to reply to whom, when they do call. For Bill she's here; for Tom, she died; for Rex, she'li call back; for Mohammed; she converted to Shintoism, etc. Of course once a week things get so bad she changes the phone number, cuts anb dyes her hair, puts on a padded bra and presents to the world a new Flora, equally as presumptuous and pubically irritating. A Martha Mitchell look-alike? Ain't that a frightening thought.

LARRY LUSH

Larry Lush is a one of a kind roommate that thousands of UMies suffer with. Larry likes to drink, quaffe, imbibe, guzzle, and even gargle. You first noticed that when he started having beer for breakfast every morning. And pretty soon it's lunch and dinner too. Larry's big line is "let's go to the Wall and get bent!" after which he proceeds to meander over to his car, and gun it to the bar.

Larry majors in booze. He studies it, he ponders its affectations, he writes odes to its visions, he spends hours of research trying to ascertain man's tolerance to it and the degree with which one can function in society while permanently in an inebriated condition. Larry in fact plans to spend the rest of his life engaged in this worthwhile research, hoping eventually to master it and even get his Doctorate in the stuff. Then he'll be able to teach it to other young and willing students.

With this humanitarian goal in mind, you don't mind so much when he staggers in at four o'clock every morning singing "Sweet Adelaide" or when he traipses in around five o'clock every afternoon belting out "Everybody Loves Somebody Sometime". You don't mind your refrigerator packed to the brim with beer and wine, your desk riddled with whiskey bottles in various stages of emptiness. You don't mind occasionally finding kegs of beer under your pillow or that faint scent of human vomit that lingers from the last "ordeal". In fact you've become adept at handling the psychic manifestations of the D.T.'s. Larry is making a major sacrifice to mankind. In fact he's promised to donate his liver to science, when he's finished that one last drink. As Joe Schlitz says, "you only go around once."

JOE COLLEGE

Joe College is by far the ugliest, most hideous and profane of all possible roommates. He is disgustingly ugly, beyond all words, descriptions and ambiguities. He is that roommate who can be described only as someone who is in the last stages of a syphletic attack. Apart from raping your pet cat, and making a fire with your albums while sending smoke signals with your sheets, he isn't a bad guy to room with. After all, he keeps the bugs away from you — by eating them (part of his high protein diet). He also keeps people away — which is great if you value privacy.

And Joe does pride himself as being "the complete UMie". He never goes to classes and, just as consistently, never misses a basketball game. In fact he is such a basketball freak, that he built a hoop on his headboard, and he stuffs you through it every night, pretending he's Julius Erving in the NIT. Yes, Joe College is that roommate that would round out any college experience, for what could be a better education than to follow the foibles and quixotic activities of a genuine psychotic "college freak". He's the only roommate that I recommend, for he is the only roommate I've seen that could ever make sense out of a fundamentally irrational place.

And thus, a lesson to the novelty seekers out there in readerdom that anxiously await to see "what my roommate is going to be like". Your roommate will be WORSE than you expect. Hope for the worst and when it eventually comes to pass, you can be grateful. If it doesn't come to pass, and you do get a decent roommate, and if it should perchance happen the aforementioned types draw each other in the great and good housing lottery that Whitmore masterminds, then you can send out for hot coffee and grab two of every animal you can find. It's gonna rain for a while.!

Zamir Nestelbaum is a Collegian weekly editorial columnist who, as his past roommates can tell you, is a horror to live with.

The Stereo Co-op

by Mark Citron

> "Still small and new, this Springfield business has many obstacles to overcome, but its potential, especially in an area such as Amherst, is great."

"People ask me what my motives are all the time. You can't blame the public for being distrustful."

Jim Freedman is the soft-spoken manager of Springfield's Stereo Co-op, but he'd rather take a low profile on his involvement in the co-op's operation.

"The operation could be run by five members, make a lot of money, go into the larger markets and be capital intensive, but we want to be an alternative. To use any money we create to seed other worth while community projects, but let's not talk about me," Freedman says, and then lapses into a rambling monolog on the co-op and its "struggle for existence."

"These are mainly working class, moderate income Americans in Springfield, " Freedman explains. "People who've never been involved in group processes, and don't know what co-ops are. When these people ccme in, the first thing we have to deal with is a credibility problem. It's a slow process."

The slow process began in October, '73, when the co-op first registered to do business. Originally centered in Springfield, the co-op expanded and now intends to be in Amherst this Fall.

The co-op today does about $6,000 worth of business a month. It sells stereo equipment and record albums near cost. A $6.98 list record album, for example, that sells for about $5.00 at most discount stores, goes for $4.10 at the co-op (25 cents over the album's cost). Stereo equipment sells for a flat 8 percent over cost.

The co-op's credibility problem rests as much on its physical operation as on the attitudes of its patrons. The co-op has no traditional store-front operation, with racks of albums and stocks of stereo equipment for prospective buyers to view. Instead, co-op members call in orders or pick out equipment from catalogs.

All equipment comes with manufacturer's gaurantee, and payment is not required until delivery, which for stereo equipment sometimes takes as long as 3-4 days, while record albums can often be picked up the following day.

The co-op has often come under attack, especailly since February of this year when it moved to its present location in the "X" section of Springfield.

"The other (stereo) companies in the Springfield area have characterized us as bandits and pirates," Freedman says. "I don't want to say any names or list the companies, but we've threatened many times."

The threats to the co-op have taken various forms, but, typically, several giants of the stereo manufacturing industry have used intimidating legal actions to halt the co-op's activities.

"The other stereo shops in Springfield pressured the stereo companies," Freedman explained. "You see, we found a way to get away from 'fair trade' legislation. The typical mark-up on a fair trade item is 40 percent. The Nadar group has called fair trade the biggest rape of the American people going, but it wasn't until just recently that the Mass. legislature changed to allow groups such as the Stereo Co-op to exist."

Fair trade laws allow manufacturers to set minimum retail price. Recently, the 'non signers clause' that forced adherence to the manufacturer's set price was ruled unconstitutional.

The co-op has also suffered by attempts to disrupt its sources of supply and isolate it by cutting the co-op off from the media. The supply problem has been overcome, but the problem with the media has yet to be resolved.

"We found that a paper would be doing a story on area co-ops, and then not include us," Freedman says. "It's a conflict of interest for the papers to publicize the co-op because they get a lot of ads from the stereo companies."

No one at the co-op was willing to say if the stereo companies were pressuring the media, but it was pointed out that "past experience shows the stereo companies capable of some very evil things."

Like most co-ops, the Stereo Co-op has organized its membership into committees and expects members to share in some of the work. The three committees records, steros, and public relations each have 5-7 active members.

John Gurvitch of the record committee explained. "All procedures are controlled by the committees, and they have all the main responsibilities."

While the co-op is still small and new, its potential, especially in an area such as Amherst, appears great. But, Freedman is quick to add, "We can't go too fast, too soon. In a co-op operation, you don't have the capital. We just want to create alternatives, not close down the other stores," he said.

MUSIC BOXES

To sum it all up: Don't become too preoccupied with getting the lowest possible price. Remember you're looking for good sound from good compatible equipment that won't screw up. You also want some assurance of long-term satisfaction from the people you bury from. A "bargain" may not be the best way to get a real bargain.

Warranties:

Most major-brand components are warrantied against defects as follows: Receiver, amps and tuners are generally warrantied for parts and labor for three full years. Turntables and tape decks are generally only warrantied for three to 12 months, and usually labor is only covered for three months. Speakers are generally warrantied for five years. If you are buying a "demonstrator" or closeout models, ask if the warranty still applies. Keep all boxes and receipts, and make sure you fill out and send in the warranty cards. The largest and most popular brands, such as Sony, Pioneer, Marantz, Garrard, etc., not only are among the most trouble free, but also are the easiest to get serviced as they have the largest national network of warranty stations. The warranty is valid at any "authorized dealer" in the country. However, not every "authorized dealer" is also an "authorized warranty station," so if your unit breaks during warranty, you (or the dealer) must send it to an authorized warranty station. Stereo component shops vary greatly in their "service policies." Most only have general guidelines in regards to customer service. Get a clear understanding of the warranties and services included with your stereo components before you buy them. When problems do arise, a dealer will generally do as little or as much as you demand; the squeaky wheel usually gets more grease.

TERMS YOU SHOULD KNOW

Audio frequencies: Often referred to as "audio spectrum," relates to "sound-frequency" within the range of human hearing. The full audio range is "20 to 20,000 Hz." "Hz" stands for "Hertz" and it is synonymous with "cycles per second."

Frequency response: Normally referred to as a measure of a machine's (or speaker's) ability to reproduce sound from the lowest to highest frequency.

Distortion: The difference between the original signal and the signal (music) you hear. The less the better, since as above 1 percent distortion is noticeable and unpleasant.

Phono cartridge: The device which changes the mechanical signal on the record into an electrical signal for the amp. All hi-fi cartridges of quality are magnetic.

Stylus: The part of the phono cartridge which engages the record groove, commonly known as the needle.

Efficiency: The ability of a speaker to convert electrical energy into acoustical energy (sound). Usually applied to speakers. It is a relationship between electrical input versus acoustic output. An efficient speaker will go "louder" with less power (wattage) input than an inefficient speaker.

Woofer: A speaker designed to reproduce the lower part of the sound spectrum (approximately 20 to 400 Hz) i.e. "bass." These speakers are usually eight to 15 inches in diameter.

The midrange speaker: A speaker designed to reproduce the middle part of the sound spectrum, approximately 700 to 5,000 Hz. Typically three to five inches in diameter.

Tweeter: A speaker designed to reproduce the higher parts of the sound spectrum (5,000 to 20,000 Hz), the "treble." Typically one to 2 inches in diameter.

Crossover: The electrical network which divides the audio signal into the different ranges for each specific speaker.

Two-way, three-way, four-way speakers; Refers to number of sections the audio spectrum is divided into. A "three-way system" is not necessarily better than a "two-way system." The number or size of speakers in today's loudspeaker systems in no way determines their quality: each speaker must be judged strictly on its performance as a complete unit.

Control amplifier: A component which combines a pre-amplifier and power-amplifier in one integrated unit.

Tuner: A component which typically receives both AM and or FM broadcasts.

Receiver: A component which combines a pre-amplifier, power-amplifier and tuner into one integrated unit.

Turntable: A mechanical device which plays only one record at a time, and is usually "manual" in operation, although it may have an automatic stop and repeat function.

Changer: A mechanical device which plays one or more records at a time, with automatic stop and start. It allows you to "stack" the records on a long spindle.

Power or "watts": The power of an amplifier is measured in "watts," and this relates to an amplifier's ability to "amplify" a low level (quiet) input to a higher power (loud) output. There are several different methods in which power is determined. The most conservative (and accurate) is called the "RMS rating." Always ask for "the RMS power rating" with all channels driven simultaneously into 8 ohms, at a low distortion level; typically 1 to .5 percent or less. An amplifier that puts out "lots of power" will do you no good unless it can put out that power at a low distortion level into a load equivalent to your speaker (8 ohms is typical). For example, you'd be better off with an amplifier which puts out 25 watts per channel, with both channels driven into 8 ohms with say, 2.5 percent distortion. Other ratings, such as "IHF power," "IPP power," "peak power" or "music power" are virtually meaningless and very misleading. If an amplifier (or receiver) manufacturer does not list in his specifications the RMS power at a conservative distortion level, it's probably because the component's true performance leaves something to be desired.

How to take care of sound equipment

Remember to replace your record stylus—a diamond one should be changed about every one thousand hours of playing time to prevent record damage.

Keep records clean, either with mild soap and water, a commercially available brush that can be attached to your tone arm or with a special chemically treated cloth.

Tear the cellophane completely off new record jackets. The cellophane shrinks and can cause record warpage over time.

Don't rewind tapes after play. Leaving them in the tight rewind position can cause "imprinting" of one program on another.

Where to buy it

There are many places to buy good sound equipment, but depending on where you buy, you can spend more or less on the same equipment and get a little or a lot of service too.

Department stores require you to pay top dollar and personnel is not as well-trained in sound as they are at audio dealers, so guidance is limited. Also, television, radio and stereo consoles compete with stereo components for sales personnel's time knowledge and the available floor space.

Audio dealer sometimes referred to as an audio salon, is a place that concentrated on audio equipment and offers you the most in terms of service, warranty and guidance. There is usually a listening room to test the quality of the sound and a large selection of merchandise. Prices here are average, with frequent specials on prepackaged systems (receiver, speakers and changer put together for a special price), often very good buys.

Discount & mail order outlets are where you can save money, sometimes up to 25 percent. But, you have to know what you're buying. The store is apt to be too busy for anyone to offer much advice. Do your research first, know what components you want. Mail order outlets work the same way, you just do your "shopping" from a catalog which includes detailed specifications on all items. The "specs" can be extremely helpful, so try to learn what they mean.

Dos & Don'ts

DON'T forget to allow for proper ventilation if you're building enclosures for your components. Overheating can cause damage.

DO take along a new record album when you're buying speakers. You can hear the difference in sound quality without record scratch.

DO be wary of "house brand" components that a dealer adds to a stereo package. Using a house brand can sometimes be a way of disguising inferior quality. Name brands are a safer bet.

Budgeting money

Decide what percentage of your total amount should be spent on each component. Here's a guide to help:

Thirty to 35 percent should be spent on speakers although some pros say you might spend more.

Estimate 40 percent for a receiver; the balance for a changer.

FOOD CO-OPS

by Alison Berry

Buying your groceries through a local food co-operative is an alternative to supermarket shopping which may be worth considering. Every town in this area is accessible to one or more of the 15 food co-ops operating -- there are 3 in Amherst alone.

Co-ops offer two immediate advantages: fresh produce and very cheap prices. Produce is bought, directly from local farmers in season, or from wholesalers in Boston or Springfield. It is delivered on the same day it is bought, often the same day it is picked. And the food is cheap.

On a typical day at the Amherst Co-op, lettuce was 15 cents a head; tomatoes 12 cents a pound; cucumbers 6 cents apiece. Two pounds of cottage cheese was $1.23.

At the co-op in Florence, butter is 66 cents a pound and Vermont cheddar $1.09 a pound. In Shutesbury, two loaves of bread costs 54 cents; the same bread in the store was priced at 93 cents.

Every co-op has its own way of working, but the general idea is that when enough people get together, they can order food in bulk from the wholesaler, fresh, and without having to pay extra costs in between. Groups do their own trucking, and members of the co-op pitch in to break the bulk order down into individual grocery bags.

By and large, most groups have only one grocery pick-up day per week. This means that all the members fill out an order list for a whole week's food once a week. On the day the food is bought, everyone comes to the central co-op and picks up what they have ordered.

A few co-ops (Yellow Sun, for example) are set up as regular stores which are open five days a week. These stores carry a large stock of dried fruits and nuts, grains and flour, oils and spices, etc. They are open to everyone, but offer lower prices for co-op members.

Some of the weekly order type co-ops also have store hours on the day following grocery pick-up day. These are open to nonmembers as well as members. Again, the prices for nonmembers are high than member prices, but still substantially below supermarket prices.

Nearly every co-op handles mainly fresh fruits and vegetables. Dairy products, fish, eggs, bread, grains and flour are also usually sold. Two co-ops, Belchertown and Greenfield, offer meats.

Belonging to a food co-operative is quite different from going to the grocery store. The best way to introduce yourself to food co-ops is to stop by for awhile and talk with people there. You can see for yourself what goes on and whether it suits your needs. The atmosphere in the Yellow Sun store is relaxed and personal. If you want to check out weekly ordering of fresh produce, go on grocery pick-up day. It may be hectic, but it's also very friendly.

The work of keeping the co-ops running is done by everyone, cooperatively. If you join a co-op, you or your household is expected to contribute 2-3 hours a month there. You may do anything from sweeping the floor to cutting cheese or taking out the garbage, and you can choose your work. Most people find they enjoy doing the work. There are lots of folks around, and there is real satisfaction in seeing produce arrive in the truck and travel to individual grocery bags. The co-ops on pick-up day have the bustle and the smells of an open vegetable market.

Every co-op has a membership fee, usually the equivalent of an average weekly order. This gives the group the working capital to buy wholesale before individual members pay for their orders. Any money saved by the co-op is returned to the members, either by lowering prices again, purchasing a wider range of stock, or by sponsoring useful projects. Amherst co-op is putting out a recipe book, for example. It also sponsored freezing and canning workshops during the summer.

The size of a food co-op, like everything else about it, depends on the people in it. Some co-ops have a dozen households; others run into the hundreds. The co-op in Shutesbury began last year with only a handful of people, and now there are 72 households.

PLACES TO GO:

A travelogue for bored adolescents

by Larry
Carpman

Amherst and its surroundings provide an interesting selection of things to discover and enjoy.

That may sound like a travel folder describing an exotic vacation, but it happens to be true. However, articles entitled, "Things To Do Around Amherst", a seemingly appropriate name here, too, always pick out the most obvious choices of activities and events in the area. The selections are usually the same in each article and commonly known, thus unhelpful.

For example, many people already know about the beauty and serenity to be had at Quabbin Reservoir on Route 9 in Belchertown. The reservoir, open each day until dusk, provides great panoramic views from its winding uphill road and especially from its lookout tower atop the site. The location, on a sunny, cloudless day, is a photographer's dream and, for that matter, a non-photographer's Shangri-La.

Driving along the road at Quabbin you can see a lake-size reservoir, broken up only by an occassional island, that slips in and out of several small dams and inlets. Half way up the trail to the tower is a small clearing set on a cliff overlooking a hilly wooded area. The scene is almost too perfect to imagine.

Sure, Quabbin, it seems everyone knows the Reservoir is a place to go or "something to do around Amherst". But, if you are willing to do a little driving ... Imagine now a deep, devestating gorge with a 200 foot jungle-like suspension bridge leading up to a spectacular view of unblemished countryside. Walking across the slightly shakey wooden bridge, you will be able to see jagged rock formations that will require more than a minute's time to appreciate.

Claredon Gorge will be worth the two-and-a-half hour drive it takes to get to the site. Naturally, a car is a necessity for this worthwhile sojourn. But, for those of you so materially endowed the trip away from Amherst for a while may do you some good. Registration days, with their overloaded courses, cancelled sections, and long lines, only serve to make places like Claredon Gorge that much more enjoyable.

Directions to the Gorge are easy enough for a befuddled beginning-of-the-semester brain to negotiate. Take Route 91 North over the Vermont border to Route 103 West. Stay on 103 until you pass a junction for routes 140 and 155. In about 10 miles you will see a sign for the Long Trail. Enter the trail on the left near a small cottage. Walk two-tenths of a mile and descend into the gorge. Enjoy.

Another well-known area spot is Look Park in nearby Florence, just down the road from that famous Miss Florence Diner.

The caged animals and paddle boats for rent can provide an afternoon's worth of entertainment. A collection of polychromatic peacocks will undoubtedly be one of the highlights of your visit to Look Park. The park also offers several picnic tables to enjoy outdoor meals in the early Autumn sun.

To get to Look Park take Route 9 all the way through the center of Northampton past the Veterans Administration Hospital into Florence. Watch for signs.

A second, lesser-known spot is the Arcadia Wildlife Sanctuary in Northampton. This park area, once covered by glaciers (so they say), serves as a close-by day trip. With over 450 acres of woodlands, meadows, and hiking trails, Arcadia offers a good deal for Fall outdoor activities. To get to the Sanctuary take Route 10 South in Northampton two miles to a left onto Loveland Street. Take another left onto Clapp Street and the wildlife in their natural habitat await you.

For the many bicyclists in the community there is an excellent trail along Route 47.

Route 47 is a narrow, twisting road flowing through colorful farmland and past acres of tobacco fields. The path winds from Hadley into Sunderland without a traffic light or bus to bother you on your peaceful jaunt into the countryside. The only annoying thing that may accompany you, at times, is the natural and very organic odor of the gifts that cows and horses have a habit of giving to the soil. But, it seems to be a very fair trade for auto noise and exhaust.

A second far-off spot of interest (and consequently another lesser-known area) is again across the Vermont border. You can take in a beautiful panoramic view that reaches for over 100 miles and covers across three states is New York, Massachusetts and Vermont.

The view serves as an enjoyable climax after a relazing trip along Route 100 a rolling mountain road that slips in and out of small to very small Vermont towns which are difficult to simply pass through without stopping for some excellent Vermont Chedder or authentic maple syrup. (If it comes in tin cans you know it is real maple syrup.) The steep road with its numerous hair-pin turns requires a cautious driver who is willing to sacrifice much of what the surroundings will offer the other passengers.

Directions to Route 100 in Vermont are rather clear cut. Take Route 91 North to Route 9 West in Vermont. Once on Route 9 watch for signs for Route 100. At times the road becomes so steep a four cylinder car may have slight, but not drastic, problems negotiating the hills. So, try not to overload the car.

Nearby Mount Toby in Leverett offers the hiking enthusiast or the bicyclist a day's enjoyment.

There is a well-outlined jeep trail up to the top of the mountain you can use or, for the more explorer types, you can blaze your own path to the summit. Once you arrive at the peak a 70-foot fire tower invites you to take in a wide-angle view of the pioneer valley. If you have a good camera do not forget it for this hike.

Peddle, hitchhike, or drive down Route 63 into Leverett. Just after you pass the New England Center (look for a small white sign off the highway) on your left watch for a tiny path leading down into the woods. You will soon come to railroad tracks and then ascend the mountain.

A nice place designed specifically for the inevitable Indian Summer days when both the temperature and humidity stay too high for too long is Lake Wyola in Shutesbury. The lake offers quiet-water canoeing, swimming, and picnicing. There is, however, an admission fee so don't go with empty pockets.

To get to Lake Wyola take Route 63 to Leverett until the junction of Route 47 where you will see a green sign on your right. The Lake is about four miles off of Route 63.

While you are at Lake Wyola another interesting spot, The Leverett Craft Center, will be very close by.

The center is the home of many area artists and craftspeople. There are always fine displays of pottery, jewelry, and paintings. Most everything is for sale but if you cannot afford to by, browsers are still welcome.

The Craft Center is on Montague Road off of Route 63. Travel about three miles down Montague Road towards the center of Leverett. (Caution: Since the center of Leverett consists of a one-window Post Office, a church and a small Town Hall do not anticipate a downtown shopping area or you will quickly pass the Craft Center.)

The famous swimming spot for U Mass people, Puffers Pond, is probably the most familiar item on lists of this type.

Puffer pond is close to campus, shady, and has the potential to get you wet. What more could you want on a warm September day? The pond's water quality fluctuates, however. At times the pool looks crystal clear, so clear in fact, you won't believe your eyes the next time you return to find the dirt and debris too thick to handle.

For those of you not wishing to hitchhike, drive, bicycle, or walk very far the Amherst town common will have to suffice. After doing a little shopping in the downtown district you can find yourself a large elm on the common. The town often has fairs, exhibitions, open markets, concerts, and other timely tidbits of entertainment on the grassy area between Amherst College and the parking lot.

For those of you who are totally and too often bored, there is always the new Fine Arts Center to keep you busy.

You can easily lose yourself (literally) in the completely new maze of concrete that sits next to Herter Hall. Or, if that does not help, try watching the swans negotiate the Campus Pond slime.

Hopefully, though, if this list has been of any help or if you have friends who know the exotic places in the area you will not have to resort to the Fine Arts excursion or the Campus Pond visit.

Amherst and the wide surroundings certainly have a lot to offer.

"That'll be $356.03, please"

by Zamir Nestelbaum

"Toolin into Frisco, out for a jive, gotta make the border 'bout quarter to five." Slam bammin' down Rowt 66 in my suped up 1955 Chevy with a wooden front fender and a hole where the floor was supposed to be. Jiving to the tunes cracklin' from my radio, whose cones were so burnt out that the dashboard was keepin time with all of Garcia's licks. Or at least Donny Osmond — can't stand the desert silence. The fine whir of my half baked muffler, draggin on the hot tar, sparks trailing my ascent for half a mile gets ogles from hot ass pigs mean — eyeing my approach and "let em go Joe, faster he gets out, the better 'tis" my departure.

Pronged to the pitchfork of my dry heaves mad dash across this continent, got lulled into thinkin that no where! no how! no way! was anything gonna stone wall my unstoppable approach. No Prestone monster, no Jolly Green Giant ho-hoing on the highway; no steaming Easy Rider Southern Town was gonna stop me. I was the Hulk crashin' my way to the coast, like Sherman marching through Georgia burning everything in his path, I was on my way to battle with Dr. Doom and save the day for Minnie Mouse (and save the night for hot-licks Gidget). "And all of the bloomin sudden", as David Frost might say, involved as I was in this ego Move, came suddenly the wicked forebodance!

"KHEHAKooghxxioxoxiozzobboo mmmPhphphoooooo!"

"Machine!!" I cried, "Don't fail me now. The woods are silent, dark and deep and I've miles to go before I sleep."

Sputtered to the side, coughed up another fifty feet and then died in a sea of steam.

"Jeeeszusss!!! Out in the middle of goddamm nowhere!!! Keep cool, keep cool. Yo' Mr. America Man! You can fix anything!!"

Yanked and tugged and after a spell, got the hood open and peaked into hell. "SSHsheeeiitt!! It all looks the same. Face it man! A cool cat you is, but Jack Amstrong you isn't!!"

Headin' through that country out for a jog, hitchin to heaven, or the nearest phone.

"Hah! I can pull a Clark Kent if I can find a phone booth. Nah! In this wilderness they'd lock me up as a transvestite for sure. Besides, I clean forgot my glasses."

But where was the Hulk then, on that fateful night, belting them out with Thor, and laughing at my plight.

"Twas the best of times, 'twas the worst of times, 'twas the age of reason, 'twas the.......Ha!!! I see a phone booth!!!"

Dime out dime in, last one I got! Nabbed it in Vegas b'fore I got busted.

"Hellooo, Acne Motor Clinic. You ball em, we haul em. You blow em, we tow em!"

"YYess!! sir. YYoouu see I'm stuck out there on 66, my car died. I was going to deliver last rites, but it isn't a Catholic. Could you come out here and fix er up? Ole Nell's gotta get me to the coast!"

"SHSHoorr!!! Easily Dun! Be out there in a jiff soon as I get Flo the Tow all cranked up. Easterners are so darned jittery to keep movin'. Be there in an hour.!"

Cold and wet, gotta work up a sweat! Dan'l Boone never had it this bad, I'm willin to bet. Hikin' in back to the Ole Flo came rollin' right into the scene. "Waal, hello there kid! Car's in trouble? Jes let ole Handy Dandy Andy take a look see into the trouble and I'll guarantee he'll rectify the sut'ation right quick!"

"Sho! Just look inside. Nell's blown her fuse — she's got the blues!"

"WWWOOOOO!!! I can't believe my ears. For what do I behold. Kid! your trouble is as plain as a peacock in persuit. What you got there is a busted Hickey Semi Lunar Hotch Valve Gearcase Assembly!! Yessir, it's as plain as the rain in Spain!"

"WWowww!! I knew there was somethin' wrong. How does that thing work, I mean does it function when it s'posed to!!"

"Simple! The Left Hickey Semi Lunar Notch Valve Gearcase attachment is hooked up to the crankcase sparker, all of which controls the movement of the rotary thermostatic coronary suspense mechanism which runs your car. What probably happened to you was that your car burnt some gas, which got hot and exploded inside your piston, and activated your grooved gear rangoon valve no. 2, which ground up the gears and fucks up the Left Hickey Semi Lunar. Its a bad sign when a car starts burnin' gas. You might need a major overhaul!"

"SHSHSHEEEIIITTTTT!! Ole Nell's gonna kick it. Waal, I gotta get outta this hole. Shore! Hook'er up and tow'er in an' do what ya ken for poor ole Nell! Ya done taught me a lot bout the insides of this here vehicle. If I ever get stuck agin, mebbe I kin remembah some of that fancy grease monkey jive you jes laid on me!"

"SHSHOO!! Kid! Glad t'be of service. If ya need a place to stay, why don't ya sack out at HANDY DANDY ANDY'S SLEEPTIGHT MOWTEL!! Onla fifteen dollers a night, but fer you, since ya look like ya need it, twenty!

"Thanks, pal! Sho 'preciate it. Tell me, d'ya know what this'll come out to, I mean in dollers and cents, American?"

"Wall, let me figger it up right here. Lets see......"

Local cyclist in top fitness

Doug Dale

Doug Dale, owner of Peloton Bike Shop in Amherst, is a racing cyclist competing with the best in the nation. At 27, he has been racing for fourteen years and has competed up and down the East Coast, in Louisiana, the Midwest and California.

His most recent trip was to the Tour of Ireland which fulfilled a life long goal to represent the United States in overseas competition. The Tour of Ireland is a six-day stage race beginning and ending in Dublin. Each day a stage in the race is ridden (usually around 90 miles), times are taken and places are given for individual stages and for overall race standing.

Doug is Massachusetts State Road Champion. He won the championship this June against fifty Massachusetts riders on a 112 mile ride in Concord.

Asked why he races, Doug replied, "I love being in top fitness, I love controlling and maneuvering this responsive machine (a Cinelli), and I love speed. But most of all I love to win!"

Racing is the reason Doug opened his bike business.

"I wanted to be with bikes and promote all facets of biking. I'm not out to make a lot of money, just a decent living for me and my family, but I wanted to do it in a way I can enjoy. I'm dedicated to cycling and would like to see everyone cycling for whatever reasons — racing, recreation, exercise. My wife rides for exercise and transportation, and I'm elated to say that my 6-year-old son now rides for the sheer joy of it!"

Doug's racing plans are not definite. He was hoping to make the 1972 Olympic Team but a collision with a car six days before the trials ended those hopes with a broken hand. Now Doug has no long range goals. He plans to race as often and as well as he can and enjoy it as much as possible. Look for him as he trains daily for his 40 to 60 miles. And when the snow flies you will probably see him on his cross-country skis — his winter form of training — on the UMass fields.

A guide to Volkswagen maintenance

So you own a Volkswagen, know with pride that you drive the Model T of the 70's, and contrary to popular belief your V.W. is just as easily maintained. The Volkswagen was designed to be fixed, unlike the long lines of Detroit plastic on the market today.

If you've had your V.W. for a while you've noted that the damned thing has a strong tendency to break down in the worst situations. As in the medical field, the trend is moving towards preventative medicine; such is necessarily the way with finicky German machinery. A V.W. is happiest when you approach with regementation and precision. As you racing enthusiasts are aware, the German Porsche Racing Team didn't dominate Le Mans because of favorable rule changes but because of vast quantities of schnopps available for hungry injection systems and the music of Wagner played in the pits.

The V.W. is quite a marvel from a technical point and this one reason is why you must approach the car in a special way. Its heart is a four-cylinder conglomeration of air-cooled metal. This alone is a very important factor in administering more frequent attention than a water colled car.

Since your driving days commenced, you've been taught that awareness is your strongest asset in avoiding unnecessary discontent. Your awareness must also encompass the chunk of iron and alloy under the seat of your pants.

Little Lights

Know what the little lights mean when they come on. They are the bridge between the motor and your conscience. If these telltales light up and your conscience doesn't bother you, your wallet will bear the brunt of the low. In the older V.W., there are only two lights, one being the red generator light and the other being the green oil pressure light. If the red light appears while driving, don't be misled!! This doesn't mean you can cruise on the battery for a few more miles, it could mean that you snapped the fan belt, which could lead (will lead) to a cooked motor. The green light indicates oil pressure, and should it come on, clutch in and promptly shut off the car. Investigate the situation. More often than not, the damage has already happened.

If either of these lights flicker while the car is idling, know that trouble lies ahead and appraise it reasonably. Unless you prepare yourself, you might find yourself the proud owner of a blown engine and an expensive repair bill. Possibly the bill could exceed the value of the car. If you are satisfied with shelling out nine bucks an hour for labor, read no further; but if you're interested in saving yourself a bundle, read on. A typical overhaul will cost in the range of $350-$600, depending on the severity of the damage and who's doing the labor.

Learning The Hard Way

My own automotive education began one winter night long ago at a Volkswagen dealership. After handing over a bundle of do-re-mi, the service manager assured me my car would never blow up, and told me not to let anyone mess with the new gizmo that now lived under the carburator. Needless to say, the old bus ran like a top, but my drive lasted one mile down the highway and two miles down the interstate when a clatter arose not unlike a bunch of loose bolts shaken in a garbage can. As I waded through the snow to telephone the tow truck, the decision was reached to remedy my automotive apathy. Consider disaster an educational experience, but avoid learning the hard way. Take care of it now and learn.

Oil is the blood of the motor and, if neglected, the motor will die. Because your engine is air-colled, it runs much hotter than a water-cooled engine, to the tune of around 125 degrees. Heat has a marked effect on the oil's lubricating ability even if there's enough. The motor is constructed of different metals and consequently they expand at different rates. If things get too hot, the metals will freeze together. This always happens when you run out of oil. Whenever gassing up, have the pump jockey check the oil. Check it regularly yourself. Keep a record of its rate of consumption so you can predict when it needs more and help evaluate the motor's disposition.

For the summertime use a 20-40 multiweight grade oil and a 10-30 weight in the winter. Do not overfill the crankcase or else you'll blow out the seal that holds the oil in. It should be changed at the maximum of every 3,000 miles. There's also oil in the air cleaner that must be drained and washed in a solvent such as gasoline or kerosine.

Remember that time doesn't mean too much, it's the miles that count, so mark down the milage when the next maintenance is due and put it where you can see it. Now pull out the bag of tools that came with the car and see if the needed tools are present. One wrench is a combination 10mm and 13mm. The other tool is like a narrow bell that tapers into a hollow shaft. There should also be a rod that inserts through the shaft for leverage. This is the spark plug wrench and also fits on the oil drain plug. If you don't have these tools borrow them or, better yet, buy them. Unlike a poor stock investment, they get more valuable the more you learn to use them. They pay for themselves in terms of saved labor cost.

How To Change Oil

When at the parts store buy an oil change kit and a can of Spray-a-Gasket. Cruise down to the auto center of a department store and buy quality oil. Take a disposable milk jug and cut out one side and screw the cap back on. Borrow a pail and get some gas or kerosene. Next slide under the car which is parked on a level spot and find the oil drain plug. It's a big nut surrounded by a bunch of little nuts. Wipe the area with a clean rag and loosen the plug with the spark plug tool. Slip the jug underneath and finish unscrewing it by hand until you strike oil. Let it all drain out and then unscrew the little 10mm nuts that hold the round plate into place. Above it is the oil screen (a filter of sorts). Remove it and clean it spotlessly in the pail of solvent. Wipe the oil drips from beneath the hole in the block and slide out from beneath the car.

Look over the gasket kit. You'll see two gaskets and a bunch of little copper washers. Dry off the oil screen and disk. Spray one of the gaskets with Spray-a-Gasket and place it over the studs the strainer came off of. Promptly slip the oil screen into place. Spray the other gasket, slip it on the studs and slip the plate on. Screw one nut on to hold the plate into place. Now replace all the remaining nuts with the tiny copper washer between the nut and the plate. Don't forget to put one under the first nut. Next pry the old washer from the plug and replace it with the new one, and screw it in. Don't over tighten or you'll strip the threads and loose all that new oil. Snug is the word. Now pour two and a half quarts of oil into the filler. Check the dipstick and continue to fill a bit at a time until you reach the top line. Dump the rest of the oil into the air cleaner so that the red line is just covered.

Fixing Fan Belts

If you've got a broken fan belt, it's just as easy to fix as draining the oil and just as important. You're going to need the spark plug wrench, and a hefty screw driver. The top pulley is the one to mess with. It splits in half and this is the way to get the new belt on. This is held on by a nut of spark plug wrench size, so unscrew it by bracing the screw driver between the generator shaft and the notch in the back of the pulley (as you look at it). Pull the nut off and split the halves, pop in the new belt and tighten it. There are big washers between the two halves for adjustment. Tighten and loosen until the belt deflects about half an inch. Make sure the nut is nice and tight before checking deflection. If it's too tight you'll ruin the generator bearings; if too loose, the belt will fray itself away.

If you got your hands dirty playing with your Volkswagen before, hold your head high and know you're a better person for it. If not, get with it and look ahead. Know with pride that soon you'll belong to the Ranks of Wrenches. Perhaps you might even make a few bucks helping others out, or do an occasional overhaul in your room between exams. Pick up a copy of John Muir's book "How to Keep Your Volkswagen Alive for the Complete Idiot". It's a great book to learn from and well worth the $5.50 it costs.

Happy Motoring!!

What to look for in bike components

With the revival of cycling, the whole concept of the bicycle nowadays is: 10-speed, weighing less than 30 pounds and bought to fit an individual body. Thus buying one can be complicated. For instance, the brand name of a bicycle is only the name of the frame.

Bicycle manufacturers actually are assemblers of major components. Although the frame is of primary importance in the durability of your bike, the components-the derailleurs, control levers and brakes- determine the precision of the bike.

DERAILLEURS

A derailleur is a mechanism which shifts the chain from one sprocket to another to change gears. The rear derailleur moves the bicycle chain from one free-wheel sprocket to another and the front derailleur does much the same thing for the chain-ring sprockets attached to the crank.

Derailleurs are produced in Italy, Japan and Spain.

Front derailleurs are made with very similar, if smaller, parallelogram mechanisns as those in the rear. Parallelograms are the smoothest and most reliable types; however, many companies do manufacture good but less precise changers with pushrod devices.

CONTROL LEVERS

Control levers pull on the cable to change the shape of the derailleur's parallelogram. The relative sizes of the lever and drum determine the mechanical advantage of the entire action. Small drums make fine shifting adjustments easier and require less pressure for gear movement.

BRAKES

Brakes on a 10-speed bicycle have an extremely simple function: they apply pressure to the rims of the front and rear wheels to slow and finally stop the bike. The critical consideration here is, does the brake let go of the rim when it should on a regular and thorough basis.

There are basically two types of brakes: side pull and center pull. Center pull brakes have the advantage in that the whole cable system is much more evenly balance, thus making the return action more regular. Most manufacturers make their good brakes with center pull design. There has been a recent revival of popularity in the side pull brake. Among the most popular, however, are the center pulls which are made from an alloy, such as Campagnolo, Universal and Weinmann.

EVERY UMIE'S GUIDE TO EATING IN THE AMHERST AREA

by Jane Levin

Surely you've heard the one about the Jew visiting Paris who thought his dinner companion was introducing himself when he lifted his glass of wine and smiled, "Bon appetit!", and so returned the greeting: "Goldberg!"

The Frenchman thought nothing of it, apparently, for on three successive nights, the pre-dinner toast was the same, the Frenchman's "Bon appetit" promptly and cheerfully returned by the Jew's "Goldberg".

On the fourth night, however, a bystander noted the unusual exchange and, calling Mr. Goldberg aside, politely informed him of his malapropism.

Goldberg, somewhat abashed by his naivity, quickly returned to his table, lifted his glass and bellowed: "Bon appetit!"

To which the Frenchman triumphantly replied: "Goldberg!"

Amherst is no Paris, to be sure, and ignorance of dining customs and etiquette will certainly fare you no better nor worse in your daily search for the Basic Four here. [Besides, if you still put your elbows on the table, that's yer mother's fault].

What might be helpful, thought we, would be a listing of area restaurants worthy of your attention, with a brief description of each, including price range, quality of food, special features [dancing, alcohol, to name a few], and, you guessed it, where to put your elbows.

So whether you eat in the dining commons five days a week and are hunting for a weekend substitute to those peanut butter crackers-and-cokes you thought would get you by till Monday — or if you do your own stopping and shopping and simply want a break from scrubbing the teflon — the following guide, comprehensive but sketchy, should prove helpful in locating and evaluating area calorie merchants.

Remember, tastes differ from one person to another, so we're not about to impose ours on you. If you're in the area any length of time, you'll probably wind up eating-dining at nearly all the following establishments at least once during your stay here.

All we are trying to do is help you distinguish between the places you should wait and let your parents take you to, the places you should take your boyfriend-girlfriend to, and the places you should take two alka-seltzer.

Goldberg!

—DONUTS—

Let's start right at the bottom, with the simple things. Now what could be simpler than coffee and donuts? There's two places that'll satisfy your late night urge for the honey-dipped: Mister Donut, in the Mt. Farms Mall; and Dunkin Donut, on King St. in Northampton. Both are open 24 hours a day. Bring back a dozen.

—BURGERS—

Anyone for a Huskee, Whopper, or Big Mac? We've got all three, within a mile of each other on Route 9. Coming from campus, the first one you'll spot is Hardee's, whose shakes are as thick as soft ice cream. Burger King is at the Mt. Farms Mall entrance. Yes, it takes two hands to handle a Whopper, plus you'll find ketchup and mayonnaise dripping down your arms. McDonalds, between Hardee's and Burger King, is up to 14 billion served now, and has started selling breakfast as well. Just to give you an idea how big the McDonald's family is, ol' Ronald wanted to bring out cherry pies the week of Washington's Birthday last February but, you guessed it, there weren't enough cherries in the world to accommodate him. And while we're on franchises, we might as well throw in Kentucky Fried Chicken, on Route 9 across from the Zayre plaza.

Franchises: if you've eaten in one, you've eaten in them all. You're guaranteed cleanliness and a cheap meal; nevertheless, they're strictly for the non-daring and unadventuresome.

—SANDWICHES—

If you're low on dough, but aren't up for having your hamburger served to you wrapped in modified toilet paper, there are a few sandwich spots in the area worth trying.

McManus Eating Place, between Stop and Shop and Zayre, is one of the very few establishments in the area which stays open 24 hours a day. Terrific for breakfast at 2 a.m.; always the spot for non-stop hot coffee. Ice cream is average, but that's not why people go there at all hours of the night. Waiting for a booth at 3 a.m. can get on your nerves; based on their late night and early morning popularity, it's a wonder more restaurants don't stay open 24 hours a day.

Gaslite II, on N. Pleasant St., is open 24 hours a day on most days, but there are no booths here. Its cousin, Gaslite I on Main St., does have booths, but is open only during the day. Both have better-than-average sandwiches and ice cream; somewhat similar to Friendly's.

And we do have Friendly's, right across from Zayre. Good ice cream and sandwiches, especially the Big Beef Cheeseburger Special. A quieter breakfast atmosphere than, say, McManus.

Howard Johnson's, also on Route 9, may have 28 flavors of ice cream, but it serves only one flavor of food. The most exotic spice to be found in their kitchen is black pepper. The flavor of America, indeed. If food could carry on a conversation, this stuff would bore you to tears. If you have an ulcer and your doctor orders a bland diet, this is the place to go. Better yet, stick to the Dining Commons.

The Stables, a little further up the road on your right, is a homey little restaurant to go for any meal. Portions aren't too generous, but at least the atmosphere is not plastic.

The English Pub (or more popularly, just The Pub) has a satisfying luncheon menu. The Pub Club or the Pub Burger are each a treat in themselves, especially with a few cold ones. With a full liquor license and live music at night, the Pub transforms into a hot spot for the frat crowd. The olde English pub atmosphere lends itself to an enjoyable afternoon meal.

Another beer and burger spot is The Village Inn Drake (or, more popularly, just The Drake) on Amity St. Quite unlike the Pub, however, in that it has a classless rathskellar (downstairs) and, at street level, a more livable bar and restaurant. The menu is intended to supplement the liquid offerings, and not vice versa. Good selection of international beers and bass ale. Best bet is hamburger and potato wedges.

The Maverick in Whately is an all-night truck stop, fun if you're up for the 20 minute drive. Just follow Route 116 through Sunderland. It's a nice change from McManus, and you can shoot pinball and listen to truck drivers' bawdy jokes besides.

One breakfast spot which is open during a normal person's breakfast time is Uncle Ed's Breakfast on Route 9 in Hadley center. That's it, breakfast. They're closed afternoons and Sundays. The clientele is mostly locals, the breakfasts are suited for hungry farmers and very inexpensive besides. Worth trying at least once.

—PIZZA & GRINDERS—

Amherst is prime territory for the pizza and grinder business, two items which figure prominently in every student's snack or meal schedule. First and foremost is Bell's on University Drive past the stadium. Bell's seems to outlast its competition and its popularity remains steadfast. Most in demand are the tuna subs and meatball subs — delicious. The House Special pizza is easily a meal for two, with EVERYTHING on it.

Moving right next door to Bell's this fall will be another Hungry U, which is presently located on North Pleasant St. Usually a high school hangout, especially after Amherst High basketball games, Hungry U has a bit of catching up to do, but their reported liquor license at their new location may give them a boost.

University Pizza on Sunset Ave., right near Southwest dorms, is at a great location, but their computer games and pinball machines are a bigger attraction than the food.

Eric's Giant Subs are of the cold variety, but giant and tasty nevertheless. On Route 9 towards Belchertown, Eric's is primarily open for lunch. No pizzas here, but there is chicken and seafood.

The Domino's Pizza delivery truck is a familiar sight on campus, servicing those too lazy or unable to go out and get their own pizza. Domino's advertises free hot delivery in less than a half hour, but to compensate, their prices are relatively steep. Only if you're unable to drive to Bell's.

Campus Pizza, on Route 9 near Hadley center, has a wide selection of pizza and grinders, but if you bother to drive out there, order one of the specials, like Moussaka or lasagna.

Not particularly notable for some reason, Pizzarama is on Route 9 near Cumberland Farms. We'd tell you more, but frankly we don't know anyone who's eaten there.

If you like Italian food one step above pizzas and grinders, and don't mind paying for a little atmosphere, you might want to check out either Chequers (on University Drive) or Aqua Vitae (on Route 9 in Hadley). Both serve alcohol. Plus, there's the Wine Chariot, also on Route 9 in Hadley,

CR 1000 HIGH POWER, LOW DISTORTION FM STEREO RECEIVER

The performance specifications of Yamana's CR-1000 professional-class stereo receiver are distinguished in two ways: they are superb and, they are conservatively rated and guaranteed. By any standards, the CR-1000 is a combination of an outstanding FM tuner and an extremely low-distortion, high-power, versatile amplifier. The unit features the world's first application of negative feedback to the tuner's multiplex switching circuit, resulting in very low harmonic distortion and intermodulation distortion. Plus Yamaha "Exclusive Auto-Touch Tuning". To select your desired FM station, you simply touch the Tuning knob and the built-in AFC (Automatic Frequency Control) circuit shuts itself off for accurate tuning. Once you have "tuned in" the station, this AFC circuit activates as soon as you release the knob, guaranteeing steady, drift-free reception.

but what you want is the Wine Cellar downstairs, where dinners range from $2 to $4, a la carte. The Wine Cellar has an interesting and diverse menu, good bread, and great cheese cake. Try them all.

Last and least is Papa Gino's, in Mt. Farms Mall, which is to pizza what Adbow Big Boy is to hamburger. The spaghetti special is a rip-off; the only attraction is the beer.

—CHINESE—

Sooner or later, especially if you're from the Boston area, you'll get that craving for Chinese food. There aren't that many places to buy egg roll in town, but the few there are aren't bad.

Kalihi Kai is the biggest and mostly Polynesian. Great exotic mixed drinks, (Dr. Funk), but they're sweet, so watch they don't spoil you appetite. Unusual entertainment most nights to suit the atmosphere. It's on Route 9 towards Belchertown.

Amherst Chinese, on Main St., has mainly Mandarin and Szechwan dishes as duck (allow two days to order), sweet and sour soup, Chinese dumplings and Moo Shi dishes with Chinese pancakes. Informal, right down to the paper plates. The cash register is an abacus.

Kim Toy is a little hole in the wall, next to Amherst Cinema on Amity St., and doubles as an unusual Chinese grocery. It's worth going to just to see what's on the shelves. Strictly a take-out service, the fare is better than average and the price is right. Try it when you feel like having a meal in your apartment or dorm room, but don't feel like cooking.

—STEAK—

Steak and Brew in South Hadley is a popular spot for UMies, who like it for the brew (the food is so-so). Ideal for a long dinner-date or for just a bunch of the guys spending a full evening wining and dining. All you can drink of either wine, beer, or sangria. Average salad bar. Aim for the "specials" nights (i.e., Thursday: The Feast, with steak, chicken and shrimp, all for less than $6). Take Route 116 to Route 202.

Steak Out isn't great, but it's one of the best in the immediate area. A good menu, the best of salad bars, and reasonable luncheons are among its offerings. Downstairs is the Speakeasy Lounge which is popular with UMies, and the entertainment there has improved considerably over the past year.

Henri's, on Route 116 towards South Hadley, is reasonably priced wine and steak restaurant, open for dinner.

The Jolly Bull on Route 9 in Hadley features singing waiters, and is slightly overpriced. Wait till your parents take you out.

For low quality steak, (meaning glorified sirloin), there's Ponderosa on King St., Northampton, and Bonanza, which just opened a few weeks ago on Route 9 near the mall. If you're sick of hamburgers and can't afford a slice of juicy roast beef.

—SEAFOOD—

Jack August heads the list here, hands down. The original Jack August, no less, with Jack himself occasionally on the premises. High

SUMMER RECORD RELEASES

reviewed by Mike Kostek and Dave Sokol

The music of the masses...

Stewing up an entire summer may be troublesome for those with 'comprehensive' in their turbans, but a little controversy breeds ... alienation and-or a nice re-think culminating in some sort of new (knew?) knowledge. But you can take it, what the hang.

Top 40 stayed mostly in Deadville all the months through, with occasional glimpses of Clapton's "I Shot The Sheriff", Dylan's "Most Likely You Go Your Way (I'll Go Mine)", Stevie Wonder with "Don't You Worry 'Bout A Thing" and "You Ain't Done Nothin'', "Rock The Boat" by The Hues Corporation (good for a while) and (in the weakest moments on the back of the rubbish truck), "The Night Chicago Died" by Paper Lace, all shing like beacons in a swamp of shit, though certainly none of these will be long remembered.

Otherwise we were subjected to a parade of absolute musical jive zeroes in the form of John Denver's "Annie's Song", Abba's "Waterloo", Paul Anka's "Havin' My Baby", "Rock Your Baby" by George McCrae, and the moronic "Takin' Care of Business" by Bachman-Turner Overdrive. Even the King current single maker, Elton John, stubbed badly with "Don't Let The Sun Go Down On Me", a pompous snooze.

All of these dogs have the classic Top 40 ingredients: mindless lyrics ("Takin' care of business, Every day, Takin' care of business, Every way"), ripped-off riffs, regurgitated formulas in vocals, playing, etc. All are quickly digested — glossy, emotioned money-makers that required zip in the creativity department.

And the future looks sick. Stagnation continues in the form of Billy Preston's "Nothing From Nothing", Dave Loggins' "Please Come To Boston", Donnie & Marie Osmond ("I'm Leavin' It Up To You"). Even a nowhere band like Wet Willie ("Keep On Smilin'") sounds good next to these dolts. Say another prayer for WMUA, friends.

ERIC CLAPTON

461 Ocean Boulevard
Eric Clapton
RSO SO 4801
Time: 39:43

The only one of these five artists showing any real change in his music was Eric Clapton, but we should expect nothing else, as it's been four years since Layla, his last album of new music.

What he's done is tone down, and give us a record of middle-aged rock that's tuneful, tasteful, more than a bit good (if listened to without hype and-or expectation's blinders), but fails to excite in the classic rock rave up sense. The word most applicable in this case is satisfy, the way a J.J. Cale, a Hank Williams, a Robert Johnson, a Muddy Waters satisfied. You gotta have taste. And patience.

The songs are of two main sorts: lolligaging smoothies and muted rockers. You can't put 461 on and pile up the sandbags around the stereo (or quadeo) in protection against being blown away by another "Spoonful" or "Layla". No, you can stay in the same room, but if you have some neighbors you don't appreciate too keenly, you'd better put a quarantine sign on your door. This stuff's infectious.

The easy rockers are quite fine, but it's the slow flowers that are the real comers. All the attributes brought only with time and experience are starting to show in Eric. Soft is just as good as loud. It's just different. And a hundred times as hard to play.

The best of the mutes are "Motherless Children", "I Can't Hold Out" (the pent-up power lying underneath the song, as well as the entire album, is demonstrated at the end of the song, as the band howls with delight at their supple, subdued feeling: "All right!" they yell, "All right!".

"Mainline Florida" is ok, and it's always nice to see another Robert Johnson song handed out to the Masses. This one is "Steady Rollin' Man", and Clapton gives it an adequate reading (you think it's easy? Go play Robert's version. Or try it youself.)

The real keepers, though, are the overtly sensitive tunes given a well-defined background by the band (who are mostly newcomers, with Carl Radle, Yvonne Elliman and Al Jackson the main vets) and excellent, suggestive performances by Clapton. "Let It Grow" evokes a beautiful vision of love; "Please Be With Me", "Give Me Strength" and "Get Ready" will have me coming back for more.

More than ever before, Eric's singing is fraught with meaning, vision and depth going beyond his former 'angel' qualities.

Peter Herbst, Music Editor of The Boston Phoenix, writing in a front page story about Clapton's recent Boston Garden concert, closed with a huff: "The performance as a whole left the distinct impression that the man who had once seared us with his intensity had, in the space of three years, become a candle flickering in the wind."

What Mr. Herbst, in judging a performance in a hockey rink before 20,000 ravers, has done is to cloud hype and his own expectations with the obvious, overlooked incongruity of Eric as bandleader — not as music maker. We've killed too many of our own with excessive carping based on our own selfish needs and wants, missed information, matted ends and an inability to change. The record companies will not do it for us (change confuses the market) — they'll package anything as Product, thus clamping tremendous restrictions on the Artist. It's up to us to see clearly, to change with the times. Art is change. Music is the fastest moving art form. Stagnation kills everything in nature. Taken in his own terms, Eric Clapton is, indeed, Here Now.

— Mike Kostek

I know it. Every 12 months or so you've been going down to the record store to buy something that's well, admit it, goofy (goofie), and what you did first (1972 style) was THERE'S A RIOT GOIN' ON, and '73 reeled FRESH onto you. Que sera, sera, you ask for more in 1974 and get what? SMALL TALK.

Basic Sly shines two ways: either flowing flushes that go down with no quibble or effort ("Family Affair", "if you want me to stay", (You Caught Me) Smilin'', "Hot Fun IN The Summertime"). Pure inspiration. The other Great Sly goes absolutely bongo on it all, and flashes his Family Stone as madly fast as possible; notes tumble in everywhere, lyrics scald their way on out — no room for anything else. A good example is in WOODSTOCK where you just had to jump with the band ("I Want To Take You Higher", "Music Lover, "Dance To The Music").

A few of each are on SMALL TALK: "Time For Livin" and "Say You Will" are nice and flow while "Loose Booty" and "Livin" While I'm Livin" crunch along. The others aren't bad, they're just.., distant...

STEVIE WONDER

Fullingness' First Finale
Stevie Wonder
Tamla T6332S1
Time: 42:10

On one has made any finer music over the past three of four years than Stevie Wonder. The promises of his full-fledged total music abilities explored on Where I'm Coming From (a steal in the cut out bins) and Music Of My Mind (ditto) grew beautifully into the magnificence of Talking Book and Innervisions.

These two albums are classics, capable of captivating everyone from Eric Clapton to Jeff Beck (a bigger gap than you might think), Paul Anka to Paul McCartney (less of a gap than you might think). Besides writing, playing, singing, arranging and producing virtually every note, Stevie's songwriting grew into a potent blend of words, music and production that make him the favorite of Top 40 as well as Rolling Stone. Paul Simon looks very white in comparison.

So certainly a new album by Stevie is one of the major events of any year, and Fulfillingness' First Finale is another worthy chapter, though not quite as impressive as its two giant predecessors.

The main 'fault' with the record is its lack of the real high points that Talking Book and Innervisions had. No "Superstition", "You Are The Sunshine Of My Life" or "I Believe When I Fall In Love (It Will Be Forever)". No "Living For The City" or "Don't You Worry 'Bout A Thing". The album flows as well, as the others, and certainly never lets us down; it just doesn't take us as incredibly far.

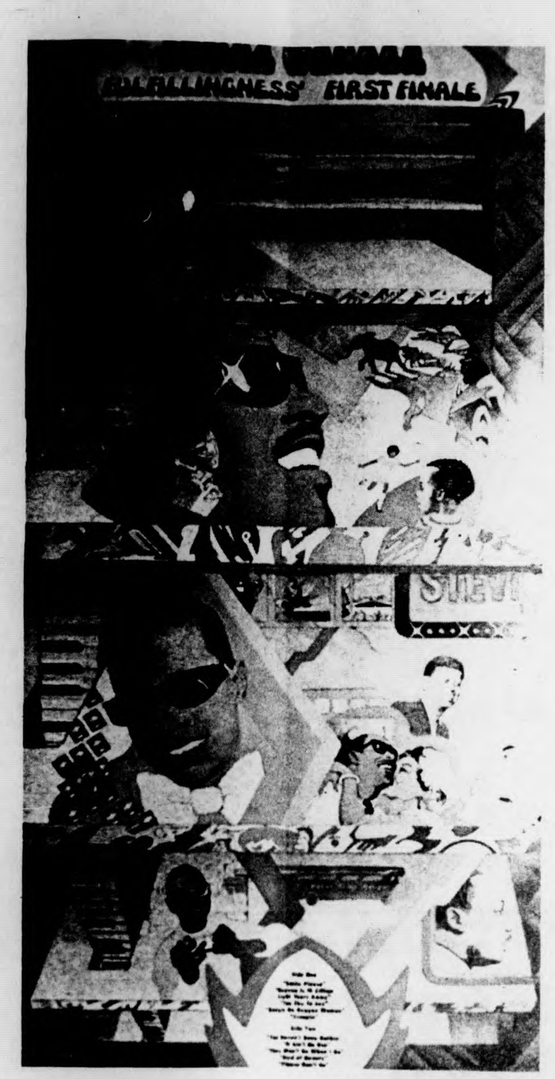
It is well varied, well paced, unflaggingly interesting and flawlessly performed. And more than a bit down. Stevie starts side one with "Smile Please", a simple reaffirmation of the power and beauty of a smile ("A smiling face is an earth-like star...Don't mess your face up with bitter tears, 'Cause life is gonna be what it is"). Next is "Heaven Is 10 Zillion Light Years Away" in which he answers the all-time musical question 'Where is your God?' with "And I say it's taken him so long, 'Cause we've got so far to come ...". A beautiful evocation of spirit, be it God's or Stevie's.

"Too Shy To Say" is a shy love song, and "Boogie On Reggae Woman" (Motown had a ton of trouble with 'reggae', spelling it 'raggae' and 'raeggae' at various points. Which reminds me to gripe about the blind typists they must have typing the lyrics — Stevie deserves much better). "Creepin'", ends the side, and self-doubt begins to, uh, creep in as he wonders if he creeps into his 'babaa's' dreams as she does in his, "Or could it be I sleep alone in my fantasy?".

Side two unwraps this bittersweet underbody to everything as Steve bids us farewell for his upcoming journey to Africa:

"Yo Ain't Done Nothin'" — the new single, and an angry, impatient decrial of Nixon.

"It Ain't No Use" — Stevie says goodbye to lover and even his "Smile Please" philosophy is overwhelmed as "There ain't no reason to force a smile, When pain is really in its place".



"They Won't Go When I Go" is a beauty, and the key song on the album. Steve notes that his "Lying friends" and the "bleeding hearts" won't go when he does. Superficially, this refers to his trip to Africa, but it applies broadly to all areas of true commitment, something he believes in as strongly as anything else. "There ain't no room for the hopeless sinner, Who will take more than he will give".

"Bird Of Beauty" is one more go-round with the druggies: "There is so much for you to feel, unfound in white, red or yellow pills". He urges a mind excursion of a different sort — "ride the bird of beauty in the sky". Amen.

Ah, but the side, and the record, ends on another low note, with "Please Don't Go", another lover's plea. It is a tribute to his genius that he can present this situation, both one of life's most important yet artistically limited of all, over and over in compelling ways. When the words fall off, the music is there to make it go.

He's had a fine life so far, but it's not all been fun, says Fulfillingness's First Finale. And there's so much more to live...

The fold out jacket (you know it's a giant if they get a fold-out cover) is a turning series of plateaus, with keyboard stairs connecting them. On the first we see Little Stevie Wonder, straight out of Detroit, grinning broadly after, no doubt, one more time of "Fingertips". The walls are cracked, the brutal Motor Town Review bus speeds on (Motown used to promote its acts in man-killing one-night packages, say eight or so a show, going on in reverse order of popularity. So it was that people like The Spinners, Four Tops, Gladys Knight & The Pips, Smokey Robinson & The Miracles and Marvin Gaye ground from town to town for peanuts (much less than $1000 a night). A profile of Martin Luther King peers off the side.

Next level shows little Stevie grown up to more wrap-around sunglasses, his name in lights as a headliner. John Kennedy leads a brief, dissolving field of stars. Drums and piano glow with new promise, as he learns to play them and assume more of a role of music-maker. The Motor Town bus is fading into the background, probably due to the fifteen gold records depicted next to the pink bow-tied Wonder.

On front, on the latest level, gleaming wrap-arounds overseeing a whole new vista: children, probably Stevie's, frolic in this one, and from nowhere, a beam of red materializes into a Grammy award (or four awards). But these elements occupy a definite secondary position to a shattered car with a tree jammed into its front seat. Stevie's near-fatal car crash last summer sent him into the hospital, and sent him into a major rethinking of his life. The results can be seen in the wake of the car, as elephants roam the African plains. Stevie Wonder, at the height of his career, decided to go to Africa to help blind children for two years. Always more.

Above it all, silhouetted in the horizon, Stevie's symbolic black bull leads ever on.

Seven or eight of the latest albums including The Kinks and Stevie Wonder

Four levels, all empty, lead onward and upward. It's a certainty that Stevie Wonder will fill them with as much life, if not more, than with which he's filled the first three. A man whose innervisions dwarf most of our sighted ones.

JAMES TAYLOR

Walking Man
James Taylor
Warners W 2794

The consequence and intrigue developed by the release of a new James Taylor have eroded to almost none. James is certainly the least of the musicians dealt with here in this Summer Wrap. And yet he definitely belongs here, as each of his records are reverently and resolutely inhaled by a most faithful segment of the populus.

Up to Brothers & Sister, Sweet Baby James, his second album, ranked as Warner Brothers' biggest seller. My guess as to the continued interest in James, five albums after his Apple James Taylor debut, is along the lines of a classic baseball maxim: "You just need one pitch to get by. If you get one down where you want it, you're all set." James has perfect control of his one pitch, his easy lilting style perfected in "Fire & Rain". James Taylor and Sweet Baby James certainly defined enough of Taylor's groove to satisfy most; it is the truly mellow souls who have followed him through years of repetition. James really has had nothing new to say all this time.

Walking Man enters James into the Superstar Production area, with cover photo by Richard Avedon, the number one Pop photog (snapper of The Beatles, Sly Stone and everyone else with enough dinero), ace horn sectioners like Howard Johnson, Randy and Michael Brecker. Ace wife Carly Simon is of course along, and Paul & Linda McCartney are also on for a bit. Big Stuff.

All of which seems a bit much, resulting in another finely crafted, well-tuned product reflecting almost precisely the docile sensitivity found in every J.T. album.

Well-defined is James Taylor's current condition, pin pointed by Mr. Taylor himself. As a walking man, James is calm, aloof, reasoned (for the most part), conventional (there are only so many ways to walk, and have they all not been walked already?) and (must he not be) pedantic. A bit much of these sessions concerns James, his dog, his guitar, his garden, et al. Occasionally a most pleasant lilt will accompany these unimportant tidings, and James sings very well throughout, but just as occasionally, fogging horn and souping strings inside Muzak Age arrangements come in to tide away whatever good feeling he's built up.

SPARK

KIMONO MY HOUSE
|Island ILPS 9272|
Time: 34:24

Spark's keyboardist and songwriter, Ron Mael, is quite possibly the most unlikely looking candidate for rock star since Andy "Thunderclap" Newman of a few years back. But like Thunderclap Newman, Sparks, up until now a relatively obscure rock group, are a real find in the usually drab world of new musical talent. Ron and lead singing brother Russell Mael form the nucleus of the five man Sparks, and are the only two original members left from the group's last recording, A Woofer in Tweeter's Clothing released over a year ago on Bearsville.

Ron Mael's writing is extremely lyrical and sometimes quite off the wall with frequent rhythm changes and accentuated time bombs making the music as interesting as it is enjoyable. Russell's high tenor voice is the band's most employed instrument with the guitar, keyboards, bass and drums expanding and embellishing the vocal themes.

Perhaps the most impressive aspect of Sparks' music is the lyrical sophistication which transcends the time worn out themes of loving and losing. The closest thing to a love song here is the narcissistic and witty "Falling in Love with Myself Again." ("I bring home the bacon and eat it myself. Here's to my health. Hope that I'm felling well.") "Here in Heaven" laments a poor Romeo's plight over having his Juliet alive and well and living while he is in Heaven where "it's hell knowing that your health will keep you out of here".

Intriguing is really the word to describe much of Sparks' material, which, though reminiscent of the great-though-unknown-highly-literate-British-vocal-rock assemblage Gentle Giant, also has which may help them gain at least reasonable prominence.

Included here is their alluring left field No. 1 in England "This Town Ain't Big Enough For the Both of Us", Sparks' first hit, as well as a couple other amazing tunes with great titles "Talent is an Asset" and "Thank God It's Not Christmas".

Nothing redundant here, Kimono My House captures the essence of Spark's tasty though intense style of play, with all ten songs sounding better with each listening. Muff Winwood, who got in on the ground floor of an earlier British wave (Remember Spencer Davis and brother Stevie) is now producing and has done a splendid job with Sparks. Aaaaaaaah So, a well versed top shelf item

THE KINKS

PRESERVATION ACT 2 — THE KINKS
|RCA CPL2-5040|
Time: 66:56

Ray Davies has always approached his writing with a sense of political and social awareness quite unique in the medium of rock music. From his sarcastic portrayals of the well respected man and the dedicated follower of fashion through his dead end streeters, Arthurs, David Wattses, and Muswell Hillbillies, Davies has constantly been a champion and compassionate spokesman for the little man. Everybody's in Show Biz. Everybody's a star.

Preservation Act 1, which was the first Kinks album after Davies' short retirement, was a political horror story foreshadowing the power struggle which was to ensue in Act 2 between the money hungry opportunist, Flash, and the hypocritical moralist, Black. In Act 1, it was the little man, portrayed by the lowly tramp who was the real victim of the struggle, and it was through the naive, yet ultimately sensitive tramp that Davies makes his most eloquent statements. "Sweet Lady Genevieve" is a Davies classic and stands with "Waterloo Sunset" and "Days" among his best writing.

Musically and thematically, Act 2 builds upon the ideas introduced in the previous work. In many ways, the ambitious nature of the Preservation theme succeeds, if only because the music is not only uniformly excellent but draws from a variety of styles and inspirations. Enough can't be said about Ray's vocals and lyrics. Even his female hot-licklike singers who play the parts of Flash's floosies embellish the musical totality.

Yet with all this going for it, Preservation Act 2 fails to achieve the ultimacy which should be attributable to Davies' writing genius. In the story, after Black's army destroys, humiliates, and finally reconstructs and cleanses the mind of defeated Flash into a melodramatic artificial character, we look back upon the entire legacy to see the cardboard, almost unidimensional character-caricatures which Davies has created. It could be argued that he has done this intentionally in order to focus greater attention on the main theme (which like the recent developments in our own government takes on the implications of Peter Townshend's "Meet the new boss, same as the old boss.") and the music itself. Yet Davies, who in the past has painted such vivid characterizations could have made the Preservations real masterpieces rather than fine records had his characters not lacked the real essences of the human fiber. Good guys and bad guys, sure, but the usually brilliant insights and dimensions are conspicuously absent.

Ray Davies has been working on a stage production of Preservation which will surely be first class and will hopefully fill in some of the blanks. Until then, and so as not to give the wrong impression, Preservation Act 2 is right up there in the stratified league with the very best of 1974, and ranks among Davies' and the Kinks' finest hours.

BAD COMPANY

BAD COMPANY
Time: 34:35

As recently as early 1973, a group called Free existed, led by singer Paul Rogers who many have called the best male vocalist in rock. Free's music was typified by heavy yet laid back rockers such as "All Right Now" and "The Stealer" and by strong ballads like "Don't Say You Love Me" and "Be My Friend", always marked by Rogers' powerful up-front voice. Free's break up, like that of Family went unnoticed in the U.S. except for a few staunch loyalists, though in England, Free's demise, for reasons of incompatibility was big news. Soon after their break up, a limited-edition-collectors-item 2 record set, The Free Story was released to commemorate the group's existence.

Around the time Free hung it up, guitarist-songwriter Mick Ralphs became disillusioned with his band, Mott the Hoople. Rogers and Ralphs actually began writing together before banding together. When they decided to congeal their plans to play together, Simon Kirke, also from Free, was the automatic choice for drummer, and bassist Boz Burrell who was taught his

Stage/West announces new season

The team that was a legend, the 1952 Pennsylvania State High School basketball champions, hold a reunion, and the Stage is set for the exciting opening of State-West's 1974-75 Theatre Season.

"That Championship Season" by Jason Miller marks the beginning of the eighth and most ambitious year to date at Stage-West: Massachusetts' only Resident Professional Theatre Company.

In addition to the award winning drama, there will be two world premieres, a musical and two comedies, one wacky and way out, the other warm and familiar, in the season that will run from November thru May.

Opening November 2nd, "That Championship Season" shows us four superb athletes and their coach 22 years after that big game. It's a dramatic look at what happens to men who shared a moment of glory together as the years take their toll.

The winner of the Pulitzer Prize, the Tony Award and the 1973 New York Drama Critics Award, "That Championship Season," has had critical acclaim wherever it's been produced.

Stephen E. Hays, Managing Director of State-West, feels very fortunate at having been able to get special rights to do the highly acclaimed production.

A brand new musical based on Carlo Goldoni's "The Servant of Two Masters" opens December 7th. The famous Italian comedy has been freely adapted into musical form by State-West's Artistic Director, John Ulmer, in collaboration with Composer, Thomas Babbit.

Babbit will be remembered for his musical work in last season's production of "The Drunkard" and "Private Lives". He and Ulmer promise to take the already rollicking comedy of disguises and mistaken identities and turn it into an evening of the American Musical at its finest.

Paul Foster, author of such New York successes as "Tom Paine" and "Elizabeth I" takes a bizarre view of the assassination of Julius Caesar in his play "Marcus Brutus" written especially for Stage-West. The January 11th opening marks the most important world premiere in the theatre's eight year history.

Can Brutus be stopped from committing the murder? Are we in ancient Rome or a New York apartment in the 1970's? These and other fantastic questions arise as the audience is engulfed with the key figures in one of history's first brutal political assassinations.

Under negotiation to direct the premiere is Tom O'Horgan, who has directed such Broadway hits as "Hair", "Lenny", "Jesus Christ, Superstar" and one of Paul Foster's previous works "Tom Paine".

February is Valentine's season and with it a play for all of us who have ever loved with the warm family comedy "Promenade All", by David V. Robinson.

"Promenade All" follows the story of an American family from the 1890's to the 1970's. With only four actors in the cast, we watch them from youth to old age to death and then youth again in the form of the next generation.

"Promenade All" will run from February 15th thru March 8th, followed by the March 22nd opening of a play still to be announced.

Rounding out the season will be the April 19th production of "One Flew Over the Cuckoo*'s Nest" by Dale Wasserman.*

Based on the famous novel by Ken Kesey, "One Flew Over the Cuckoo's Nest" is a tragi-comedy pitting a man determined to give the people their freedom against an oppressive foe.

The twist is that the action of the play takes place in a State Mental Institution. The hero is a convict, who has been pronounced criminally insane. The foe, one Nurse Ratched, who is determined to control and destroy the hospital inmates. What our hero does to Nurse Ratched adds up to be one of the craziest offbeat comedies seen in years.

"One Flew Over the Cuckoo's Nest" a different kind of comedy that helps to make Stage-West's eighth year of operation "A Championship Season".

WHERE TO FIND A GOOD FLICK

A guide to area movie theatres

by Judith Wolinsky-Soloway

ACADEMY OF MUSIC - 274 Main St., downtown Northampton, 584-8435 One of the most interesting historical sites in Northampton, the Academy of Music is the sixth oldest theatre in the United States. Formerly the scene of live travelling shows featuring such performers as the Barrymores and Sarah Bernhardt, the Academy now shows the best in foreign and domestic films. Admission Wed. - Sun. - $2.00, Mon. & Tues. - $1.00. Complete with balcony, the Academy brings back the flavor of the good old days.

AMHERST CINEMA — 30 Amity, center of Amherst. 253-5426 The Amherst Cinema is known for presenting foreign and college-oriented films. Admission Wed. - Sun. - $2.00, Mon. & Tues. - $1.00. "Student I.D. Card" is $1.00 which entitles purchaser to all future admissions for $1.00. On street parking and lot next door. The theatre's interior should be completely remodelled by the start of school.

CALVIN THEATRE — 19 King, Northampton, 584-2310 Showing family-oriented films, this older theatre, complete with balcony, is in downtown Northampton. Evening showtimes are generally 7:00 and 9:00, admission Wed. - Sun. - $2.00, Mon. & Tues. - $1.00. Street parking.

CAMPUS CINEMAS — Route 9, Hadley (next to Zayre), 256-6411 The 3 theatres located under one roof, each seating approximately 450 people, presents all kinds of films, mostly current selections, occasionally an old film. There is a large parking lot, handicapped access, air-conditioning, and weekend matinees. Wed. - Sun. - $2.00, Mon. & Tues. - $1.00

GARDEN THEATRE — Main Street., Greenfield, 774-4881 Located in the heart of downtown Greenfield, the Garden of current selection. Opened in the early 1900's, the Garden's 1300 seat theatre has a ceiling painted to resemble a starry sky and scenic paintings on the walls. There is Main St. parking and a municipal lot about a block away. Admission Wed. - Sun. - $2.00, Mon. & Tues. - $1.00.

GLOBE CINEMA — 25 Pleasant, downtown Northampton, 586-0935 The Globe is one of those small out-of-the way theatres you may have been trying to find for ages, a movie theatre that presents unusual films and film combinations of all periods and styles. Where else could you see Micky Mouse films and Warhol's "Trash" on the same bill? Admission - Wed. - Sun. - $1.75, Mon. & Tues. - $1.00. Fellini's masterpiece "Satyricon" is scheduled to open August 28. Street parking and in a lot behind building.

HADLEY DRIVE-IN, Route 9, Hadley, 584-2685 Located a short distance past the Mountain Farms Mall on right. Show films of different ratings, however, leans to more R-rated films than others. Admission - $2.00., Mon & Tues. - "Date Nights" - One member of the couple is admitted free.

MAJESTIC THEATRE - 82¼ Cottage, Easthampton, 527-2346 This is the area theatre that presents the latest in skin flicks. Sat. - Thurs. - Double features, Fridays - one show at 9:00 only. Located in center of Easthampton, on-street parking.

MOUNTAIN FARMS FOUR THEATRES — Russell, Hadley, 584-9153 Nestled among the stores in the mall, the 4 individual theatres with a total seating capacity of 1,200 offers a varied current film program. Admission - $2.00. Student Discount Card - $1.50, entitles purchases to pay $1.50 from then on. During "Twilight Hour" the one-half hour before the first evening showing, admission is $1.25. Handicapped access, weekend matinees, air conditioning. For the first two weeks of Fall Semester, there will be a Mountain Farms Mall express bus travelling between UMass and the Mall which is good news to moviegoers without transportation.

SHOWPLACE CINEMA — 25 Chapman, Greenfield, 773-8043 The Showplace is the other of the two movie theatre in downtown Greenfield. The presentation are the current films on the market. Admission - $2.00. Parking spaces in front of theatre, parking lot down the street.

McDONALD'S®
COLLEGIATE SWEEPSTAKES

It could be the highlight of the whole term

There are two brand new reasons to come to McDonald's in Hadley. Aside from our great food and low prices, of course. First, we've totally redecorated the store and added all kinds of new seating. That means you can bring the whole dorm down for a late night snack and still find a seat.

Now the best part. We're also holding a big flashy sweepstakes with plenty of prizes awarded every week from August 30 to September 22. If you win, you could be the first one on your quad with a genuine McDonald's backpack. Or a 3-book desk reference set. A high intensity lamp for high intensity exams. Or any of dozens of great prizes. You might even win our grand prize, an expensive new Polaroid SX-70 camera. Which is a great prize really. Until you compare it to a McDonald's backpack.

All you have to do is stop in each week you want to enter and fill out an entry blank or two. Or three or four, or as many as you want. We'll award our really great prizes every week for three full weeks. And then, to make our grand prize really special, Ronald McDonald will show up at 3PM Sunday, September 22 to award the camera personally. He'll even stick around 'til 5 to answer all your questions.

So don't miss your chance. Enter now, and enter often. Who knows, you may end up winning something really neat.

Sweepstakes rules:
- You may enter as often as you like, no purchase is necessary.
- Grand prize is valued at $150.
- Weekly prizes are valued at $100 per week.
- The odds of winning will be determined by the number of entries.
- Entry deadline is 3 p.m. Sunday, September 22.

instrument by none less than Robert Fripp for his work with King Crimson around the Islands phase, completed the Bad Company line up. A new quasi-super-group was formed, and like with most super and quasi-super-groups, the calculated and immence media push was on.

As expected, Bad Company has a sound reminiscent, more than anything else of that of the old Free, the primary result of both Rogers' voice and the basically simple 4-4 structures around which the songs are constructed. Every song on Bad Company is most credible, with the Free formula of rockers and ballads the rule here as well. Mick Ralph's nifty lead off number, "Can't Get Enough" became a substantial British hit and is representative of the solid hard rock which Bad Company is ultimately most comfortable with. Another Ralph composition, "Ready For Love" which Mott recorded on Young Dudes is also here in a buttered up state. Rogers and Ralphs co-wrote the two real ballads, "Don't Let Me Down" and "Seagull", the latter especially well done and featuring Paul Rogers playing everything.

Bad Company was recorded last November, only weeks after the group's formation and is certainly not only a foreshadowing but an example of the clearly high quality English rock which this band is so capable of. It comes at a time when there is a pronounced absence of fresh and original hard rock. With the record season's home stretch fast approaching, Bad Company is still best bet for rock record of the year. Does your mama know?

THE MOVE

THE BEST OF THE MOVE – THE MOVE
|A&M SP 3625|

One of the real musical mysteries of our time would have to be the failure of England's Move to receive their deserved dues on this side of the Atlantic. Originally formed in 1966, The Move was initially made up of musicians who had been eeking out livings playing pubs, clubs, and unoriginal material.

Founder Roy Wood rapidly became the group's writing dynamo, and with the aid of an outrageous show which included demolishing televisions on stage, the Move rapidly became a major British act. Even back then, Wood had the capacity to write and perform many different kinds of material with a sophistication, wit, insight, and sarcastic confrontation of reality which was a rare gift shared only by a handful of other greats such as Ray Davies, Peter Townshend, Lennon and McCartney.

From their initial hit single, "Night of Fear", a tune which melded the classical theme of the "1812 Overture" with rock music and sardonic lyrics, it was apparent to all who heard that here was a group to be dealt with. The B-side of that single was a frightening, trippy song called "The Disturbance" which brought the schizoid world of an unbalanced human onto a 43 rpm record. "Night of Fear" as well as it's follow up "I Can Hear the Grass Grow" were originally released in the United States on Deram records but got virtually no spin. The Move's subsequent move to A&M didn't help much with "Flowers in the Rain" getting only minimal airplay despite continued top 5 action in England.

Roy Wood's writing became more commercial for the ensuing singles releases and more ambitious for the album tracks. Until The Best of The Move, Shazam, a rock hallmark was the group's only album on A&M. "Fire Brigade", "Blackberry Way", and "Brontosaurus" all hit close to England's top, but still no action stateside. The group's only American tour had to be aborted after only three stops as a result of poor planning and this was a major blow to the Move's chances of U.S. acceptance.

It wasn't until two labels and three records later that the Move finally reached the American Hot 100 (with "Do Ya") and ironically it was a) after the group had disbanded, and b) written by Jeff Lynne, a late addition to the group's line up. "Do Ya" as well as four other single sides and a number of songs from the also classic, cut-out-on-Capitol Message From the Country, were included on Split Ends, the first post-mortum collection of Move material to be issued in the U.S.

The 2-records-for-the-price-of-one Best of the Move is the second such collection, and features not only all of the early singles but also the group's renditions of Moby Grape's "Hey Grandma" and a wonderful version of James Hanley's "Zing Went the Strings of My Heart" sung tenderly as only drummer Bev "Don't Mess Me Up" Bevan can. One entire record is devoted to the inclusion of the First Move album, available up until now only in the choicest of import bins.

The Move's break up has led to the formation of the Electric Light Orchestra, Roy Wood's Wizzard, and the furthering of Wood's solo career. Only Wood's brilliant Boulders approaches the consistently high musical caliber of what was once the Move, making The Best of the Move an even more important and historic item. It's about time someone got on the Move.

Eat to keep trim and healthy

If you are a college freshperson-to-be, you are likely to put on the pounds at school this fall.

The proximity of food, the smell, sound, sight and taste of it and sheer boggling bulk of it in splendid cafeteria array—these are the cues that will give you th urge of overeat or eat the wrong foods.

Helping you to control that ultimately fattening urge are the friendly cues of hunger (so eat), and unhunger (so stop eating).

Do choose cafeteria instead of family-style meals so you can select the less starchy foods; also, once you've sat down, you 're likeely to make the trip through the line for seconds.

More tips for keeping trim and healthy on campus:

Don't play the local vending machines. If you're tempted, play for lower calories and higher nutrition.

Do eat breakfast; it helps keep you from overeating at lunch and dinner.

Do take a nutrition course if it's offered.

Don't overdoes yourself with vitamins; take the recommended daily requirements.

Do try to exercise regularly or at least make yourself walk more.

Get enough sleep; it's absolutely necessary for mental and physical health.

Remember to weigh yourself before you leave for school; weigh yourself again after you've been there a month. If you've gained, do something about it right away!

EATING AROUND TOWN

quality, informal atmosphere, and strictly seafood. Limited wine list, featuring Paul Masson wines. On Route 9 in Northampton center.

Rusty Scupper is fairly popular; our biggest objection is that the menu is printed on an oar, which seems sort of gimmicky. But the food and salad bar are adequate, catering mostly to older students. Superb bar on the second floor loft, with quiet entertainment some nights. On Route 9 towards Belchertown.

The Captain's Table in Northampton is gaining in popularity among Amherst folk, and the lobster special ($3.95) comes highly recommended. More formal than, say, Jack August.

The Lighthouse features fresh fish, everything from steamed clams to lobster. Informal and inexpensive, it's open for lunch and dinner every day, on Route 116 towards Sunderland.

ETHNIC

Goten is a hibachi style Japanese restaurant, featuring steak and chicken. The food is delicate and attractive, and you certainly get your money's worth here. You're seated with six to eight others at a table which doubles as a heating element. The Japanese chef cooks right in front of you, and his performance, both visual and tactile, is worth applause. Expect to spend $15 per couple. On Route 116 in Sunderland.

The Wok, on Route 9 in Hadley, is an Asian restaurant with an attractive dining room with trails of hanging plants. Chinese food (the real thing!), and modest prices.

For Greek food, there's Zorba's Tavern in Northampton.

Beardsley's in Northampton is not exactly ethnic, but it has outstanding pseudo-continental dishes. Decorated with Aubrey Beardsley and other art nouveau fixtures, the specialties here are Coquille St. Jacques and Boeuf Bourguinon. Excellent honey ice cream and English custard. Well-seasoned meat and vegetables, specializing in natural foods.

The Alamo is a Mexican restaurant, notably a dive. Good Mexican food, though (and remember, it's HOT!). Dinners only, Market St. in Northampton. Bring your own bottle.

HOME COOKING

When you finally come to realize that your mother is one of the best cooks in the world, and when you start hunting for cuisine which even slightly resembles hers, you might want to try Miss Florence Diner, in Florence (Route 9).

An area legend, it's been said that you can't get your diploma until you've been to Flo's. And when you go, you'll want to go again, that's how great it is. It's informal (here's where you stick your elbows on the table), low-priced, entertaining (a trip in itself to watch the waitresses and cooks in action), and high quality — especially the home-made desserts. Well worth the long drive, and make sure you're good and hungry. The menu is diverse as they come, and every item on it is excellent. The chef's special is perpetually a bargain. Sort of makes you wonder why food of inferior quality is so much more expensive elsewhere.

Directly in back of Flo's, and sharing the same kitchen, is Alexander's. The prices here are about a dollar more, but you're paying for the restaurant atmosphere (as opposed to the diner), and the availability of liquor.

Not quite as good as Flo's, but worth mentioning, is St. Regis Cafe in Northampton (next to Sheehan's cafe). The custom is to coat your stomach at St. Regis (try the Canadian meat pie), and then on to Sheehan's for a few cold ones. Make a Friday afternoon project out of it.

The Bluebonnet Diner on King St. in Northampton which has good hot meals and sandwiches, but not nearly the variety that Flo's offers.

Equinox, on North Pleasant St., is a cozy little health foods-natural foods place. The menu changes every day, and it's all different and unusual.

The Lord Jeffrey is an Amherst landmark. It's well decorated, but we've never heard any comments about the food. The heart of Amherst College. We've received positive reports on the new Sundown Saloon bar there.

The Grist Mill, on Route 116 towards South Hadley, is Yankee colonial food of excellent quality. A great place to take your folks.

If you'd like to find out more about these restaurants ... well, you've got four years here to discover them yourself.

WE KNEW IT, AND NOW KENT STATE AGREES

"The most desirage weight reduction programs include exercise. Diet alone may achieve a reduction in skinfold and girth measurements, but a combination of exercise and diet has produced more desirable changes in body composition, according to a study at Kent State University reported by William Z. Zuti and Laurence A. Goulding."

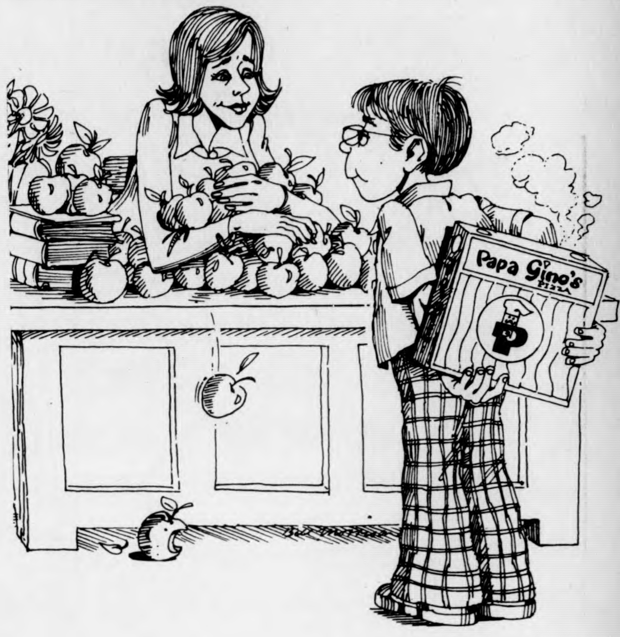
Pizza for the Teacher!



Papa Gino's PIZZA

Papa Gino has something a whole lot tastier than an apple to give your teacher.

It's a "Pizza for the Teacher" gift certificate. It gives your teacher a free slice of Papa's delicious pizza (or 50¢ off one of his large pizzas)!

And it even tells the teacher how to take your class to Papa Gino's for Pizza School.

So come into any participating Papa Gino's and get a "Pizza for the Teacher" gift certificate. It's free with any purchase until September 15, 1974.

Papa's got a nice surprise for everyone who isn't a teacher, too: 50¢ off a large pizza!

This coupon is worth 50¢ toward the purchase of one large (family size) pizza at participating Papa Gino's Restaurants up to the date of expiration. Limit: one coupon per large pizza purchase. Cash value: 1/100 cent. Papa Gino's of America, Inc., Needham, Mass. 02194.

The UMass Board of Trustees yesterday unanimously approved the appointment of Dr. George S. Odiorne as Dean of the School of Business Administration. Odiorne has been Dean of the College of Business at the University of Utah for the past five years.

He is responsible for a managerial system known as "Management by Objectives" and has published 14 books and numerous articles. The trustees also voted to approve Odiorne's appointment as a tenured professor of management.

The University Operating Budget for fiscal 1975 was also unanimously accepted by the Trustees. The budget of $154.4 million represents a $20-million increase over the previous budget and reflects operating cost increases as well as expansion of the Boston and Worcester campuses.

The Trustees also voted to extend for one year the program offering tuition waivers to undergraduate residence hall counselors.

UMass President Robert Wood announced that he will be making a public statement today concerning the "urgent needs and requirements of higher education around the country." He expressed his belief that the coming state elections offer an excellent opportunity to direct legislative concern to the question of state funded higher education.

Chancellor Randolph Bromery noted that the entering class of 3,778 represents "the first time we have almost equal amounts of men and women registering as freshmen".

Near the close of the Board meeting, the Trustees heard Vincent Terrell, a guest lecturer in theater arts at UMass Boston, present a petition charging the University with racial descrimination. Saying that there have been "roadblocks thrown up against me and my students in our work at the Boston Harbor Campus," Terrell asked the Trustees to review documents in his possession concerning the state's affirmative action program. Terrell said he has also filed complaints with HEW and the Equal Opportunity Commission as well as sending a petition to Governor Francis W. Sargent.

In other action the Trustees approved a plan which would radically change the design and use of the physical education building proposed for the new Columbia Point campus. The Trustees also approved a preliminary proposal for the establishment of College IV at UMass Boston. The college will tentatively be named the "College of Professional Studies," its first offering will be a Program of Management. There are proposals to include an undergraduate major in architecture in the future.

Political Feud rages over Belchertown

By MARK VOGLER
Staff Correspondent

Two years ago UMass professor Benjamin Ricci sparked a Federal district court suit against the Commonwealth for inhumane conditions existing at Belchertown State School.

The issue of how retarded citizens are treated figured highly in the local House race in the last election. But has the state changed its tune since then? In a two-part series the Collegian takes a look at the Belchertown suit and how it has developed into a campaign consideration in this fall's gubernatorial race.

"The humanization of Belchertown State School will become a reality because the Belchertown Friends resorted to the court of law — the United States District Couut.

"The reforms are not the result of Governor Sargent's sympathy, Secretary Goldmark's goodness, or Attorney General Quinn's advocacy... Massachusetts government lost; the citizens of Massachusetts won. The retarded of Massachusetts benefit."
— UMass Professor Benjamin Ricci

IF the retarded citizens of Massachusetts could vote in this fall's elections, neither Gov. Francis W. Sargent nor Atty. Gen. Robert H. Quinn would profit.

The state's top two officials — both leading gubernatorial race figures — have long pledged their continued support to the mentally deprived.

However, the record of the Belchertown State School suit reveals that the political opponents have been guilty of bi-partisan neglect of the Commonwealth's retarded.

Although the Belchertown State School Friends Association won their historic court battle against the state last November for inhumane conditions existing at the institution, a major renovation project may be seriously delayed because two employes have refused to vacate buildings which a U.S. District Court consent decree ordered emptied.

For not taking action on this recent matter, the Governor and the Attorney General have failed to honor fully the $2.6-million court settlement.

Friends Association President Benjamin Ricci warned of a political explosion after chief power engineer Charles Carr and head farmer Joseph F. McCrea obtained a temporary injunction to block eviction notices last week.

As a result the two employes will remain on the property and both sides in the dispute have indicated that they will appeal whatever decision is reached in Hampshire County Superior Court — thus delaying the eviction still further.

Dr. Ricci called Sargent and Quinn's response to the matter "typical" of their action since the suit — the first one in the country filed by a mental institution — was filed two years ago.

"Neither Gov. Sargent nor Atty. Gen. Robert Quinn has advocated for the retarded — they are not friends of the retarded," Dr. Ricci said.

"Both persons and their staffs fought us for almost two years in Federal Court, but they suffered a humiliating defeat. Although the Attorney General's office, which represented the defendants, was fully aware of the consent decree, Mr. Quinn has not vigerously sought to evict the two employes."

Noting that Quinn had contested many of the allegations initially brought against the Commonwealth in the Belchertown suit, state Human Services Secretary Peter Goldmark accused Quinn of trying to play the issue to his own political advantage while actually stalling the court process.

Sources within the administration have said Goldmark considered quitting this summer because of intense turmoil within the Department of Mental Health and mounting pressure from Sargent's political opponents.

However, the Governor reportedly rejected the resignation on the grounds that it could possibly damage his re-election bid.

Meanwhile Democratic gubernatorial candidate Michael Dukakis, who will oppose Quinn in Tuesday's primary, called the administration's behavior on the Belchertown matter "shameful" and urged the Governor and the Attorney General to cooperate fully in resolving the Fernald suit expeditiously to avoid another Belchertown.

The consensus of the Special Legislative Commission Investigating Conditions at Belchertown State School and Monson State Hospital is that Sargent and Quinn have been "playing political football" at the expense of the retarded.

"Both are trying to take political advantage out of what is a demeaning failure of this administration," Sen. John W. Olver, chairman of the commission said.

"There's been a hell of a lot of foot dragging from both sides. The Governor is clearly at fault for remaining insensitive to the entire matter. And there has been no evidence that the Attorney General has objected to the state's questionable behavior."

Rape bill signed

By FRITS GEURTSEN
MDC Staff

A bill concerned with establishing a system for the improved reporting and prosecution of the crime of rape and for improved counselling of victims of rape was recently signed into law by Governor Francis W. Sargent and will go into effect Oct. 22, according to David L. Johnston, Director of Public Safety at UMass.

House bill No. 6392 provides that "there shall be within the police department of every city and town, or grouping of cities and towns, a rape reporting and prosecution unit which shall be designed to improve the quality of rape reporting, counselling and prosecution."

Each unit shall make use "of such counselors, attorneys, and medical personnel as are necessary to provide a broad range of therapeutic services for the victim of rape" and shall establish "a special telephone exchange for the reporting of rape".

And thirdly "All reports of rape and sexual assault or attempts to commit such offenses and all conversations between police officers and victims of said offenses shall not be public reports and shall be maintained by the police departments in a manner which will insure their confidentiality."

Johnston reported that a rape unit would be set up to service Hampshire and Franklin counties and expressed hope that some of his officers would be chosen to work with the unit.

"Another of the bill's provisions," said Johnston, "is that each of the units must make special efforts to employ women police officers. We're one of the few forces in the area who do so. We're also the only local force which currently has a rape hot-line."

Johnston added that Diana White, Special Assistant to the UMass Department of Public Safety was asked by the Massachusetts Police Training Counsel to be a member of the advisory committee on the rape units.

UMass Rape Hotline is 5-2121.

Richie Havens has canceled his appearance at today's Summer's End Fest due to sickness.

Other events will proceed as scheduled from noon to midnight at the Southwest Athletic Field.

Getting things together at 12 noon will be the moving sounds of the Charles Greene group, followed by the dynamic Jerry Moore and Martha Velez. The evening will be filled with the nostalgic sounds of the Beatles performed by the group called Liverpool.

Logan Pilot's Captor Surrenders

BOSTON [AP] — A young black man demanding $100,000 for the poor surrendered peacefully yesterday after holding an Eastern Air Lines pilot hostage aboard a jetliner at Logan International Airport, authorities said.

The FBI identified the man as Marshall Collins III, 20, of Providence, R.I. He was charged with air piracy.

Armed with a straight razor, a rusty nail and a hatchet-like weapon, Collins held Capt. L. E. Whitaker of New York City hostage aboard the DC9 for over three hours, said FBI Special Agent James O. Newpher.

Whitaker, locked in the cockpit alone with Collins, suffered minor cuts from the weapons.

Phonothon produces

The UMass community has begun reaping the benefits of last semester's regional and Student Phonothon which raised more than $190,000.

Over $50,000, or one quarter of the expendable funds, was allocated for scholarships. This year, 70 freshmen were awarded tuition scholarships in the new Alumni Scholars project.

The other $29,000 became part of the general University awards. $45,000 is being used for Special Academic programs including B.D.I.C., Honors, Outreach, Everywomen's Center and Faculty Growth Grants for Teaching. Nearly $21,000 has been allocated for library acquisitions and $19,000 for fine arts acquisitions and underwriting performances for the Fine Arts Center inaugural.

Also allocated alumni dollars was the marching band who received $5000 to attend some away games, Institute for Man and His Environment ($4,000) and athletics ($3,000) as restricted gifts from individuals.

Brenda Rau, one of the organizers, said she is "super" pleased with the results of last year's phonothon.

She said there will be a bigger phonothon this year with more student participation, hopefully. In addition, the phonothon will run longer than the one month it ran last semester.

Pulitzer winners to teach JS courses

Two Pulitzer Prize-winning journalists will be teaching courses this semester in the Journalistic Studies Program of the University, the head of the UMass program said yesterday.

In addition, Journalistic Studies for the first time will be offering courses in photojournalism and Journalism and Public Education, Prof. Howard M. Ziff said.

The prize-winning journalists are Roger B. Linscott, chief editorial writer of the Berkshire Eagle and Robert Healy, executive editor of the Boston Globe and the paper's political columnist.

Linscott will be teaching a seminar in editorial writing. He won the Pulitzer Prize for his 1972 editorials about the presidential election in which his paper endorsed Sen. George McGovern.

Healy is coordinating a lecture series which will include members of the Boston Globe Washington bureau talking about the resignation of President Nixon and prospects in the political future. Details of the series will be announced shortly.

Healy will also conduct a seminar in political reporting.

The photojournalism course will be taught by William Curtis, a Boston Globe staff photographer.

The course in journalism and problems of public education will be offered by Ms. Polly deSherbinin, education writer for the Amherst Record whose articles have appeared in national journals.

"Ms. deSherbinin's course will be particularly useful for those students planning reporting careers, since covering local school boards is often a beginning assignment," Ziff said.

Another new course in the journalism program is being offered this fall by Professor Adam Yarmolinsky, Ralph Waldo Emerson professor.

Professor Yarmolinsky's seminar will deal with journalism and the establishing of major public policies.

Professor Yarmolinsky was a White House aide and Defense Department official under the late President John F. Kennedy.

Professor Ziff said enrollment in the new courses is limited by a few places are still available for the Healy, deSherbinin and Yarmolinsky courses. Interested students should contact Professor Ziff in his office, E-12N Machmer Hall. His office hours will be 1-4 today and 9-noon Friday.

Hatch gets face lift

By MIKE KNEELAND

The Hatch Cafeteria is taking on a new look — all in the interest of service planners say.

Phil Amico, director of the Campus Center Food Services, said the serving line service will "speed up".

Multi-colored partitions now block the view of the serving line to students eating at tables. These partitions will also change the flow of customers to provide faster service Amico said.

The serving counter has undergone some electrical work so that foods may be prepared and kept warm, thus eliminating time while orders of french fries, for instance, are being prepared.

Amico said this is within the concept of making the Hatch a "fast food service."

Aside from the efficiency angle, Amico said the partitions will also make the Hatch more attractive and will "better merchandise the room at night."

What about the food itself? Amico says there will be more variety. Fried chicken, available by piece and the bucket, fish and chips, and deli-sandwiches will be available each day. In addition, 99-cent meals will be available at both lunch and supper.

In the past, the director said, food items were not duplicated at both entrances to the counter. Now, he said, items will be available on each side.

Amico said the remodeling and improvements have not been expensive because most of the work was done by the staff. The cost was paid by Food Services.

Amico said there will be at least the same number of workers in the Hatch, "if not more."

UMass professor to serve as HUD Jurror

Dr. Ervin H. Zube, director of the Institute for Man and Environment at the University of Massachusetts, has been invited by U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development Secretary James T. Lynn, to serve as a juror for the Sixth Biennial HUD Awards for Design Excellence to be held Sept. 4-6 in Washington, D.C.

The awards program invites entries from architects, planners, engineers and other design professionals, builders and developers, and local governments and public agencies for work undertaken under a financial assistance program of HUD or its predecessor, the Housing and Home Finance Agency.

The categories of entry for the 1974 awards include Management Approaches, Project Design and Urban Design Concepts. Cited for past awards have been projects ranging from small housing developments and play areas through neighborhood facilities and college housing to large scale urban renewal and rehabilitation programs.

A 1972 award winner was the Village Park housing project in Amherst, owned jointly by the DCA Development Corporation and Interfaith of Amherst.

Dr. Zube, a professor of landscape architecture, will be joining a six-member jury to judge entries on the basis of design quality, with particular emphasis on the relation of designs to the immediate and total environment, and to user and community benefits.

U.S. and East Germany establish diplomatic ties

WASHINGTON [UPI] — The United States and Communist East Germany, agreeing that the status of West Berlin should not be changed and that Americans should be compensated for Nazi oppression, established diplomatic relations yesterday after 29 years of Cold War animosity.

President Ford nominated former Kentucky Sen. John Sherman Cooper, 73, to be first U. S. Ambassador to East Germany, never before recognized diplomatically by the United States.

The agreement was signed in a low-key ceremony at the State Department by Ambassador Herbert Suess of East Germany and assistant Secretary of State for European Affairs Arthur Hartman.

"In establishing relations," a State Department announcement said, "the U. S. government proceeds on the basis that the location and the functioning of an American embassy in East Berlin, where it will be convenient to the government offices with which it will deal, will not affect the special legal status of the Berlin area."

Officials said that the next step toward normalization of relations would be the pressing of United States claims for financial compensation for American companies and citizens who lost property to the Nazis during World War II and to nationalization by East Germany after the war.

An official indicated the negotiation of claims would be difficult because the East Germans took the position during negotiations in July and August that they, themselves, were the victims of Nazi oppression and could not assume responsibility for others who suffered.

He said reparations negotiations are expected to start possibly within a year.

The agreement meant Berlin would continue to be administered by a four-power commission consisting of the United States, Britain, France and the Soviet Union, an official said.

Cooper, a Republican, was U. S. ambassador to India in 1955-56 and was a member of the U. S. delegation to the United Nations in 1949-51. He assisted in reorganizing the German judicial system after World War II as a military legal officer.

Bush named head of Peking office

WASHINGTON [UPI] — President Ford yesterday appointed George H. W. Bush to be chief of the U. S. Liaison Office in Peking, and recommended Mary Louise Smith of Iowa to succeed Bush as co-chairman of the Republican National Committee.

Bush will replace Ambassador David K. E. Bruce, 76, who was called out of retirement by President Nixon in 1973 to open the first U. S. mission in Peking when the United States ended its policy of isolation against the People's Republic of China and established sub-diplomatic relations for the first time in 22 years.

In a series of major appointments, White House Press Secretary J. F. terHorst also disclosed the President was naming:

—Former Sen. John Sherman Cooper, R-Ky. 73 a former ambassador to New Delhi, to be the first U. S. ambassador to East Germany. The United States Tuesday signed a document with East German officials at the State Department formally establishing diplomatic relations with the German Democratic Republic.

—Kenneth Rush, 64, economic counsellor to both President Nixon and to President Ford, to replace John N. Irwin II, as U. S. Ambassador to France.

—William D. Rogers, 47, a Washington attorney and former State Department official of the Kennedy administration, to replace Jack Kubisch as Assistant Secretary of State for Inter-American Affairs. Kubisch was earlier named by Ford to be ambassador to Greece.

TerHorst said he was "not aware of any consideration" currently being given by the White House to naming Sen. J. William Fulbright, outgoing chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, to replace Walter H. Annenberg as ambassador in London.

Haig might head NATO

WASHINGTON [UPI] — Administration sources said yesterday that President Ford plans to name White House Chief of Staff Alexander M. Haig Jr. to command all NATO forces in Europe - an appointment opposed by at least one of the 14 allies which must approve it.

If selected by the President, Haig would return to his old Army rank of four-star general and replace Gen. Andrew Goodpaster as the European allied commander.

But Dutch government sources were quoted in Brussels as saying that the Netherlands foreign minister, Max van der Stoel, has misgivings about Haig because of his long association with President Nixon and is sounding out other NATO members on possible joint efforts to block the nomination.

Administration officials said Haig would be a "logical" man for the NATO job in light of his long involvement in foreign affairs.

Ehrlichman subpoenas White House files

WASHINGTON [UPI] — John D. Ehrlichman, who already has subpoenaed former President Richard Nixon to testify at the Watergate cover-up trial, now has subpoenaed the Secret Service to surrender hundreds of Nixon-era documents still locked in White House vaults, it was disclosed yesterday.

The subpoena, issued Aug. 29 and made public late yesterday, orders that the papers be delivered in federal court at 10 a.m. EDT on Sept. 16.

It is addressed to H. S. Knight, director of the United States Secret Service, "as custodian of presidential papers White House files."

Though court records indicated the subpoena has not yet been served, a spokesman for the Secret Service said it was received yesterday afternoon.

Ehrlichman, one of six men to go on trial Sept. 8 in the cover-up case, demanded that Knight come to court and bring with him vast numbers of papers from the period of June 17, 1972, through May 1, 1973

June 17 was the day five men were arrested with bugging gear at the Watergate offices of the Democratic National Committee and May 1 was the day following a major upheaval in the White House staff in the wake of scandal - including the resignations of Ehrlichman and H. R. Haldeman and the firing of John W. Dean III.

For that period, Ehrlichman asked for:

—All his personal papers relating to the Watergate burglary and the intelligence-gathering operation at the Nixon campaign that led to it,

Abolish prisons!

BY JOSEPH S. PINSKY

Prisons and jails should be abolished. They should not exist. They should be razed to the ground. The men and women now behind bars should be allowed to go free.

There should be no guards, no entrenched prison bureaucracy, no wardens, no prison psychologists, no shock-therapy administrators, no behavior-modifiers, no isolation units, no maximum, medium, or minimum security prisons. There should simply be no prisons at all. The men and women now behind their walls should be freed. There is no greater hypocrisy or injustice, save war, then the continued existence of these prisons and jails.

Why are people in prison? People are mostly in prison because they are poor and usually because they're black or Puerto Rican: non-white.

FBI crime statistics for 1970 indicate that blacks accounted for 53.3 percent of all those arrested for murder, rape, robbery, and assault, and 32.8 percent of arrests for the property crimes of burglary, larceny, and auto theft. In a state like New York, 70 percent of the inmate popuation is black. In Illinois blacks are 52 percent, in California 45 percent , in Mississippi 75 percent.

Most so-called crimes are labelled "crimes aginst property." This means that "somebody took something that didn't belong to him." People spend years behind bars, like animals, for emptying cash registers of liquor stores, supermarkets, fur salons, jewelry stores, etc.

This is a society where everybody "owns" property. I might own a toothbrush, a suit of clothes, a toaster, a chair, t.v. or a car. Some people maybe work long enough to pay off a mortgage so that they own a house, or maybe even a business. A small number of men own quite a bit more. In fact, they own most of the country.

According to the latest study of the president's Council of Economic Advisors:

The poorest fifth own one fifth of 1 percent.

The next fifth own 2 percent.

The middle fifth own 6 percent.

The fifth above them own 15.5 percent.

The top fifth own 76 percent.

One family named Rockefeller owns 25 percent of all the real estate on Manhattan Island, among other things.

And, of course, you can do what you want with your property. If you won a set of dishes, you can serve food on them, or you can keep them on display on your shelves, or you can juggle with them, break them, or give them away - anything you want you can do with your property because it's yours! And if you own the country, like the rich do, you can do anything you want with it.

If you own a lawyer, or better a law firm, no law or legal apparatus is ever gonna send you to prison; but a poor fellow will get arrested, misjudged, and thrown away just because he's poor.

A man in a Massachusetts prison named Edward Parker, 20, was sentenced to 18 months to six years for robbing $300 from a truck stop. By comparison, look at former big-mouth and war criminal Spiro T. Agnew. Spiro accepted over $100,000 in bribes to alter the course of our already thoroughly corrupted government and he received only three years of unsupervised probation. And all the Watergaters are getting the lightest sentences possible and, if they are going to prison at all, it's in the easiest joints.

Who owns the land in America? It isn't you or me. We don't own anythng compared to the men who own these multinational corporations. Take the oil companies, for instance. Just in the U.S., you find Standard Oil of Indiana owns 20.3 million acres of land! Texaco, not only a "sky chief," owns 9.9 million acres. Mobil owns 7. million, Gulf owns 7.5 million. Standard Oil farms lead-free vegetables on part of it's 300,000 California acres. Or take these Timber Plantations that are denuding our forests. International Paper owns 7 million acres of land. Weyerhauser owns 5.6 million, Georgia-Pacific owns 4.5 million, St. Regis owns 3.9 million.

If you look at the wealth in this country, the idea of locking someone up for "stealing" a hundred dollars becomes a ludicrous proposition. Mother Jones, a labor organizer of coal miners at the turn of the century, once asked a man n prison how he got there. He told her he stole a pair of shoes. Mother told him if he had stolen a railroad he would have been a United States senator.

But, you say, what about the man who hits you over the head and takes your money? How can we have "violent" people out in the streets?

Some of the men and women in prisons are dangerous and would perhaps need to be guarded. But most of them never hurt anyone. They were just desperate for money and they stole, just as America's rich have always done and never spent a day in jail. There's a double standard here.

. . . if life in America weren't such a rat race, there would be many fewer rats.

There's "respectable" violence, which is often called law and order, and then there is the "street" violence, which the forces of authority are supposedly there to protect us from. Compared to this "respectable" violence, this other violence is small,, and much of it emanates from "respectable" places.

In other words, withot the strong arm of the U.S. government and it's military and para-military police forces, with the money men in the wings, this would be a much different society and the violence that now goes on between people would be much less.

If life in America weren't such a rat race, there would be many fewer rats. But, make no mistake. The Chief rats, the number one public enemy rats, are the rats who have the political and economic power in this country and in the rest of the world. The most serious threat to the goodness of our society is the violence of the forces that ordered and carried out the destruction on Vietnam. I mean the violence of the American government, both houses of Congress.

Some Thought About Prisons In Massachusetts

Massachusetts has eight prisons throughout the state, and they've started work on a new, "improved" one at Bridgewater. The one currently in use at Bridgewater, based on the model of the Czar's prison in Old Russia, has been too embarrassing to the state as a result of the film "Titicut Follies," which was shot and snuck out of there several years ago, and is presently banned by the courts (not the prison, the film).

The State is constructing this new prison, which could last another two hundred years. This is being done in spite of common sense that says that prisons should be closed and the prisoners freed. Even the 1971 U.S. Justice Department Report on Corrections, surprisingly enough, openly takes the position that prisons are complete failures and to build new ones would be repeating century-long mistakes.

Massachusetts is one of the major centers where brain-altering operations are performed after more standard means of treating so-called violent individuals do not succeed.

Drugs are widely used in Massachusetts to control prisoners against their will. This is called Drug Therapy. Professors and doctors make a lot of money and gain status by inventing new forms of punishment for prisoners and describing their theories in fancy, academic terms.

Programs of behavior modification are put forward in many circles as "progressive" steps in prison administration. Behavior modification is used to isolate rebellious prisoners by labelling them " special offenders" and punishing them with arbitrary, harsh periods of segregation, physical beatings, psychological manipulation, revoking of "good time" and parole, and other punishment.

The most daring reforms actually put into practice in Massachusetts in the past 70 years came in 1972, when the legislature changed the name of prisons to "correctional facilities" and warden to "superintendent.". However, according to the 1972 prison law in Massachusetts, each prisoner is entitled to a program of rehabilitation suited to his or her needs. This includes but is not limited to programs of education, job training and employment. The reality is that little of this reaches the prisoners.

There are movements under way among prisoners in almost all the prisons to better conditions inside the prisons and to demand the right to due self-respect and control over their lives. In addition, there are outside groups supporting these struggles, including the National Prisoners Rights Association, New England Prisoners Association, American Friends Service Committee, Red Prison Movement, and UMass Students Against Prisons.

The men and women currently in prison should be released now. It is inhuman punishment to keep them locked up in cages, like animals, separated from human companionship, their every move controlled from above. They are victims of a cruel, authoritarian system. They are slaves, just like Blacks were slaves before the Civil War, and we must form a strong abolition movement to help them gain their freedom. The time has come to end these prisons, once and for all, and begin making a new and just society.

Student's Union? Yes

"Let them eat cake"
Marie Antoinette

If you registered Tuesday or are registering today chances are you received a blue and gray pamphlet from a group called the Student Organizing Project at registration. This is not just another piece of junk paraphernalia to throw away, it bears some scrutinizing on your part. The topic is the organization of a student union at UMass, but more specifically the main theme is student power, or the right to control your own life here at UMass.

The first step in this is maybe to change your thinking a little. You are not here as a recipient of the state's beneficence, you are a consumer. The produce is your education. Your future is at stake.

The history of students here has been one of living with the decisions made for us in academics, housing, and just about everything else. Over the past few years certain enlightened people (a minority) in the Student Government Association have tried to gain more control of student affairs. Their record of success has ranged from mediocre to poor, but some people have capitalized on their experiences to bring more sophistication to the process of bargaining in their own interests. Hopefully these people will be able to make up to some extent for the oldest enemy of student power — lack of continuity. This is a problem that has always plagued students, where those who are just gaining expertise also happen to be graduating and leaving their jobs to more inexperienced people. A student union would put us on a longer lasting, legally based footing with the people who run the university.

Why do we need a union? There are a few good reasons for this. First, the decisions made tor us have not always been good ones. Manv people feel that academic and financial mismanagement has been rampant in the University administration in the last few years. Second, we have had virtually no say in decisions like the raising of rent and board prices and fees in general.

There have been negotiations with certain committees in the Student Government, over these issues but the most these have ever done is to shave a few dollars off a proposed raise. Never has the original intent of any policy, from rent increases to parking fee increases, been reversed because of student pressure, to my knowledge. There was simply no power base behind the bureaucracy. Academic affairs have suffered similar fates.

To top things off, a substantial tuition increase may be on the way courtesy of the state legislature very shortly. Outside of one student member of the Board of Trustees there is no student outlet of any upper level importance to deal with such a situation. A union would give us the same bargaining power of any union, and the kind of continuity and legal and political clout that will make students a force that cannot be ignored when decisions that affect us are to be made. The fact that we are here should be some testimony to the fact that we are not children anymore. Let's demand adult treatment, with a little consumer protection to boot.

You know, it may sound a little corny to think of this whole issue as "one of the most important decisions that you will ever make during your college career". But when you think seriously of the function you hope education will play in your life, those opening words of that little blue and gray pamphlet strike a note that is urgently close to reality.

The summer of our content

The politically long, hot summer of 1974 is over. And so a belated farewell for nearly King Richard. One can only regret that our ex-president didn't wait a few weeks so that college campuses would have had their chance to "react". Southwest would been an interesting place I'm sure.

The event itself was relatively undramatic due mainly to its sheer inevitability. The transition of power was smoother than what follows most elections and the people watched with the complacency that has become characteristic of seventies America. Historically though the rise and fall of Richard Nixon, the sudden change in public attitude and what the future may or may not hold will make this past summer one of the most dramatic moments since the signing of the Constitution itself. But for interlude the American people have chosen to quickly forget Richard Nixon et al., much in the same manner they chose to erase Vietnam from their memories a year ago.

It is sad then to observe the country sink into its the new soft comfortable Ford, (which admittedly is riding quite well.) But we must not forget this man Richard Nixon, what brought him to power and how much power he had amassed. Truly, the fact that he became president of the United States is an indication of some decay of the principles upon which this country was founded. Richard Nixon proved to be the bench warmer he was in college. He was a man determined to succeed but not naturally equipped with the ability to do so. He then had to satisfy his obsession by any means possible. In California he had a reputation for being one of the dirtiest campaigners known. His original victory for Congress when he ran against Helen Gahagam Douglas is a classic example of the spit and hair-pull Nixon fighting style. When he became Vice President he prevented himself from disgrace by the old trick of letting the public see a man cry in public. Old Checkers really tore their hearts out in Peoria. Again and again in his campaigns, against Kennedy, Brown and Humphrey there were always hints of shady dealings but none seemed worse than "what the other guy was doing". But then the crime was committed and the crook took the highest office, No more need be written here about that, for that is ground well covered.

"...we must not forget Richard Nixon, what brought him to power and how much power he had ammassed."

But mention must be made of the responsibility all America shares for the success of Richard Nixon in allowing him and all the political vultures like him to rise to power in this country. And here too credit must be bestowed upon the people who brought attention to the irresponsibility of the Nixon Administration. We must remember the students of the late sixties who shouted the same things on campus five years ago that were said respectfully this summer in the halls of the Rayburn Building. You really can't discredit the people who took to Harvard Square singing and dancing to the tune of resignation. For many of those same people were gassed and beat by the National Guard just four years before.

The press too must be commended. Despite the tyrannical attempts of the Administration to discredit the media, in the end the press was proven to be correct. Of course it wasn't a "victory" of the press over the president. I doubt that there was champagne and party favors in the editorial office of the Washington Post on the evening of August eighth.

It was a good summer for the country, and for the constitution. It was a tremendous summer for the Congress. It was good to see someone like Pete Rodino, who reminds one of the corner bartender in his appearance and his speech, hold a very prominent position in deciding the future of the country.

Now everything must continue. The country will live on the lovable Gerry Ford, we've surely survived worse presidents. In some ways my faith in the system is stronger but that may be diminished if Gerry and Rocky run and win in '76. But that remains to be seen.

As for Richard Nixon, I hope I never have to read or type his name again. If I do it will only be a reminder of the disgrace he brought upon this country.

"Sock it to me?" We can only hope so.

EDITORIAL CARTOONS

Letters

The Editorial pages of the Collegian serve two primary functions: one is to provide for readers a variety of ideas, philosophies, political viewpoints etc. by a staff comprised of undergraduates. (With an occasional guest piece by a grade student, faculty member, or anyone invited by the editors. Hopefully there will be an editorial cartoon every day too.)

The second function of the editorial pages is to provide a forum for the University population to express their likes, dislikes, agreements and disagreements with any article in any part of the Collegian or to make comments on any issue or circumstance on the campus or in the area.

The "Letters to the Editor" column by its nature creates several problems of its own. One is the volume of letters received at the Collegian which has on occasion reached over one hundred a week. It has been and will continue to be the policy of the Collegian to print every letter to the editor that does not contain any libelous statement, extreme profanity, or is repititous of another letter or letters. (i.e. letters on streaking and other fads.)

Furthermore the volume of letters puts an extra burden of work on the Executive Editor and his staff as each letter must be proofread, the source checked if necessary and a headline written. The problem is that many letters do not comply with the simple requests made in the "Letters Policy" which is printed every day. The problems arising from infractions on these simple requests will stop.

Letters that do not follow the guidelines set forth in the "Letters Policy" will be returned or discarded. That's it.

The Collegian needs commentators to write editorial pieces on life, liberty, happiness and its absence. Got a manuscript? Leave it at the Editorial Office with your name, address and phone number. We'll call you.

Letters Policy

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian welcomes all letters to the editor. They must be signed and include the author's address and phone number. Also, all letters must be typed, double-spaced, at sixty spaces per line, and no more than two pages.

Organizations may submit letters, but they must include a name and phone number for reference purposes.

All letters are subject to editing, for either content or space, according to the judgement of the editors. Due to space limitations, there is no guarantee that all letters received will be printed.

Man holds pilot hostage after landing at Logan

The ordeal ended at about 11:20 a.m. when Collins walked off the plane after talking with a black FBI agent by radio for several hours. The FBI refused to identify the agent.

"He was highly emotional," Newpher said of Collins. He added that Collins sometimes was incoherent.

"He complained about lack of money, lack of a job, not being able to buy gifts for his relatives at Christmas time, not being able to own a house."

Eastern spokesman John Stiffler said the money was placed on the runway so Collins could "see its color." Collins only comment, however, was "Give the money to the poor people of Roxbury," a predominantly black section of Boston.

State police later picked up the money, but would not say what was done with it.

The takeover of the plane, the 7 a.m. shuttle from New York's La Guardia Airport, began about 7:45 a.m. when it landed and pulled to the gate at Eastern's terminal.

The busy airport stopped all takeoffs and landings for about an hour.

Venezuela to freeze oil prices, up taxes

CARACAS [UPI] — Venezuela has apparently dropped plans to increase its oil prices but will hit U.S. and other foreign oil companies with bigger income taxes, government sources said yesterday.

The South American oil giant, which supplies a third of U.S. oil imports, now charges oil companies a flat 60 per cent income tax.

This tax, in turn, is based on artifically high, government-set oil export prices which now average $14.43 a barrel.

Venezuela expects to earn in the area of $10 billion in oil income this year, a sum that is triple last year's revenue thanks to major increases in world oil prices.

Earlier this year, Venezuelan President Carlos Andres Perez received special oil powers from congress, including the right to hike oil taxes to curtail high international company profits.

Mideast urged to help poor

WASHINGTON [UPI] — Dr. John Hannah, deputy secretary general of the World Food Conference, yesterday urged Mideast petroleum producing nations to aid the world's developing countries by providing cheap fertilizer to boost their food production.

Addressing the representatives of 400 governmental organizations interested in the international food problem, Hannah said that basically the poor countries would have to bear the main burden.

He said that while the developing countries leadership would have to give more emphasis to agricultural production, the international community could help them by increasing their production of cheap fertilizers.

"The petroleum-producing countries of the Middle East, with their wasting flared natural gas and their substantial accumulations of capital funds have a potential to make a major contribution toward the solution of the fertilizer problem," Hannah said.

Evel Knievel to jump Sunday

By JIM WILLSE
Associated Press

TWIN FALLS, Idaho — The scientific brain behind Evel Knievel's attempt to hurdle the Snake River Canyon figures his client's chances of success are "about the same as a test pilot trying out a new aircraft for the first time."

Robert Truax, a veteran engineer in U. S. guided missile programs, gave his estimate Wednesday, just moments after a crane delicately deposited Knievel's X2 Sky-Cycle on the 108-foot ramp from which the stuntman will be catapulted Sunday.

"I'd say the chances are less than the space agency gave the astronauts," Truax, 56, said at the launch site at the edge of the 500-foot-deep canyon. "Our statistics are two tests in the drink, so if you take a pessimistic view, our chances are zero.

"But we feel they're considerbly better than zero," Truax added.

At the foot of the dirt hill forming the base of the launch ramp was the tangled wreckage of the X1 Sky-Cycle which plunged to the bottom of the canyon last November. At the side of the hill was the comparatively unbroken shell of the second test vehicle that failed to make it across the 1,600-foot gap a week and a half ago.

Truax, a developer of the Air Force secret satellite and Navy Polaris missile programs, appeared unconcerned by the aluminum skeletons as he explained what should happen after the thirty-four-year-old Knievel straps himself into the toylike Sky-Cycle at about 4:30 p.m. EDT Sunday. Fifty thousand people are expected to watch the stunt here, with millions more in theaters for the closed circuit telecast.

Knievel, who made his name by jumping motorcycles over trucks and the like, is carrying a $100,000 check made out to Truax. It's dated Sept. 9 - the day after the jump - and Truax said, "We get him across or we get nothing. That's our deal."

Truax said the clock will begin ticking for Knievel when he lowers himself into the cramped, open cockpit of the rocketlike vehicle.

Once inside, Knievel will turn on a master switch controlling the electrical system, press a button to start cameras inside the cockpit, pull back a lever that will control the crucial parachutes and, finally, start the engine.

"He doesn't have to do anything really complex," said Truax with a smile.

As designed by Truax, the Sky-Cycle is quite unlike the motorcycles Knievel is used to. At 13 feet long, about 1,300 pounds fully loaded, the vehicle is really a steam-driven bullet with Knievel along as the passenger. As the engine is activated, water heated to 720 degrees will be fed into the vehicle and cooled to 700 degrees, creating the steam that will power it over the jagged rocks of the canyon.

By the time they reach the end of the ramp, pointing 56 degrees in the air, Knievel and his Sky-Cycle should be traveling about 200 miles per hour. Peak speed will be about 400 m.p.h., Truax said.

With 5,000 to 6,000 pounds of thrust behind him, Knievel can wait no longer than 21 seconds to push forward the lever to activate the two-parachute system on which his life will depend.

STRIKE
You cannot Arrest away Justice

Striking Timberline teachers in Plaistow, N.H., renewed the picket lines yesterday that had been first established on February 26. A Federal Court judge earlier ruled that town officials could not interfere with the pickets as long as they were peaceful, but new teachers, hired to fill the vacancies caused by the strike, were verbally harassed by the picketers. However, the picket lines were described by one official as "beautiful, peaceful and probably unproductive." Last February, 102 teachers struck in an attempt to gain a master contract, but the number of strikers has been reduced to 40, due to teachers leaving the district to seek employment elsewhere, or returning to work in Timberline.

Paperwork delays special education

BOSTON [AP] - A number of school systems have failed to meet the deadline for compliance with the state's new special education law.

Several school systems are having trouble completing the paperwork which was required by Tuesday, according to an official in the Department of Education.

The 1972 law, which took effect Sunday, requires plans to be submitted to the department by that date for educationg retarded, handicapped and emotionally disturbed children.

Gen. Abrams dies

WASHINGTON [AP] - Gen. Creighton W. Abrams, Army chief of staff and former commander of U.S. forces in Vietnam, died early yesterday of complications from lung cancer surgery.

Abrams, who would have been 60 on Sept. 15, had surgery nearly three months ago and returned to duty in July. But in August he returned to Walter Reed Army Medical Center and was being treated for two blood clots.

Abrams became U.S. commander in Vietnam in 1968 and was named Army chief of staff in mid-1972.

Maddox defeated

ATLANTA [UPI] - Lester Maddox, who parlayed ax handles and his segregationist views into the governorship of Georgia seven years ago, tearfully admitted political defeat yesterday to moderate George Busbee in the Democratic gubernatorial primary.

"I don't think anyone will be elected in Georgia as a racist candidate anytime in the future," said Busbee, 47-year-old majority leader in the State House of Representatives.

U.S. to cut food aid

[AP] - Agriculture Secretary Earl Butz and other American food experts made it clear yesterday that the days of massive U.S. food programs overseas are over and that poor nations must do more to feed themselves.

In off-the-cuff remarks the secretary said the American people "have made a commitment not to let anyone starve."

That commitment will be upheld, he said, but there is no way in the face of expanding world populations and domestic budgetary pressures that the United States can run an international welfare program without end.

Hello Mother Nature

The Long Plain Nature Center and the University of Massachusetts School of Education are cooperating to provide a semester-long course for people who want to work with children in the outdoors. Called a "Nature Counselor's Workshop," this course will focus upon methods of introducing children to the wonder and excitement of their natural environment.

Through films, lectures, and numerous field trips, the students will develop the understanding of ecology and natural history, which will start them on their way to becoming teacher-naturalists. They will gain practical teaching experience by assisting the Long Plain Nature Center in its elementary and secondary school programs.

The students will be particularly encouraged to develop educational programs which will utilize their special talents.

This workshop will be taught by Dr. Gordon Schimmel, Executive Director of the Nature Center, and Professor Linda Lockwood of the UMass Department of Environmental Science.

College credit can be granted through either the School of Education or the Department of Continuing Education. The Nature Counselor's Workshop is listed under School of Education LEX No. 5090.

Classes will be conducted on Thursdays, from 1:30 to 4:30, beginning September 12th. In addition to the class commitment, students will be expected to have one morning per week available for working with the schools. Enrollment is limited to 25.

For further information, please contact Dr. Schimmel at 545-3480, or Professor Lockwood at 545-2822.

The new kids on the block

On Monday, August 19, and Wednesday, August 21, the Resource Network (a collaborative organization comprised primarily of volunteer representatives from the various components of Student Affairs) sponsored an orientation program for new Heads of Residences. This was the first such program planned cooperatively by representatives of all five residential areas.

The two-day session was designed to compliment the more intensive and ongoing training provided within each area. It was the intent of the planning committee to provide for that orientation which was needed by all new staff and could best be accomplished at one time rather than repititiously in each area. The added advantage to this large group programming was the opportunity for new staff to meet - before they became isolated in their own areas - both fellow newcomers and some returning staff from across the campus.

Monday's session focused on the introduction of key administrators. Vice Chancellor Gage welcomed the new staff to what he hoped would be the beginning of an exciting year in Student Affairs; Ken Dean, the director of the newly established Office of Residential Life, briefly introduced his staff (with whom the Areas would be working closely) and emphasized the concept of communication as an essential element in the workings of the new organization. The remainder of the session was devoted to rotating small group discussions with these staff members. Rather than the traditional parading of, and speeches from, the usual long line of administrators, the intent here was to establish a more informal setting in which new staff, returning staff, and the administrators directly involved in the areas, could interact more informally and personally.

These discussions were followed by a presentation by Jack Walsh of the Personnel Office on the benefits (insurance, health care) attached to the Head of Residence position.

The afternoon ended with a Dutch Treat Happy Hour to which many other administrators were invited.

Wednesday morning was devoted to a "Referral Fair". At this fair, all of the various helping agencies (to whom the Heads of Residence invariably refer students) were represented at tables placed around one large room in the Campus Center.

The morning began as two returning, but relatively new Heads of Residences, Sandy Anderson (Cashin) and Lucy Swainwick (Grayson) shared their feelings of "What It Was Like To Be The New Kid On The Block". They emphasized the fact that Heads of Residences are not super-people. They don't need to know all things for all people - but they do need to know who to turn to for help. "And present today, were all of the people and organizations who, indeed, are out there to help."

Music, coffee and donuts, and the continuous showing of films (from SDC) provided for an informal, relaxed atmosphere while staff - both new and returning - were able to see, at one time, all that is available, and to meet the faces behind the offices.

Significantly, the information gathering was not limited to new area staff. Those sitting behind the tables, too, used the opportunity to meet people from other organizations and to find out what else was happening on campus.

A buffet luncheon, sponsored by the Office of Residential Life, for all those participating in the Fair, concluded the very successful morning. This time was yet another opportunity for staff - from all the components of Student Affairs to interact informally.

The final event - Wednesday afternoon - was a workshop in Emergency Management. Stressing reliance on common sense and the need to deal with the aftermath of the crises with all those affected by it, Dot Burke, the Head of Residence of Patterson, intoduced the theme, shared some 'real-life experiences' and introduced the workshop guests: Evelyn Duston, Jane Zapka, and Dr. McBride of the Infirmary, speaking on medical emergencies; Lee Whitaker and Dave Craft of the Mental Health Department, speaking on emotional emergencies; Dianna White, Mary Dumas, and Raymond Marrero fo the Campus Police Department, speaking on emergencies calling for Police support. (A film and discussion student theft emphasized preventive action.) E. T. Mellor, offering some guidelines for drug related emergencies, concluded the workshop.

Don't you want to go to school

Enrollments are expected to drop and expenses to rise in the Nation's schools and colleges during the 1974-75 school year, according to U.S. Commissioner of Education Terrel H. Bell.

An estimated 58,610,000 students will answer the school bell this fall, compared with 59,009,000 actually enrolled last September — anticipated decrease of seven-tenths of one percent.

Dr. Bell said that the biggest decline, about 730,000 students, will be felt by the elementary schools.

The Commissioner also pointed out that the total cost of education is expected to rise about $11 billion over the previous year. Funds from local, State and Federal sources during 1973-74 totaled $97 billion, while in 1974-75 the prediction is for $108 billion, he said.

Education expenses will represent nearly eight percent of our gross national product and will directly involve almost 62 million Americans.

"Education," Dr. Bell pointed out, "will be the principal occupation of 29 percent of our population. In fact," he added, "education is considered to be the country's largest enterprise in terms of the number of people involved and the dollars spent."

A continued rise in high school enrollment is predicted. Assuming that the same proportion of 18- to 21-year-olds enroll in institutions of higher education in 1974 as in 1973 there will also be another small increase in college enrollment.

Enrollment in kindergarten through grade 8 is expected to decrease from 35.1 million last fall to 34.4 million in 1974. A decrease of more than 600,000 is anticipated in public schools, while nonpublic school enrollment will probable decline by about 100,000.

In grades 9 through 12, enrollment is expected to rise from 15.4 million in 1973 to 15.6 million this fall. Since little or no change is anticipated in nonpublic school enrollment, all of the increase will occur in public high schools.

In the Nation's colleges and universities, an increase of about 100,000 degree-credit students, from 8.5 million to 8.6 million, over last fall's enrollment is expected.

Virtually all of the higher education increase will take place in public institutions, since enrollment in privately controlled colleges and universities is expected to remain relatively stable. The figures for both years exclude undergraduate students enrolled in occupational or general studies programs that are not creditable toward a bachelor's degree. There were 1.1 million of these nondegree-credit students in the fall of 1973

Expenditures for elementary and secondary schools are expected to total $68 billion ($62 billion for public and $6 billion for nonpublic schools) during the next school year, while expenditures for higher education are estimated at $40 billion ($27 billion for public and $13 billion for private institutions).

More than 3 million persons will be engaged in classroom instruction this fall. This includes more than 2.3 million persons teaching at the elementary and secondary school levels (2.1 million in public and 200,000 in nonpublic schools) and over 600,000 instructional staff members in colleges and universities (more than 400,000 in public and 200,000 in private institutions).

In addition to the persons employed in classroom teaching, there will be about 300,000 superintendents, principals, supervisors, and other instructional staff members this fall. Thus the total number of persons directly involved in the educational process, including students, teachers, and administrative staff, will be about 61.9 million.

Other highlights in the current educational picture:

—The high school class of 1975 is expected to exceed the 1974 figuce of 3.1 million graduates, which will make it the largest in history.

—Institutions of higher education conferred about 1.3 million bachelor's and higher degrees during the school year 1973-74. The projected figure for June 1975 is about the same. Included in this total are 950,000 bachelor's, 50,000 first-professional, 270,000 master's, and 40,000 doctor's degrees.

Irish Studies will be available to students in the Five-Colleges for a two-year period starting this September under the fourth Five-College Faculty Appointment recently approved by the Five-College Deputies.

Ms. Maria Tymoczko, a Ph.-D. in Celtic Studies from Harvard, will offer the Old Irish language this fall through the English Department of the University of Massachusetts, the host institution. Graduate students should register for English 811, meeting Tuesday evening from 7:30 to 10. Undergraduates may register for the same course through English 385, Independent Study.

During the two years Dr. Tymoczko will teach such courses as Early Celtic Literature in Translation at the other four colleges and will stimulate and coordinate Irish Studies in the Five-College area.

Yankee third baseman Craig Nettles leaps in vain for foul pop in second inning against the Brewers at Shea Stadium. The Yankees won 3-0. (see story p. 16)

Search continues for assistant net coach

By GLENN POSTER

After capturing three consecutive Yankee Conference Championship crowns, the 1974 edition of the UMass tennis team ended its season after only eight matches as the players went on strike to press their demands for an assistant coach. Now, the story behind the scenes.

Steve Kosakowski, "an institution here at UMass," according to assistant athletic director Robert MacConnell, has been coaching tennis and hockey at UMass for the past twenty-five years. Steve Kosakowski is also blind. So, considering the fortunes of his teams in the past few years, he's done a superb job in the selection of players and the assignments of seedings for a man with a handicap.

The players, on the other hand, felt that an assistant was an absolute must. According to the final edition of last spring's COLLEGIAN,..."That assistant would report to Coach Kosakowski what was happening on the courts and would then make all the decisions as to who would play in the matches and what seeds they would be playing at..."

The result of the players' demands to the athletic department was to notify Coach Kosakowski about the number one priority to the team. The coach agreed on the hiring of an assistant if he (Kosakowski) could pick the candidate. The athletic department agreed to this.

A decision as to the eventual assistant, has not been reached yet. Unfortunately, things have come to a temporary halt as Coach Kosakowski has been hospitalized.

Soccer outlook optimistic

By BILL DOYLE

A combination of returning veterans, the addition of a few transfer students, and improved organization makes the outlook of this fall's UMass soccer team bright indeed.

On the whole, the team is better prepared mentally and physically for the coming season than last year, Coach Al Rufe's first year as varsity coach. Rufe took over the team half way through last summer and didn't have much of a chance to recruit or organize.

"This past year I've been able attend soccer banquets and visit high schools and I think we have some fine soccer players coming to UMass because of it," said Coach Rufe.

Besides better organization and recruitment other factors point to a better season than last year.

"The team lost only four starters out of eleven so we'll have a veteran squad. Plus, they all reported in better shape than a year ago."

The team has been practicing since Aug. 26 and six scrimmages have been scheduled before the season opener at Boston College on Sept. 24.

Among the teams that UMass will scrimmage are Clark, Amherst, Eastern Connecticut State, and Harvard. Coach Rufe expressed pleasure in being able to scrimmage Harvard, a team which UMass will face next season. The Minutemen travel to the Keene St. tournament to play two scrimmages.

UMass will play twelve games this fall, two more than last year. Keene State and Westfield State are the new opponents.

Among the veterans that Coach Rufe looks forward to leading the team are Tom Coburn, who needs only seven goals to break the career scoring record at UMass, Kalekini Banda, Bill Belcher, Tony King and Co-Captains Carl Vercollone and Jim Vollinger.

Transfer students Mohamed Othman and Mike Parsons have impressed Coach Rufe in the early going and seem to be sure starters.

The squad has been cut from 65 members to 35 and will eventually be lowered to 26.

As far as the Yankee Conference goes, UConn, last year's champion, is tabbed as the team to beat by Coach Rufe. "UConn only lost five men from their entire team so they'll be tough."

All in all, the UMass soccer team looks like it will play better soccer this year. "The season's record may not be better than last year's (6-3-1) but the brand of soccer will be better."

Yankees Tie Red Sox For First

Red Sox Shut Out 6-0

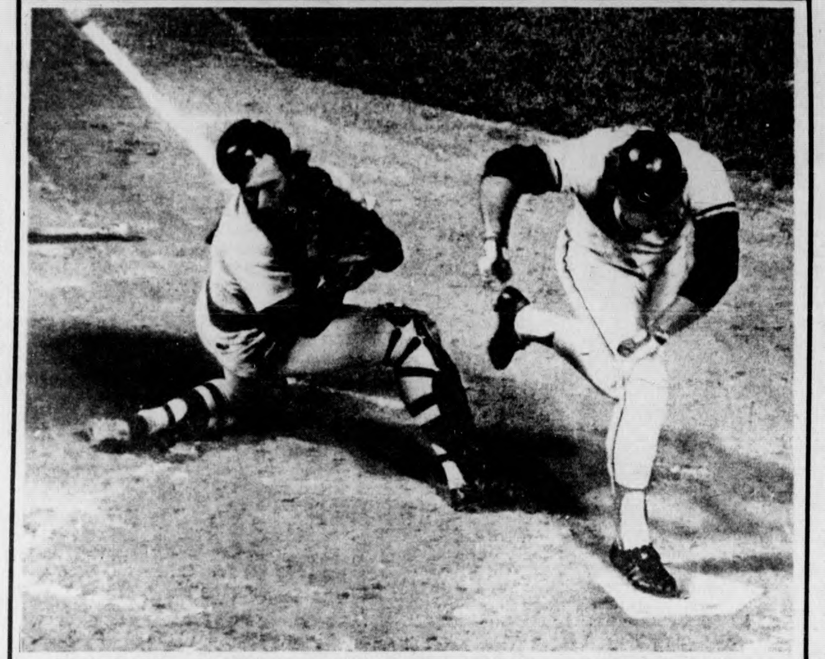
BALTIMORE [UPI] — Earl Williams crashed a pair of home runs to back the three-hit pitching of Jim Palmer Wednesday night as Baltimore surged to its seventh straight victory with a 6-0 rout of the Boston Red Sox and move to within two games of first place in the American League East.

Palmer extended the Baltimore pitching staff's string of scoreless innings against Boston to 28 as the Orioles swept the three-game series from the Red Sox, who have now lost six straight and dropped into a first place tie in the East with the New York Yankees.

The Orioles sent eight men to the plate during a four-run third inning against loser Roger Moret that was triggered by Paul Blair's run-scoring triple. Andy Etchebarren's double opened the third inning. Blair's triple to center field scored Etchebarren and Bobby Grich singled home Blair. After Tommy Davis doubled Grich to third base, Williams' grounder allowed Grich to score and Don Baylor's sacrifice fly scored Davis with the fourth run.

Williams, who has slammed five of his 13 homers this year against Red Sox pitching, added solo blasts in the fifth and seventh innings off reliever Reggie Cleveland.

Palmer, 6-10, won his second straight game and posted his first shutout, striking out six batters and walking one.



Boston catcher Tim Blackwell falls to the ground after colliding with Baltimore second baseman Bobby Grich. Blackwell dropped the ball on the play and Grich scored. Orioles won 6-0.

Yankees tie Sox, Win 3-0

NEW YORK [AP] — Doc Medich hurled a five-hitter and retired 15 straight at one point and the streaking New York Yankees won for the 16th time in 20 games Monday, beating the Milwaukee Brewers 3-0.

Lou Piniella doubled home the first of two runs in the opening inning as the Yankees beat nemesis Kevin Kobel, 6-12, for the first time in four decisions this season. Piniella also made a circus catch in the third inning that prevented the Brewers from scoring.

After managing just three runs off Kobel in their three defeats, the Yankees jumped on the 20-year-old left hander in the first inning when Elliott Maddox and Piniella doubled and Thurman Munson singled Piniella home.

They added a run in the fifth on a walk to Gene Michael, Roy White's single and a sacrifice fly by Maddox, which Johnny Briggs caught at the left field fence.

Virdon calm as Yankees at pinacle

By IRA MILLER
UPI Sports Writer

NEW YORK [UPI] — For the second September in a row, Bill Virdon isn't worrying about job security, and this time he might be right.

Virdon wasn't worried last year, either, and then to his surprise he was fired from his first major league managing job, in Pittsburgh.

That was exactly one year ago this week.

He came home from playing handball and learned he was out as manager of the Pirates, who at the time were contending for the Eastern Division Title in the National League.

He still feels Pittsburgh would have won in 1973 if he had not been fired.

Now, Virdon has the New York Yankees in contention — in fact, they're in a first place tie in the AL East — and while he still doesn't have a contract for 1975, he says, "I'm not concerned about it."

"We haven't had any serious talks.

"When I'm talking about that, I'd rather have that be the only thing I had to think about," said Virdon, and from the glint in his eye it's obvious he thinks he could be bargaining from a position of strength should the Yankees somehow win the division title.

Yankee's Bill Virdon

That is no longer the outrageous prospect it seemed just a couple of weeks ago.

The Yankees, in last place as late as mid-July and seven games behind as recently as 13 days ago, blanked the Milwaukee Brewers 3-0 Wednesday for their 16th victory in the last 20 games to tie Boston for first place in the East.

Virdon who, as everyone knows was a second choice for the Yankees job this year because Dick Williams was ruled unavailable, never lost faith with his club even though it floundered much of the season.

"I never really thought we were out of the race," he says. "I just felt when we had our bad streaks we'd come out of them.

All-important information

For all you readers whose summer jobs were as head pickman in the Siberian Salt Mines, or for those who just plain refused to read your hometown sports pages because Steve Saraceno didn't write for them, it's time to get re-aquainted with the sports scene. So, I digress...

NATIONAL CHAMPIONSHIP DEPT. — The Minutemen gridders set out to better last year's mediocre (6-5) record, starting Sept. 14 at Villanova. But already two starters from last year's MacPherson-Men are out with injuries—defensive back Steve Wood, and guard Jack Santoro...

EAST DIVISION DEPT. — The Sox seven-game lead has been disentegrated by (of all people) the New York Yankees. That's one oddity and here's another: Every game this reporter has seen this year at Fenway has been lost by the Sox...Can't understand it. I cheer them on as well as anyone else. Don Wilson lifted with no-hitter

HOUSTON [UPI] — Preston Gomez did it again.

For the second time in five seasons Wednesday night, Gomez, the manager of the Houston Astros, removed a pitcher working on a no-hitter but trailing by a run when he replaced Don Wilson with a pinch hitter in the eighth inning against the Cincinnati Reds.

And also for the second time, the relief pitcher lost the no-hitter — and Gomez' team lost the game.

Mike Cosgrove relieved Wilson — one of less than two dozen men in baseball history to have pitched two no-hitters previously — in the ninth inning and the first batter he faced, Tony Perez, grounded a single up the middle for the only Cincinnati hit.

The Reds, both their runs scoring on a fifth inning throwing error by Houston shortstop Roger Metzger, won the game, 2-1.

A crowd of 15,840 in the Astrodome, watching their team going nowhere once again this season, booed lustily when Tommy Helms was announced as an eighth-inning pinch hitter for Wilson. Helms was retired on an infield grounder.

They booed again in the ninth when Perez, after fouling off several pitches, got the only hit, off Cosgrove.

Wilson, 10-11 this season, had walked five batters, struck out three and hit one through his eight innings.

Cesar Geronimo drew a walk to start the Reds fifth and, after a one-out walk to George Foster and a sacrifice by winning pitcher Jack Billingham, Metzger took Pete Rose's soft grounder and threw it high over first base to allow both runners to score.

Wilson was scheduled to be the leadoff hitter in the last of the eighth. But Gomez wasted no time sending Helms out of the dugout, and Helms then grounded harmlessly to shortstop. Houston later got two singles in the inning but did not score.

The San Diego fans booed Gomez for his strategy, which he defended on the grounds that "I'm here to win games (San Diego finished the year 63-99)," but his boss, club president Buzzy Bavasi, later disagreed publicly on the strategy. Bavasi eventually fired Gomez at San Diego after 11 games of the 1972 season.

Dorms filled 5% over capacity — again

By AVIS YUNI
Staff Reporter

It happens every year.

"We always open up with more than capacity in the dorms," Bruce Cochran, director of housing, told the Collegian. He said, however, that for the past three years, no triples have lasted after the first two weeks.

Cochran explained that each dorm has been overloaded for the first week on the average of 5 per cent past its capacity. "Every year a certain percentage of students do not come back," he said.

Today Cochran said the Housing Office will know which students with reserved rooms are not returning. These rooms will be released for those students presently in triples. "Usually it takes two or three days to get everyone out of triples."

Cochran said that any student for whom they can't find space in the dorm in which he-she is tripled, will be found space in another dorm in the same area.

Cochran said that overloading the dorms for the first two weeks is the best way to keep the rents down. "The most efficient use of the dorms is to make them as full as possible."

On computer programs Cochran says they project the percentage of how many students will not be returning since there is no definite way to find this out.

Belchertown — II

Are reforms stymied?

By MARK VOGLER
Staff Correspondent

Yesterday, The Collegian looked at the two-year legal history of the Belchertown State School for the Retarded and concluded that reform has been marred by partisan fueding. Today reporter Mark Vogler looks at the refors that have taken place.

Major reforms in the treatment of Massachusetts' retarded citizens were motivated out of court action. But now those reforms seem to be slipping because the Sargent administration has failed to recognize some of its greatest resources of change.

One accomplishment of the Belchertown suit was to make the state realize that "the bricks and mortar" philosophy has been long outmoded in Massachusetts. The trouble is it's still in use.

A concerned parents group took the state to court two years ago for overcrowded and inhumane conditions existing at the Belchertown State School.

The Department of Mental Health responded by advocating a switch from huge, inpersonal institutions to smaller, easier-to-manage community based centers.

But even though DMH professes a commitment to de-institutionalization, figures tend to indicate that officials are still hooked on pumping millions of dollars into the maintenance of antiquated human warehouses with no definitive plans ready to accomodate the mass exodus into the community.

According to Dr. William Bronston, a pediatrician and former staff physician at the notorious Willowbrook State School in New York, increased appropriations and an influx of new staff may cause no discernable improvements in the lives of institutionalized residents.

At the 1974 American Association on Mental Deficiency annual meeting in Toronto he stated he was unable to detect any substantive improvement in the care, training, and physical environment of the residents after a reduction in population of nearly 2,000, an enormous increase in staff, and a current operating budget of $50 million.

Yet, the community approach has been rejected adamantly by the Fernald League for Retarded Children which is sueing the state for insufficient services afforded the residents of Waltham's Fernald State School.

The group is also charging the state with "dumping" residents into innovative programs which are either inadequate or do not exist.

The Fernald League feels that despite the shortcomings and abuses of the institutional setup, the state would totally abandon the residents for better or for worse in a community setting.

In one of its publications the League says the state is "no longer wholly responsible for those shifted out of the institutions. Like the funding, the responsibility is handled by a community group or board.

"And as many former residents and their families have learned, once out of a state institution, you're out, and there's no getting back."

Also in question is the occassional delay in receiving funds from scattered sources which tends to force competent staff to seek out jobs where they are paid on time.

Staff members of the Special Legislative Commission Investigating Conditions at Belchertown State School and Monson State Hospital maintain that de-institutionalization "is the only way to go."

A spokesman for the commission said that many parents of state school residents have not yet accepted the concept because the state has failed to make it work.

The average annual cost for a resident in a community setting is $5500 compared to the $8-10,000 it costs for institutional services, the spokesman said.

However the Department of Mental Health has refused to contract with several independent community services throughout the state which the commission views as highly successful.

According to Rep. James G. Collins (D-Amherst), a member of the commission, until DMH organizes an acceptable de-institutionalization system while adequately maintaining the institutions, more suits can be expected in the future from other state schools.

Collins maintains that the conditions cited at Belchertown and Fernald are not unique compared to other institutions and warns that individual concentration on the problems as they exist distorts responsibility the responsibility of DMH.

"To get a full picture you have to examine each of the institutions — but most importantly take a good look at what the Department of Mental Health is doing," he said.

Shortages increase meal cost

By CINDY ROGERS
Staff Reporter

Paper, plastic and petroleum shortages have resulted in price increases at University-run eating places located in the Campus Center and Student Union, the manager of the restaurants says.

"Some items went up, some did not," said Phil Amico, Director of Campus Center Food Services. Amico runs the Blue Wall cafeteria, the Coffee Shop and the Hatch cafeteria in the Student Union.

All food price changes were decided by Amico who evaluated prices according to current market selling prices. These changes were then submitted to the Student Union Board of Governors for approval before being instituted.

Amico said that most of the high volume food which students purchase such as hamburger did not go up in price. In fact, the jumboburger and jumbo cheeseburger are now 10 cents less.

The items that did increase in price were soda, ice cream, pastry, breads and lettuce accordingly with the rising costs of flour, sugar, lettuce, and coffe, Amico said.

For example, Amico said, most of the ice cream products increased 5 cents with the exception of the small cone which is still 20 cents. Rolls and bagels also increased 5 cents. Coffee which was 17 cents for the 8-oz. cup now costs 15 cents for the smaller 6-oz. cup.

Some items were raised a couple of pennies over base increases in order to round off prices. Amico said this would speed up lines in order to provide faster service.

"The Campus Center," Amico said, "is not immune to price increases. The profits help to subsidize Campus Center operating prices which would otherwise result in an increase in student fees."

It does not help to pay for the remodeling now taking place in the Hatch, he added.

In order to counteract the higher price increase, Amico said that more 99 cent specials would be offered.

Employees food tickets are still $1.75 and will not go up in value concurrently with the price increases.

Amico, however, pointed out that since most of the entree items did not go up in price and with more specials, "the employees can still get a full meal at $1.75."

Though Amico also expects meat increases this year, he said, "The Campus Center Food Services is trying to hold the line on what students eat most."

Lovejoy hearing Monday

By DAVID GREENSLIT
Staff Reporter

Even since he snapped the guy wires and toppled a weather tower taking measurements for a proposed nuclear power plant fifteen miles north of Amherst, Sam Lovejoy has said his act was political.

He said he would use his Sept. 17 trial as a forum to discuss the environmental and safety merits of nuclear power.

Now, nine months after the physical act, the Amherst College graduate will have his day in court.

Next Monday a hearing will be held in Greenfield Superior Court to decide what will be admissable in the trial later this month.

The hearing is crucial to Lovejoy's case. If the court refuses to hear political arguments for the act he termed civil disobedience, Lovejoy will have failed.

Lovejoy is charged with the wilfull and malicious destruction of personal property. Local attorneys, including Franklin County District Attorney John Finn, say the case will be tried on narrow grounds.

Finn told the Collegian last week that malicious destruction of personal property is a "dry charge" and that he doubts the trial will become a broad forum on the dangers of nuclear power.

"The statutes do not provide an easy out for one claiming a higher cause or goal," he added.

Former UMass Attorney for students Richard M. Howland, who now has a private practice in Amherst, also said the case will probably be tried on a narrow basis. Even if Lovejoy could prove he had a political right to destroy the tower, Howland said, evidence concerning nuclear danger might be ruled inadmissible.

First Assistant to the District Attorney John Murphy, who is handling the Lovejoy case, said the judge will make the decision on the scope of the trial. He declined further comment.

> "...a nuclear accident
> could mean biological finality
> for Montague...."

If the trial is conducted on a narrow basis, Lovejoy thinks he can win on appeal.

Lovejoy, who lives on a farm in Montague, is handling his own case. He has spent the past several months doing his legal homework there and in Boston. He plans to have sympathetic nuclear experts testify in his defense.

He has requested that Northeast Utilities, builder of the proposed plants, be subpoenaed for any information showing danger of nuclear power plants.

Lovejoy has also requested that the court force Northeast Utilities to produce their public relations budget, "including media expenses, salaries, ...and winning and dining budget" relating to the proposed plant in Montague.

Another Lovejoy motion asked the court to view the site where the tower is located to better understand the nature of the case.

The trial is only one of a number of efforts by local anti-nuclear activists to block further nuclear power plant construction, according to Lovejoy. He said that the Nuclear Objectors Party will run a candidate for selectman in Montague this November.

On that same November ballot will be a referendum concerning nuclear energy. Anti-nuclear forces will hold a conferences at UMass Sept. 18-19 as well as booths at many of this fall's county fairs.

It was on George Washinnton's birthday that the incident with the meteorological tower occured. Within hours after the top 360 feet of the 500 foot tower crashed to the Montague Plains, Lovejoy turned himself in to the Montague police and accepted full responsibility for the deed.

He said it was an act of civil disobedience, stemming from his profound belief that a nuclear accident could mean "biological finality" for Montague and the surrounding area.

Northeast Utilities built the tower to comply with an Atomic Energy Commission regulation that requires power companies to test weather conditions at possible nuclear plant sites for one year.

William Semanie, a spokesman for Northeast Utilities and its affiliate Western Mass Electric, told the Collegian that $72,000 damage was done to the tower. Lovejoy's indictment, however, put the damage at $44,500.

Lovejoy faces possible imprisonment for not more than five years, a fine not to exceed $1,000, or some combination of prison and fine.

Dorms overfilled—again

"This is an inevitable problem since when dealing with a university of this size there is a need for flexibility in whether students return or not," he said.

Cochran explained that each year they try to improve the system to try to get people settled quicker. The use of ten telephones for the first week with operators constantly in contact with the Heads of Residence was instituted 1½ years ago.

This year the use of walkie-talkies between Office of Residential Life personnel, maintenance people and Cochran has been instituted. These walkie-talkies allow the people to keep informed since telephone lines are typically tied-up at this time of year, Cochran explained.

Over the walkie-talkies problems of residence are discussed such as where people have been moved, where there are spaces available, where furniture, such as beds, are needed, and maintenance problems.

"The walkie-talkies are a way of constant communication to resolve problems quickly," Cochran said.

"Each year things get better. There is always a certain amount of confusion," Cochran said. He said the office would like to receive feedback from students who have gone through this short triple experience once the whole thing is over and all has settled down.

Cochran explained that the last time there were triples for an entire semester was in fall 1970. At that time the first twelve co-ed dorms came into being (Greenough had been co-ed the semester before).

Only two of the new co-ed dorms had been female before going co-ed, ten had been male. Cochran said that since the dorms all went co-ed by floor, a shortage of male spaces was created. Ten all male dorms became only half male while only two female dorms became half male.

There now were less women in the all male dorms but more men in the all male dorms than usual. So, Cochran said that 750 men were put in 250 triples for the semester.

He said that the fall 1970 semester was the time at which the fear of triples started. Since that time dorms have been allowed alternate room co-ed arrangements. This and the fact that the housing office can change the ratio of males to females in co-ed dorms across campus, has eliminated the triples.

SGA loans available to buy text books

Students short on cash may get a $250 credit to buy books from the Student Government Association.

Administrators stress the loan is a credit loan, not an outright cash loan. This, they say, prevents students from buying anything other than books.

Students do not have to prove need to get the credit loan. The full $250 does not have to be used. Repayment is due in one month. After such time an interest is added to the credit loan.

Forms are available in the Student Senate office on the second floor of the Student Union Bldg.

Ford opposed to laws regulating abortions

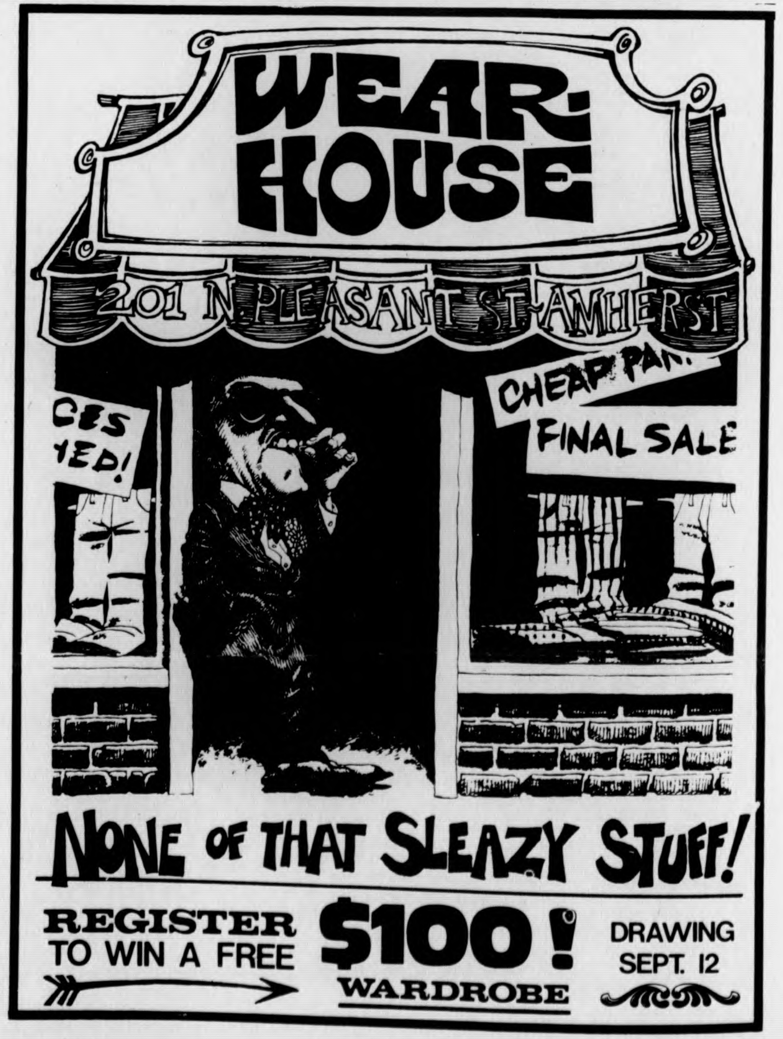
WASHINGTON (AP) — President Ford still favors passage of a constitutional amendment to permit states to enact legislation on abortion, a White House spokesman said yesterday.

Presidential spokesman Jerald F. terHorst said the President is not in favor of federal laws governing abortion.

Mrs. Ford was asked at a White House news conference on Wednesday whether she was close to the views of Sen. James L. Buckley, Con-R-N.Y., who opposes legalized abortion, or Vice President-designate Nelson A. Rockefeller, who favored legalized abortion when he was governor of New York.

"Definitely Rockefeller," Mrs. Ford replied.

TerHorst said Mrs. Ford's reply "was not a very definitive answer." And he said that the views of the President and his wife "are not that far apart."



"This is Food Services at its best"

Beer, bands and chicken highlight barbeque

By MIKE KNEELAND
MDC Staff

If the Stock Market reacts to hangovers like it does to international politics, there'll be a big crash this morning.

Anticipating the beginning of classes, most of the UMass student body turned out yesterday for the Summer's End-fest and the beer was flowing like all entering freshman expected it would: fast and fierce.

In between gulps, the students were treated to one heck of a time, thanks to the various students government bodies which sponsored the 12-hour event.

The food was good; One student leader said, "This is Food Services at its best." Indeed Food Services Director Ken Dean personally directed the chow lines via a walkie-talkie system.

With a hearty meal roaming the gastro-intestinal tract, the lines by the beer dispensers grew bigger-reminiscent of Friday night Blue Walls.

By the time Liverpool took the stage, the crowd was buzzing. As one band member said, "We've got some catchin' up to do!"

The four-membered band is a Beatle imitation. They dressed in long, military-like jackets similar to those the Beatles wore on the Sgt. Pepper's album.

Reaction to the band was varied. Many students thought the band was good musically, but that the accents were a bit too put-on.

The Toronto-based band played considerable cuts off the Magical Mystery Tour album, only occasionally varying the Beatle's arrangement. When they did it was good and the crowd responded with loud approval.

In front of center stage the ground was soggy. Overturned dinner plates provided a good seat for many students. The field, in fact, was incredibly littered with plates and beer cups while the trash cans were hopelessly overflowing with the same.

For the student government and the various RSO groups which were manning recruitment tables, the day was a flop. According to Student Government Association President Richard Savini, the tables were supposed to be set up where the students entered the field.

They were not. Rather, the tables were at the far side of the field obscured from the view of most students.

By press time, students were scurrying back to their rooms for a sweater or jacket as sunset ushered in brisk air.

Still to perform yet was the James Cotton Blues Band. But it really didn't seem to matter.

Everyone seemed pleased just to be back at school.

Making the best of a bad situation: in spite of the frustration of dealing with lines stretching from the parking office to Whitmore, some people managed to take things in stride.

Late decals slow traffic

By JUDY BOUCHER
Staff Reporter

A late delivery of lot stickers, late renewals and a reluctance to use the mail has added up to long waiting lines for parking assignments and a huge backlog of work for the people at the parking office in Hampshire House.

The parking stickers were due to be delivered on July 26 according to Robert Kittle, director of transportation and parking, but ended up not reaching the university until August 23.

He added that many students and employees did not renew their lot assignments last April despite much publicity about this option which included a $2 reduction in the registration fee.

Add to that the fact that many students, staff and faculty did not take advantage of the optional mail renewal system and you have problems.

To ease the increased workload on his staff, Kittle has been using "bus drivers and other part time people who had time, as well as girls working at night sorting mail."

Predicting that there would be no major changes in the system next year, Kittle said cars would be registered in advance, that the renewal process will be simplified, and the decal order will be made much earlier.

One change that he did foresee was the "phasing out of all parking lots by next summer", as part of a master plan to "make the campus green."

Even though two-thirds of the cars in the parking system have been taken care of and more are being taken care of every day, Kittle predicted that the Parking Office would not be fully caught up on their backlog of work until Sept. 16.

To those who still have to register their cars or get their appropriate decals, Kittle recommends that they bring in all vehicle information and identification. He added that mailing in the parking fee with a stamped self-addressed envelope would be highly desirable.

It's time for car inspections again

Registrar David J. Lucey reminds drivers that the Fall Inspection period begins September one and ends October 15. "Now is the time to have repairs made so that when you present your motor vehicle for inspection it wil pass the first time."

4400 official inspection stations located throughout the state are ready to inspect motor vehicles and trailers under the supervision of the Registry of Motor Vehicles.

Before you take your car in, check the registration number with your registration plates to see if they match. If they do not match, go to a Registry office to have a correction made. Also, check the vehicle identification number on your registration certificate with the vehicle indentification number which is on the vehicle to see if they match. If they do not match, go to your insurance company or agent for corrections.

The registration certificate must be presented before an inspection will be made and all information must be correct.

The fee for a motor vehicle inspection is still $1.00. (A $2.00 fee for inspection of motor vehicles will become effective January 1, 1975.) The fee for inspection of a trailer alone is still 50 cents.

Vehicles passing inspection will have an official red sticker printed in black placed on the windshield by an adjuster after it passes inspection. Motor vehicles failing to pass inspection will be marked with a round rejection sticker.

Add-drop cards delayed

Due to a programming error at the Whitmore computer center, the distribution of add-drop cards has been delayed a day.

According to Bard White, Systems Director at the center, the delay was caused by the incorrect insertion of two programs into the computer. The misinsertion fouled up all the programs run after it.

The schedule cards will be available anytime today between 8 a.m. and 4 p.m. at Curry Hicks Cage.

Ford faces pessimistic forecasts on economy

WASHINGTON (UPI) — A select panel of economists yesterday handed President Ford a pessimistic economic forecast-rising, unemployment and only a modest slowdown in inflation through the end of 1975.

Meanwhile, Senate Democrats voted unanimously to stay in session until the end of the year, if necessary, to deal with anti-inflation legislation. The move was aimed squarely at Ford, who has indicated he will announce no major new economic policy shifts until January.

The gloomy economic forecast came as Ford opened a month-long series of conferences leading up to his "inflation summit" meeting Sept. 27-28 in Washington.

Americans "are sick and tired of having politics played with their pocketbooks," Ford told 28 economists and various congressment and cabinet officials seated around a massive table in the White House East Room.

Then, puffing his pipe, the President leaned back and listened for an hour as his guests analyzed the nation's economic dilemma.

"I am concerned about government policy pushing us into a recession," said David Grove, of the IBM Corp. He said the Federal Reserve Board should start easing the supply of credit, a move that could help drive down interest rates.

Harvard economist Otto Eckstein said a "middling recession" is inevitable, and the cost of living might still be rising at an 8 per cent rate by the end of next year. This would be an improvement from the current 12 per cent inflation rate but still unusually high.

Beryl Sprinkel, of Harris Trust & Savings Co., Chicago, saw unemployment climbing from the current 5.3 per cent level to above 5.8 per cent by December.

Ford told the panelists, abipartisan Who's Who of the economic profession, that there is "no quick fix for what ails our economy."

But before leaving to attend to other matters, he asked the group to develop "a consistent and considered package of the most promisting answers that you can find...which will restore economic stability and sustain economic growth in these United States."

A variety of such answers, some politically dangerous, were tossed out during brief statements by each panelist. Among the ideas:

—Put an end to government policies, such as airline, truck and steamship regulation, that support artificially high price levels and inefficient practices. Richard Moore, Stanford University.

—"Go after monopolies and restraint of trade very vigorously." Robert Nathan, Washington consultant.

—Adopt a disciplined anti-inflation policy and then stick with it, rather than changing course every few months. George P. Shultz, Bechtel Corp. and former treasure secretary.

A surprising number felt that monetary policy, as opposed to government budget programs, was carrying too much of the government's anti-inflation fight and that the Federal Reserve should allow the money supply to expand at a faster rate.

But among those who spoke in the early hours, only Nathan favored wage-price controls, a policy Ford has sworn not to adopt.

Serious crime increases 6%

WASHINGTON [AP] - Serious crimes rose 6 per cent in the United States last year with the biggest increases in suburbs and rural areas, the FBI reported yesterday.

The annual Uniform Crime Reports reflected increases in the number of offenses reported to police in all seven crime categories last year. The highest increase was 10 per cent for rape, the lowest 2 per cent for robbery.

Increases were reported for all sections of the country and for cities, suburbs and rural areas alike.

In all categories, the urban dweller was more likely to be a crime victim than the suburbanite or rural resident. However, the largest cities, those with more than one million residents, recorded an over-all decrease of one-half of one per cent. Suburban areas reported an average increase of 9 per cent and rural areas 10 per cent.

The FBI figures, comparing the volume and rate of crime in 1973 with the figures for the previous year, are based on reports from nearly all state and local police agencies.

The figures are not considered a totally accurate measure of crime. Most critics suggest that total crime is much greater than the offenses reported to police.

The 1973 increase was a return to an upward trend broken only once in 18 years, when the 1972 figures reflected a 4 per cent decrease. The only 1974 figures available show a 15 per cent over-all increase for January through March.

For the past five years, serious crime is up 30 per cent and since 1960 the increase is 120 per cent.

As is customary, the FBI report offers no explanation for the trends in the 282 pages of statistics and charts.

According to the report, Americans in 1973 reported 8.6 million cases of murder, assault, rape, robbery, burglary, larceny, and auto theft - the seven categories for which statistics are collected. In 1972, there were 8.1 million reported crimes.

Adjusted for population growth, the statistics show a national crime rate increase of about 5 per cent. The 1973 crime rate indicates that about four out of every 100 citizens was a victim of serious crime.

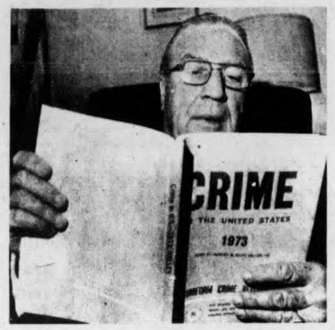
Broken down by category, the report shows that the murder rate rose 4 per cent last year and 35 per cent over the past five years.

In big cities, 21 of every 100,000 residents were slain.

The number of rapes increases 10 per cent, the highest of any crime category, but the total comprised less than 1 per cent of all serious crimes, the report said.

Like murder, assault occurred most often within families, and the national rate increased 6 per cent last year and 40 per cent in the past five years.

The four categories of violent crime murder, assault, rape and robbery collectively rose 5 per cent but totaled only 869,470 while all three categories of property crimes added up to 7.8 million.



FBI Director Clarence Kelley holds a copy of the report on the increase in serious crime.

Speculation renewed about Chou's health

WASHINGTON [UPI] — Chinese Premier Chou En-lai's condition has worsened, Sen. Hubert H. Humphrey, D-Minn., said early Friday in a telephone interview from Peking.

"We were told by the vice premier that Chou En-lai's condition was worse," Humphrey told Bill Greenwood of the Mutual Broadcasting network in Washington.

"I assume the sudden departure of two Communist party Central Committee members from our banquet was related to Chou's illness."

Humphrey quoted Vice Premier Nieh Jung-chen as saying Chou's condition was worse than when Sen. Henry Jackson, D-Wash. saw him two months ago.

Chou, 75, a prime architect of the U.S.-China detente, has been hospitalized since June with heart trouble.

"The apparent candor with which the vice premier spoke indicates he is quite ill," Humphrey said.

Asked if he had received further word since the banquet, Humphrey said: "None whatsoever, except that we knew he had been ill."

Sen. J. William Fulbright, D-Ark., leader of the U.S. Congressional delegation on a 10-day tour of China, confirmed that Chinese Communist officials left the banquet Thursday night, leading to speculation that Chou had gotten worse.

"These two young ladies, who were I believe members of the Central Committee, had said they had other commitments requiring them to leave the dinner," Fulbright said.

"But I have no way to speculate about Mr. Chou's condition although we were told he was too ill to meet with us," Fulbright said in a telephone interview with UPI in New York.

Another member of the U.S. delegation, Rep. Barbara Jordan, D-Tex., telephoned radio station KPRC in Houston and said the Chinese gave no explanation for their abrupt departure from the dinner.

Ford considering amnesty decision

WASHINGTON [AP] President Ford is still considering recommendations on the question of amnesty for Vietnam draft dodgers and deserters and is not expected to make any announcements before Tuesday, White House spokesmen said today.

They said, however, that no firm time had been set for the President to make known his views.

State lottery officials to meet Saxbe today on legal questions

WASHINGTON [UPI] — A UPI survey showed yesterday that most of the 13 states involved will defend the legality of their lottery operations at today's conference on the issue with Attorney General William B. Saxbe.

"There's no way he could close us down," said David Ellis of the Massachusetts state lottery commission in a typical comment. "He could make it more difficult for us but we're a legal state lottery."

"Illinois is in full compliance with the federal laws," said Gov. Daniel Walker. "The Illinois lottery will proceed."

Officials in New York, Pennsylvania, New Jersey, Rhode Island and Maryland expressed similar confidence in the legal standing of their lotteries.

Asked whether Maryland would fight through the courts if Saxbe carried out his threat to get injunctions prohibiting the lotteries, Maryland lottery director Stanley S. Fine said, "absolutely."

Justice Department lawyers contend the lotteries violate century-old federal laws which make it a crime to mail or broadcast lottery information, move lottery equipment through interstate commerce or use the facilities of federally chartered banks.

Saxbe has invited the governors and lottery officials of the 13 states that run the games to confer with him on the issue today.

He appeared ready to advise them that congressional action is required to exempt state lotteries from the federal lottery laws and, failing that, he will seek civil court injunctions against their lotteries.

The states involved are Connecticut, Delaware, Illinois, Maine, Maryland, Massachusetts, Michigan, New Hampshire, New Jersey, New York, Pennsylvania, Ohio and Rhode Island.

Rep. Paul Findley, R-Ill., said in a statement yesterday that one of the states, Connecticut, has been issued a first class postal permit for its lottery operation in violation of federal law, and asked that it be revoked.

Seven oil companies indicted in New York

NEW YORK (UPI) Seven major oil companies yesterday were indicted on charges of plotting to restrict competition to force independent gasoline stations out of business.

The firms-Mobil, Exxon, Texaco, Amoco, Gulf, Shell and Sunoco-pleaded innocent in Manhattan Supreme Court.

Indictments handed up by a special state grand jury charge that the firms "engaged in an arrangement whereby competition in the sale of gasoline to the public was restrained."

In marketing areas with few independent stations, the companies "refrained from competing among themselves in terms of price," the indictments charged; where independents were numerous, the companies allegedly used discriminatory rebates to enable their own stations to cut prices.

EPA head pleased after meeting Ford

WASHINGTON [AP] — The head of the Environmental Protection Agency says his first meeting with President Ford was tremendously promising and that Ford is opening the doors of the Oval Office to agency heads.

Administrator Russel E. Train, who talked with Ford for 45 minutes on Wednesday, said in an interview. "The main thing was that he said he expected me to see him personally whenever I had a major issue to discuss."

Train said his environment agency's main need was "assurance that the administrator of EPA will have access to the President and will have input on the decision-making process."

Train had never met privately with former President Nixon to discuss environmental issues, but when he asked for a meeting with Ford, he said, he got it.

Train said Ford showed "a sincere desire to work directly with agency heads and not be shielded by his staff or by option papers."

He called the new president's attitude a great step forward.

Describing other points discussed in their meeting, Train said he did not seek substantive decisions immediately but he advised Ford of the need for early decisions in at least two areas.

He said Ford must soon review the administration's stand on proposed amendments to the Clean Air Act. Train favors amendments to give EPA more flexibility in the manner and timing of compliance with the national clean air standards.

Cuba vote by OAS seen

WASHINGTON [UPI] — Western Hemisphere foreign ministers will be called to meet in Ecuador Nov. 11 to vote on lifting diplomatic and economic sanctions imposed on Cuba 10 years ago, it was learned yesterday.

The request is included in a note which is expected to be presented today to the Organization of American States by the governments of Costa Rica, Colombia and Venezuela. A copy of the note was made available to UPI.

The drive to lift OAS sanctions is believed to have a good chance of success, according to diplomatic observers. It is understood to have at least tacit approval of President Ford.

The note will be delivered this morning to Panamanian OAS Ambassador Nander Pitty Velasquez, current chairman of the OAS council.

It requests a council session Sept. 19, at which the foreign ministers of the three sponsoring countries will be present.

Hub needs busing aid

Boston School Superintendant William F. Leary confirmed reports he is having difficulty finding persons to serve as bus monitors for the city's school desegregation program. Leary revealed only 105 of 315 positions have been filled. He said he was having difficulty finding monitors "in certain parts of the city", but declined to name the areas.

School department officials are planning equal safety measures at all of the 80 schools covered by the court-ordered desegregation program. No special measures will be taken at particular schools. Police, however, have selected potential areas of trouble which will be watched closely.

Some parents have called for a two-week boycott of classes. Leary expects some absenteeism and has arranged for tutors to help students catch up when they return.

Land must be bought

BOSTON [UPI] — In an opinion that could have far-reaching effects, a Superior Court judge has ruled that the state must proceed with a $4.2 million land purchase for a new state college campus.

In the decision, announced yesterday, Judge John F. Moriarity said the state must stand by a 1971 purchase and sales agreement for a 180 acre site in Dover, and cannot impound money appropriated by the legislature.

U.S. sets tighter controls on foreign fishing fleets

WASHINGTON [AP] — the United States imposed yesterday tighter controls on foreign fishing over the U. S. continental shelf.

The action, to be effective in 90 days, was reported to the Senate Foreign Relations Committee by John Norton Moore, chairman of the National Security Council interagency task force on the law of the sea.

The new enforcement procedures will provide for "more liberal boarding practices" to inspect ships fishing with trawling or bottom gear likely to catch lobsters and other bottom species of the continental shelf either inadvertantly or intentionally, Moore said.

Nations with fishing fleets operating over the U. S. continental shelf will be required to enter into bilateral agreements with the United States for modification of gear or other measures for the protection of continental shelf resources.

"Because of their potentially severe impact on foreign nations fishing over our continental shelf, these far reaching new measures will go into effect only after a 90-day grace period to enable affected nations to adjust their fishing methods or to conclude agreements further protecting our living resources," Moore said.

He said affected nations were being notified yesterday.

Also, Moore said, the United States is studying means for increased Coast Guard enforcement efforts to protect "our coastal and anadromous species in particularly vulnerable areas."

The action is being taken, he said, under the 1958 treaty on continental shelf resources, to which both Russia and Japan are parties.

Health costs soar

WASHINGTON [AP] — Hospital and doctor costs have increased 50 per cent faster than the economy as a whole since May and if unchecked could cost Americans an additional $13 billion over the next two years, Caspar W. Weinberger, secretary of health, education and welfare, said yesterday.

"This we must and will moderate." he said.

Engaging in a little economic jawboning of his own, Weinberger told the American Association of Medical Clinics that health care price increases "are a prominent fuel in the acceleration of the nation's inflation."

Since federal wage-price controls expired April 30, physician fees have risen at an annual rate of 19.1 per cent and hospital charges at an annual rate of 17.7 per cent, he said.

Turks occupy zone

NICOSIA Cyprus [AP] Turkish Cypriot forces have virtually occupied another pocket of northwest Cyprus, extending the so-called Attila line another 12 miles across the island, Turkish Cypriot leader Rauf Denktash said yesterday.

Occupation of the zone gave Turkish forces full command over Morphou Bay where the island's copper production is exported by the American-owned Cyprus Mines Corp.

Denktash, who is also vice president of Cyprus,. also announced he would resume meetings today with President Glafces Clerides, the Greek Cypriot leader, to discuss the crippling problems of about 234,000 refugees on the island.

Are reforms regressing?

"It's unfortunate that only the legislative commision has taken the initiative and embarassed the department into reform measures."

"The focus of attention should not be on the Belchertowns and the Fernalds, for they are only the tip of the iceberg. The real problem lies in dealing with a huge bureacracy which is seldom held accountable.."

The scope of the commission will be expanded next year so that it can assume authority to investigate all the state schools and institutions for the retarded.

An adversary relation has existed between the commission and DMH in the past, often times causing more political debates than action. However, the commission has managed to prod the department into statewide reform since its inception in 1970 after deplorable conditions were first cited by the local press at Belchertown State School.

One of the greatest resources being wasted today is the input of college and high school students, says Dr. Benjamin Ricci, UMass professor and president of the Belchertown State School Friends Association.

Dr. Ricci and a group of UMass students managed to safeguard the rights of a former state school resident who was sentenced to life imprisonment after being convicted of murder.

An effort to "free" 29-year-old Russell Daniels succeeded in June after months of intense pressure on the Governor's office last spring.

Gov. Sargent conceded failure on his administration's part and acknowledged that the resident's rights were "unfairly denied" on the basis of an illegally attained confession.

Gov. Sargent negotiated a transfer of the patient from prison back to Belchertown, exercising a seldom used legal statute that would enable DMH to assume responsibility from the Department of Corrections.

Dr. Ricci later called Atty Gen. Quinn "irresponsible" for ignoring a request from the Governor to investigate the conduct of the Springfield police who arrested Daniels."

Daniels' release from prison pending his fall appeal was the result of a semester project by students in Dr. Ricci's class.

"We should utilize the intellectual potential especially abundant at the University of Massachusetts. The legislature should make it rewarding for faculty and students to become involved in a cooperative venture aimed at surmounting many of the problems of the delivery of human services," he said.

"What is needed is a recognition/reward system which can easily be instituted. Legitimizing service—raising it to the level of teaching and research—is the key to faculty involvement, especially the involvement of junior faculty.

"The waiver of tuition, coupled with grants for room and board, could serve to legitimate, inexpensive inducement for student participation."

When the student senate last spring motioned to cut back in priority the funding of social action groups, Dr. Ricci appeared at the hearing to advise against the move. However, members of Gov. Sargent's staff said they saw no way to restore possible budget cuts by the student senate "with the crunch we're in."

Summer lies

The Big Lie. It was the Summer of the Big Lie. Locally, the young Swami of the pubetic Itchy-Gooney set, Guru Maharaj Ji, bestrode the rumps of his twelve thousand mindless nomads into Amherst, turning what seemed to be a greasy, fecal surrealistic College Campus, as Robert Blossom of the Amherst Record so tactfully ejaculated, into Barnum & Bailey's most bizarre sideshow. Indeed it seemed as the ghost of P.T. Barnum was everywhere to be seen and heard on that cosmic weekend. Throngs of neatly coiffured Madison Avenue attache types could be seen humping the vaunted godlet everywhere he chose to rest his kiss-weary feet. Ole P.T. would have chuckled at the ingenuity of it all. For two straight nights (Guru was supposed to appear on three nights, but was too tired on the first, proving that even gods have to eat their Wheaties), the great pumpkin jerked off before the thousands, coming several hours late. For them it was worthwhile, greeting his fourth grade soliliquoys with ecstatic manifestations of shouts and chants. Between performances and roughing it at the Northampton Hilton, the Guru could be seen handing out "darshun." This consisted of his being paraded about perched astride a jeep accepting long lines of followers who kissed his twitching feet and deposited gifts in the ever present U-Haul. And he took them all whether they gave checks, gold fillings or Sears & Roebuck toasters. Those who were here suffered the Great Con like so many twitching flounders, refusing to believe that it was real. It was as though Groucho and Chico were back, discussing a contract and Groucho would mention something about a Sanity Clause. "Dats Silly!" groaned Chico. "Everybody knows dere's no such ding as Santy Clause."

Nationally, the Great Lie lay strewn about, gouged into the bedrock of the Snake River Canyon. Ole Evel Knixon tried to hoist the anchor on the populace at large, including those fifty million clones who paid their money in 1972 to see if he could rocket to stardom over cadillacs and canyons. But Ole Evel missed, and was instead kissed by a Mack Truck. Thanks to the excellent coverage in the Press and the Constitutional awareness of all but the 25 per cent lunatic fringe of the American people. For months it seemed that Ole Evel might be able to safely crashland and reap the rewards of his folly. But that was quashed by the Rodinomobile and the powerful fists of Harris & Gallup which sent him nose diving earthward.

Goebells would have been at once proud and dissapointed. Student Nixon flunked out, but Student Maharaj Ji seems to be doing rather well.

Alas Poor Yorick, I knew him well.

A day at a jeanery

Used to be that looking cool or whatever was a matter of clothing oneself in whatever was available cheaply and was inherently comfortable rather than comfortable because someone on Madison Avenue told you so a thousand times or so.

A few years ago a friend of mine who had run away from home mailed me a pair of blue jeans from San Francisco. They were Navy surplus and had been purchased for the wallet shattering sum of $1.87. He also sent me a chambray shirt which was 75 cents.

Before these new additions to my wardrobe I was usually seen in cuffed slacks and a madras or button down collar "sport" shirt with penny loafers.

But somehow the blue jeans thing caught on and turned into an epidemic as youth rebelled counter cultured or otherwise broke ties with the establishment as it was refered to cynically.

The whole appearance of youth was cluck clucked as a shame and an outrage and an indication of our moral turpitude. (This was of course going on while Lyndon Johnson and Richard Nixon et. al. lied their way through two consecutive Presidency's at a cost of human life and national shame more far reaching than all the dungarees could ever produce; but they are finally gone.)

The barrage of indignation by elders was quickly silenced as bombs and strikes and marches took precedence to dress as things to complain about... and damn, what a flim flam on the attitudes of middle America when Woodstock came off without a fist thrown.

We are beyond all that now. The youth of America has proven to several commercial institutions that they are a singular group, not to be confused with quasi adults or late adolescents.

We have been convincing to the point where it is now an expensive and confusing thing to be a student. To wit: buying dungarees. A recent journey to a local denim emporium proved to be too much:

Me: I want a pair of dungarees, size thirty-six, thirty one.

The Dungaree Ms: Sure, do you want shrink to fit, or already shrunk, button or zipper fly, bootleg, straight leg, bell bottom, with rivets or without, wide belt or skinny?

Me: How about something in blue.

The D. Ms: Sure do you want prewashed faded, or unwashed dark blue, brushed cotton or a blend of man mades.

Me: I don't care, just blue like cowboys wear.

The D. Ms: Sure, that must mean you want a bootleg, what are you going to use them for?

Me: So I don't catch a cold I guess.

The D. Ms: OK try these on.

I did just that, emerging from the dressing room to inspect the pants in a mirror. My gaze was interupted by –

The D. Ms: Let me see those are Brand X they will shrink an inch in the waist and two in the leg, if you try brand Y the shrinkage will be more advantageous.

Me: OK

The D.Ms: I don't have those in a bootleg, how about a bell bottom?

Me: Sure.

The D. Ms: Do you want pre shrunk or unshrunk, cotton or a blend of man-mades.

Me: Blue

The D. Ms: Here, try these on.

I did just that, emerging from the dressing room to inspect the pants in a mirror. My gaze was interupted by –

The D. Ms. That's good.

Ms: I'll take them, how much are they?

The D. Ms: Twelve dollars.

Me: Gulp sure, now can I have a jacket to match.

The D. Ms: Sure, do you want one lined or unlined, engineer or western style, pearl or imitation brass buttons, pre washed shrunken cotton or a combination of brushed man mades.

Me: Blue, like cowboys wear.

The D. Ms: Sure, what size do you wear?

Me: Forty-four regular.

The D. Ms: OK take this it's a sixty-six long, you have to allow some for shrinkage.

Me: Whatever, how much is it.

The D. Ms: Sixteen-fifty.

Me: Gulp, OK

So off I walked with my new wardrobe feeling as if I had just invested in a new mink for my mother. I paid the lady. She gave me a piece of sandpaper and a packet of bleach. (How nice I thought wondering what to do with my reward for spending money there.)

Me: What are the sandpaper and bleach for?

The D. Ms: To soak your pants and jacket and then sand the knees and elbows, you want to look cool don't you... no one wears new dungarees.

Me: Oh, yeah sure. By the way do you know how much twelve dollars divided by $1.87 is?

The D. Ms: No, but would you like to buy a pocket computer, we have them in red and blue with green or yellow letters that have an adjustable decimal point and add subtract, divide multiply or find square roots. If you buy a blue one that has red letters we can give you a deluxe imitation leather carrying case with your initials embossed in gold leaf............

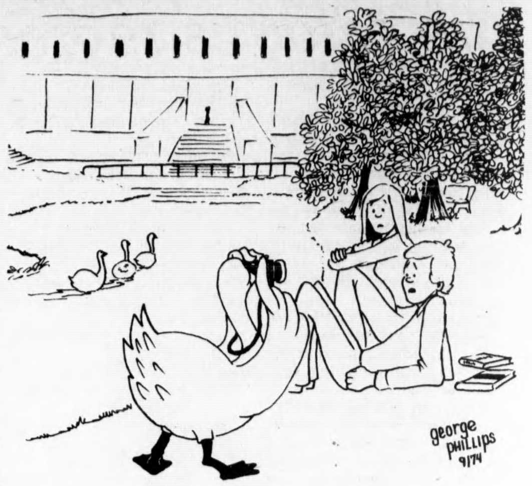
Dean Tucker is the Collegian's Executive Editor



You are needed to make these pages

The editorial pages of the Collegian are distinct in that they enjoy the largest readership of all sections of the paper. This is highly unusual for editorial pages, they usually finish in the also-rans as far as popularity is concerned taking a back seat to sports, Dear Abby, Horoscopes and comics among other heavyweight writings.

Perhaps because the Collegian is a college paper, the editorial pages get more attention than in community papers, or perhaps it is because the pages are what they should be, entertaining, provocative, attractive, open and accurate.

We would like to think so, and considerable effort has been made in the past to ensure this to be the case. Things change...more rapidly here than in communities. People come and go. Last June they left like horses from the starting gate, quickly and in a group.

If the editorial pages are to continue to try to represent the many viewpoints of this multi-class campus replacements for those departed must be found. The Collegian needs people from all walks of life to work as Columnists, Commentators, Cartoonists, Copyreaders, Layout Artists, and Illustrators.

If you don't want to work on the Ed pages perhaps News, Sports, Photography, Business, Advertising, Graphics Distribution, or the Arts interests you.

Whatever, if you have any interest in the printed media, you can expand it here.

A meeting for all people interested in joining the Collegian staff will be held Monday night in rooms 904-909 of the Campus Center at 8:00. Refreshments.

Or if you don't want to come, remember the next time you bitch about what "they" did in the Collegian you could have been there to meet the "theys" or influence them.

Letters Policy

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian welcomes all letters to the editor. They must be signed and include the author's address and phone number. Also, all letters must be typed, double-spaced, at sixty spaces per line, and no more than two pages.

Organizations may submit letters, but they must include a name and phone number for reference purposes.

All letters are subject to editing, for either content or space, according to the judgement of the editors. Due to space limitations, there is no guarantee that all letters received will be printed.

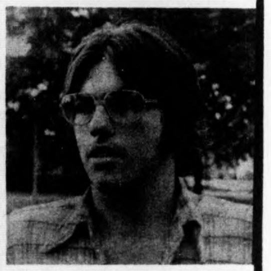
Man in the street

Text by E. Patrick McQuaid
Photography by Chris Bourne

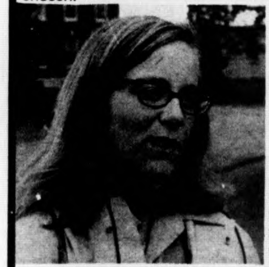
Needless to say, Richard Nixon's resignation from the U.S. presidency was the summer's front page story. The aftermath of this historic event is that two men, one an obscure unknown, the other an industrial rajah, now hold the highest seats in the nation. The American people had no choice in their selection; now they speak out.

THE QUESTION: How do you feel about President Ford's selection of Nelson Rockefeller as Vice President; and how important is that office, today?

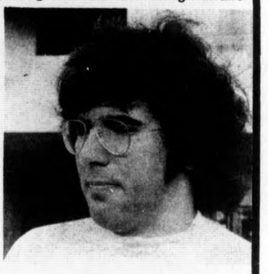
George Spencer, 21, Stockbridge major, freshman from Clinton, Mass., Gorman-Central: Rockefeller has so much money, so many political campaigns that he's been through, and they talk about looking through Nixon's tax returns and all, well, I think if they just begin to investigate Rockefeller I don't think we'll have a vice president by 1976. He seems honest, and I think he could do the job if he ever gets there.



Dean Jones, 19, freshman from Westminster, Mass., Cashin-Silvan: People usually vote for the president and not for the vice president. In this past situation neither man was chosen by the American people. I feel that the office of vice president is necessary only in the event of an accident with the president; otherwise there's not much to it. If Rockefeller is confirmed by the senate and all, we're going to have two men in there that the people haven't chosen.

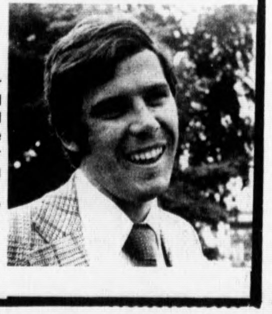


Sue Peterson, 23, Fisheries major, grad student from Ontario, N.Y., Colonial Village: I think they've got the wrong guy if they want to reduce government spending. Personally I think he's done a pretty decent job in New York. I like the way he handled the education situation. Not too many people like him because of Attica, though. I don't know what kind of power they'll give him, or any vice president in the future. I guess he's got a good record in foreign affairs.



Al Flanagan, 21, Psychology major, transfer student from Earlham College, hometown Milburn, N.J., Puffton Village: Personally, Rockefeller wouldn't be my choice for vp. He really turned me off and a lot of others with what he did at Attica. He is so much a part of big business and military industry that he won't really represent the people. I am much more a proponant of the British method. There would have been no Watergate.

Barry Alessandrini, 21, Aborculture Park management major, senior from Worcester, Mass., Gorman-Central: I am so fed up with the government and the way it's been running that I don't like it any more and I don't care! Neither office has any meaning any more. Whatever happens doesn't seem to make much of a difference today.



Craig Stuart, 28, staff member from Belchertown, Mass.: Ford needed him to get industry in and he's got a lot of money. Perhaps he can be good for the country as far as money goes. It will take a long time to clear up all investigations, but I think he'll be in office by January. He's a balance to Ford.

Plants can liven up dormitories

By THALASSA CRUSO

There are many ways of making something of a room, but one of the cheapest and fastest methods to point up personal identity is to have living plants around. A thriving foliage plant that is obviously a long-term investment strikes a very positive note against the rather lost feeling that comes over most of us when faced with monolithic brick or concrete. A healthy plant is an automatic assertion of optimism. And a plant that improves through your care will make you feel like a bit of a miracle worker - as you might well be, considering the problems plants face in most dormitory rooms.

But on the other hand, while healthy plants give off all the right waves, dying plants are twice as bad as no plants at all. So it is necessary to choose plants carefully for your initial adventure. Not everything can take the hazards of dormitory life. Start off very inexpensively so there will be no great trauma if you fail.

If you keep your windows closed on bitter nights, try inexpensive little tropical plants that can take heat and don't need much light. Most 5 & 10's carry those small philodendrons with thin, trailing heart shaped leaves. Three of these, together with: a plastic pot six inches across at the top plus saucer to fit, a bag of bird gravel, a bag of potting soil and some old fashioned hairpins (same store, different counter!) will do for a start. Pour an inch of gravel over the bottom of the pot. Over that pour a couple of inches of packaged soil and pound that down with your fist - plants need to stand on something firm.

Next, knock the philodendrons out of their pots by turning them over and rapping the edge of the pot against something hard. (Make sure that your other hand is ready to catch the rootball as it comes loose.) If this seems too difficult, break the pot and pull the fragments and the base off the rootball. Try to keep as much soil around the roots as possible.

Set the rootballs into the pot in a triangular arrangement, and pour extra soil into the crevices. This should be pushed in hard with your thumbs. Left loose, the little rootballs will wobble around and die. Pin the trailing foliage down against the surface of the soil. (Wind the trails onto the top of the pot like a braid if they're too long.) The hairpins should press hard against the stems forcing them into the topsoil. Pinning in makes the pot look lusher, and new roots and fresh shoots will spring where the stems come into close contact with soil, leading eventually to a bushy, evergreen crown.

Fill up the saucer with bird gravel and stand the pot on that. This allows space for surplus water to collect when you overwater - which you will. It is important never to allow water to rise over the top of the grave. More plants are killed by having the bottom of the pots perpetually standing in water than by any other thing. Safe on this drywell, a philodendron in a plastic pot needs water only when the top soil looks dry. It can stand owner absence for well over a week. And the drywell will evaporate humidity into the room.

If you are fresh air fiend, get hold of a clean commissary-size mayonnaise jar; or if you are in the chips, buy a small fish tank. Layer the bottom with gravel and earth and be as neat as you can. Soil splashed on the glass will ruin the effect. Knock out a philodendron as before but this time shake all the soil off the roots. Spread the roots out on the surface soil and then very carefully press another inch of earth on them, enough to hold the plant steady. Shake drops of water from a hand brush into the container and onto the soil, but don't actually pour water inside - remember there is no drainage. Finally, spread a plastic food wrap tightly across the open top.

Put the planted container where it gets good light but not bright sun. A hot sun will heat up the interior and kill the plant. If the glass mists up, take off the wrap for a few hours to allow surplus moisture to evaporate.

Food prices continue climb; up 14 percent

Food prices continued their relentless climb during August, rising to a level 14 per cent higher than a year earlier, an Associated Press marketbasket survey shows.

The AP checked the prices of 15 food and nonfood items in 13 cities on March 1, 1973, and has rechecked at the beginning of each succeeding month.

The latest check, at the start of the Labor Day weekend, showed that during August the marketbasket went up in every city surveyed except Dallas, Tex., where it dropped by a penny. The average increase was 4½ per cent. During July, the AP marketbasket rose in all 13 cities.

Many increases reflected higher prices paid to farmers and there were indications of further boosts because of the recent Midwest drought that severely damaged the corn crop that feeds the nation's dairy cows, poultry and beef cattle.

The Agriculture Department reported last Friday that the price index for raw farm products rose 3 per cent from July 15 to Aug. 15. The increase followed a 6 per cent boost during the previous month.

The increases come after a period during which farmers complained they were losing money on their products.

Mrs. Smith to be first woman head of GOP

By United Press International

Mary Louise Smith, the first woman ever nominated to head the Republican Party, brings to the job what her friends describe as an amazing ability to organize and a knowledge of politics gained from grassroots participation.

A tall, slender woman with silver grey hair, Mrs. Smith at 60 has been a vocal proponent of women's rights and equal participation for women, minorities and young people in the Republican Party. Prior to being named co-chairman of the party in February of this year, Mrs. Smith had served as vice chairman of the Rule 29 Committee, the national GOP group dedicated to party reform and equal opportunity.

The National Committee was expected to meet Sept. 16 to endorse Ford's nomination of Mrs. Smith.

She will replace George Bush of Texas as the No. 1 official of the Republican Party, and although her political peers in Iowa have no doubt that she will be able to handle the job, President Ford's decision to nominate Mrs. Smith as party chairman came as a complete surprise.

"I was shocked," said Joe Gaylor, executive director of the Iowa Republican Party. "I didn't know Mr. Bush would be leaving. The first thing I heard about it was on the news while I was driving to work this morning."

Mrs. Smith lived in Eagle Grove, Iowa, for 18 years before moving to Des Moines where she and her husband, Dr. Elmer Smith, make their home. While in Eagle Grove, Mrs. Smith was vice chairman of the Wright County Republican Committee.

Her husband, who is director of the Medical Services Bureau of the Iowa Department of Social Services, has maintained the family home in Des Moines while Mrs. Smith has been forced to spend most of her time in Washington since becoming Bush's "co-pilot" on Feb. 26.

A 1935 graduate of the University of Iowa with a degree in social work administration, Mrs. Smith has been involved in the Iowa Commission for the Blind and the Governor's Commission on the Aging. She was both the membership and the finance chairman for the Iowa Federation of Republican Women.

Perhaps the greatest attributes she ofters to the Republicans as the party begins an age of rebuilding are her expertise as a public speaker and her knack as a super political organizer.

Mary Louise Smith

Mrs. Smith, who was named to the Republican National Committee from Iowa in 1964, was active in the 1966 committee on party reform, and she was a member of the arrangements and platform committees of both the 1968 and 1972 Republican National Conventions. She was a member of the National Committee's executive committee from 1969 to 1973.

During a recent visit to Des Moines before the resignation of President Nixon, Mrs. Smith told a Republican gathering that the GOP must actively counter Democratic charges or face significant losses in the November elections.

Although Watergate and its related scandals have hurt the party, she called the situation "something we are just going to have to face up to."

Mrs. Smith said the party must now reach out to all factions of society, particularly those groups who have heretofore been outside the political process.

"I think the Republicans can win in November if we rededicate ourselves to the basic Republican principles. We can win if we focus on individual candidates and issues," she said.

RANDY'S RESTAURANT
By E PATRICK McQUAID

...well, i gut a little story ta teil ya, it's not to long of a story and it concerns you. me, me, and a man named Whitmore; now mind ya he didn't do anything wrong, they just named a building after him and never before in the history of education has a name been more despised, hated, taken in vain; why eventually the building took on a personality of its own and has had more threats and insults thrown at it than can be counted, but back to the story...well, it was raining when i pulled up on into the parking lot outside of Whitmore and i had to run and dodge the drops one by one till i got to the building, but once inside i was greeted by its warm friendship...so i wandered up to the first official looking office and asked the smiling official behind the desk, "who's in charge 'round here, who knows what's going on," to which he only laughed and he said, he said "kid...kid don't ya know that this is only the administration building, why nothin' happens 'round here, kid, whatcha gutta do, now, is head on down ta the Curry Hicks gym ta fill out 'bout twenty a thirty forms all ta be signed, sealed, resigned and sent back here for me ta pass on ta somebaudy else ta sign till they get back ta you and ya start over again," so i headed down ta this gym he told me about and they said i'd have ta wait till one a'clock cause they wouldn't be open till then and would i mind waitin' outside in the cold and rain i said i would and they closed the door but i didn't mind too much cause there was twenty thousand more of us just a waitin out there in the cold and rain until the doors finally opened and we all poured in faster than our feet could carry us and i got in a line that i could neither see the beginning nor the end of but finally i got up front, just a second away from being number one, just two away, just one away, well now it was my turn, after waitin' only two hours, thirty three minutes, four seconds, but who was countin', and the man at the window, the man, he said, he said, "kid...kid you're in the wrong line kid, the wrong line, now whatcha gutta do, idd, is get in that line over there, and the man behind the window pointed to anutha long, long, endless line off ta my right and he said, he said, "weell, now, kid, ya gutta get in that line an' just wait till ya see that there fella, and he'll take care of all your needs," so i got up from that line and joined the other line, me and all the other twenty thousand students and all, and we waited and waited and waited until the otha man told us ta move on elsewhere and so we did; well i finally got a hold of some papers that had my name on 'em and they all needed signin' like the man at Whitmore told me they would so i took 'em back ta the first line an' waited 'bout anutha three ta four years till i got 'em signed and brought 'em ta the next place on the map where the lady, the pretty young lady in the blue and white cotton dress, with the mean disposition said, she said ta me. "listen, listen, kid, kid whatcha gutta do now is get special permission from chancellor Randy ta take these here courses that you've signed up for, ya understand, don't ya kid, ya understand" so i took 'em to the office, the designated office of one randolph bromery ta have 'em signed like i was told to but wouldn't ya know he was on vacation either that or he didn't exist, this randolph bromery, and i was told by everyone from miles around to see ole randy, cause, as ya might know, you can get anything you want at randy's restaurant, includin' education. an not ta mention randy, so i was sent by his office, as it was called, back ta the curry-hicks gym and they sent me down ta the boyden gym because my cards were on file there so i went there like they told me and they talked and talked an' i didn't know a thing they were sayin' ta me but i listened anyway 'cause i knew right well that if i didn't i'd never get outta there but i did, ya i finally did, cause i found out that i wasn't s'posed ta reg'star till thursday, which was two days away, so me an 'bout twenty thousand other students, students from all around, gathered outside the curry-hicks gym an' tne boyden gym an' we complained and complained till our ears turned blue, cause as ya might know, by then it was a snowin' quite heavy, and someone said ta me, he said, "ya know, you can get anything you want at randy's restaurant, includin' frustration, constapation," an', well he was continuing, but i didn't wanta hear it right then an' there so i left him an' the boyden gym, and the curry-hicks gym, called the cage, though i can name a few other places that deserve such terminology, and the Whitmore administration building and went back ta my car ta head on out, but i found a ticket, a ticket that said, it said, "kid," "kid," it

Course to study Soviet farming

Soviet Agriculture is a new course that may interest you. The course is offered in the Department of Food and Resource Economics, UM-A, and will be taught by Professor Elmar Jarvesoo.

Agriculture has played a crucial role in Soviet industrialization and in its economic development model. Organization of Soviet agriculture differs more from its Western counterpart than any other sector of the Soviet economy. Great experimentation is still going on.

The course covers the potentials, problems and perspectives of Soviet agriculture, and historically from the last days of Tsarist rule to the recent U.S. grand wheat sale. Treatment of the subject matter is broader than discussing Soviet farm policy or technology. Consequently, the course should be of interest to non-majors.

The first class meets on friday, 6 Sept., at 4 p.m. in Draper Hall, Rm. 201 to arrange the fall semester class schedule. If interested, but cannot come to the first class, call 545-2496 for information. Of course, enrollment is open to the Five College students.

Ask Harry Bloomfield

CASIAC helps frustrated desperate freshmen

Harry Bloomfeld was indignant. Not only had he been dropped from Chem III and Touch Football, but the computer refused to believe that he had paid his board and refused to issue him a meal ticket. Starved and angry, like so many young men and women before him, he set out to do bodily harm to those that strove to maim him.

Concrete. Cold, hard and crushing. Busy little eyes and soft waxen smiles, incongruously attached to sharp brisk voices, issuing poor Harry Bloomfeld out of the office and into the cold and wet wild. Harry didn't even know how to use the phones. Who had ever heard of dialing a nine before all the rest. Harry lost much of his fire, dampened as it was by so much frustration and fatigue.

It was almost an accident, the way Harry found his way to safety. He was bouncing around in Machmer Hall, trying to find the mythical professor to some hackneyed Anthro course somebody told him was a gut, when he passed by a door with a jumble of funny letters on it. CASIAC. Probably another organization dedicated to the perpetuation of bureaucratic self manipulation, or the harder you rub it, the worse it bleeds.

"Can I help you?" beamed the smiling young woman at the poor hesitant student, standing pogo-legged at the door with his sleeve up his nose.

"WWhWhoo mmmeee??" Stuttered Harry, taken aback, startled that anybody would pay attention to him."

"Come in and sit down. My name is Lynne. What's your problem you look so flustered."

"HHHHII. MMmmyy name is Harry. I'm being destroyed, by THEM. I don't know where to turn to. I haven't eaten in days. I've been dropped from my courses. I don't even know what I'm majoring in and why. I don't know where to turn to. I haven't eaten in days. I've been dropped from my courses. I don't even know what I'm majoring in and why. I don't even know what a major is. I don't know where I am or who I am. All I can hear is Rod Serling's voice rasping in my breath."

"Calm down Harry.! Take it easy - you're among friends now. Here - take one of these - our Majors Booklets in which you'll find all of the majors in the College of Arts & Sciences, and also majors at other schools in the University. A major is a jumble of courses you take here that relate to each other and after four years of it, make you a better person, so they say.

"We have information about other programs too. There's BDIC, where you can construct your own major, if none of the traditional ones seem to suit. There's University Without Walls where you can pick up credits for life experience. In your case, you could probably get some credits for Frustration 101. If you don't want to stay on campus, you can get University credits for related fieldwork. There's University Year for Action, and if you're desperate, OUTREACH.

"We also have lots of information on certificate programs like Latin Studies and Women's Studies. There are in addition majors in Interdisciplinary Studies like Social Thought and Political Economy. If and when you ever get your head together and wish more of the same, we even have Pre Law and Pre Graduate School advisors, not to mention John Adams our gallant School of Ed entrepeneur.

"For now, just take some courses that look appealing and maybe fulfill some core requirements to boot. And by all means take it easy. We also do a bunch of bureaucratic stuff - overloads, pass-fails, language waivers, change of majors, withdrawals, add-drops, and the rest.

"Chances are that if it has to do with paper, we've got it. Remember Harry, that you've got a month to add-drop courses easily, so if something doesn't suit you, you can easily remedy it. Why don't you talk for now talk to one of our crack faculty advisors, like Professor Lamb, who'll try and give some direction, other than down."

"Thank you. Its a relief to talk to somebody, anybody."

"If you have any trouble, come back and our CASIAC troubleshooters will straighten it out. Remember we're in here in E-20 Machmer Hall."

"Harry walked outside and breathed a sigh of relief and went to lunch.

State gas supplies upped by conservation

BOSTON [AP] - Energy planners are optimistic that there will be no return of long gasoline lines in Massachusetts.

Adequate supplies of gasoline and continued conservation by drivers should continue to keep the fuel crisis at arm's length, according to Robert W. Mitchell, chief of the regional Federal Energy Administration.

"We have a delightful situation where conservation is working and supplies exceed demand," Mitchell said Wednesday. "I foresee that gasoline will be in reasonable supply provided that there continues to be conservation."

He stressed that conservation is the key element.

"It's a very, very delicate balance between supply and demand," he said.

Conservation efforts have dropped since the peak of the energy crisis, but appear to have levelled off with sales at about 8 per cent below the level projected under normal conditions according to Secretary of Consumer Affairs John R. Verani.

Verani released figures Wednesday showing that gasoline sales by the gallon from January through June were 6.2 per cent below the same period last year.

He said sales for the first half of the year were 10.5 per cent below the level projected by his office given normal growth and demand.

Tight supplies and careful conservation were at their peak in January, when sales were 14.3 per cent below Verani's projected estimate.

That percentage has been dropping steadily since then, and Verani said the July usage figures, due this week, will help determine whether his projection of an 8 per cent level for the rest of the year is correct.

Meanwhile, the American Automobile Association (AAA) reported that the availability of gasoline at service stations throughout the state is gradually increasing, and that the outlook for this fall is good.

Richard W. Hoover of the AAA said more and more gasoline stations appear to be staying open Sundays and evenings.

NO-CONFIDENCE is the vote of the majority of the faculty of USoFla in their annual evaluation of university administrators.

More than 50 per cent of the respondents said that the University President and his vice-president for academic affairs do not deserve faculty confidence. The vote confirms a 1973 reaction.

Primary reason for the low rating, says The Oracle, is a lack of consultation with faculty and students.

For two years, President Mackey has refused to comment on the faculty evaluation. VP/AA Riggs says he doesn't understand the no-confidence vote.

SABBATICALS GO BEGGING at UMinn, according to a recent Minnesota Daily dispatch. Only about one in four faculty eligible each year take advantage of the hiatus, says a UM Senator.

Logistical difficulties in transplanting families, some departmental delays of promotions and salary increases for those on leave, and the half-salary paid during sabbaticals are the principal deterrents.

CAMPUS CRIME PAYS, if Amherst College is any example. During the last 18 months, the Amherst Student reports, about $60,000 worth of college property has been stolen.

Most popular victims are the libraries, which have reported losses of $20-30,000. Food equipment and utensils have been "borrowed" to the tune of $10,000. And the Athletic Department reports that $1,000 worth of equipment is its standard annual loss.

HEADLINE OF THE WEEK appears in the Framingham (MA) State College Gatepost, which labels its announcements column as the "Bullboard."

Panel to study Amherst water

A panel discussion on "The Water Supply for Amherst, Hadley, and the UMass Campus" will be held today (Friday) at 3:00 in the Main Lecture Hall at Patterson Hall at Hampshire College.

The panel for the debate, which is open to the public, will be comprised of Nancy Eddy, Amherst Selectwoman; Representative James Collins (D—Amherst); Dr. Edward Belt, Professor of Geology at Amherst College; Dr. Lynn Miller, Professor of Biology at Hampshire; and Dr. Ward Motts, Professor of Geology at UMass. Moderator for the program will be Dr. Louis Wilcox, Professor of Biology at Hampshire.

Time permitting, the panelists will also field questions from the audience.

Continuing Ed offers funds

The Division of Continuing Education is offering a wide variety of financial assistance options to its students.

For the first time, Continuing Education students will be eligible for UMass financial aid in the form of loans and grants to cover direct educational expenses (books and fees). To qualify for consideration a student must be registered for a minimum of six credits and be enrolled in an approved degree or certification program such as Legal Assistant Program, Bachelor of General Studies or Bachelor of Arts.

Registration for fall semester must be completed before an application for financial assistance can be submitted. The deadline for application is Sept. 9. For further information and an application contact the Division of Continuing Education, 205 Hills North, UMass (545-0905) or the UMass Financial Aid Office, Whitmore Administration Building.

All credit courses offered through the Division of Continuing Education are approved by the Veteran's Administration for educational benefits. Students can obtain the appropriate forms from the Veterans Affairs Office in Whitmore after they have completed registration.

In-service law enforcement officers are eligible for aid under the provisions of the Law Enforcement Education Program (LEEP). For further information on financial assistance and courses contact the Division of Continuing Education, 205 Hills North.

Health plan to be explained

The University Health Services will sponsor an information and question-and-answer session about the new Supplementary Health Plan for students and also the insurance option for students' dependents. The meeting, offered in cooperation with the Office of Commuter Affairs, will be held Monday, at 12 noon in Campus Center room 917.

The new supplementary insurance plan offers students a hospital, surgical and medical program to supplement the on-campus care provided by the Health Services. Among other benefits the policy includes full coverage of costs for services in an affiliated hospital (Cooley Dickinson) and by an affiliated surgical group; and improved maternity benefits.

Bilingual tutorial offered

Any student who has completed Spanish 140 or its equivalent is eligible to sign up for Spanish 301: Tutoring Spanish-Speaking Students (3 credits). It is not necessary to be a Spanish major, almost half the students who have enrolled in this course in the past were majors in other departments. Students will be bused to Holyoke on Mondays and Wednesdays to tutor Puerto-Rican children in bilingual classrooms on the elementary and junior high-school levels. There may also be opportunities to tutor Puerto-Rican mothers in their homes and inmates at the Hampshire County House of Correction in Northampton.

The bus to Holyoke will leave the campus at 8:30 A.M., returning about 11:45. Students planning to enroll in this course should thus keep M-W-F mornings completely free (no problems about making lunch or a 12:20 class.) There will be occasional meetings on Friday mornings for orientation, discussion of general progress, or to hear speakers. Students enrolled in the course will be asked to do some background reading for a short written report, as well as to keep an experiential journal, which will be on the basis for their final paper.

There will be an initial meeting of Spanish 301 on Monday, Sept. 9, at 9:30 A.M. in the Third Floor Lounge in Herter Hall. For further information, please call Professor Nina Scott at 5-0613.

Health services to provide information on contraceptives

Information, counseling and prescriptions for contraceptives are available to students through the University Health Services as part of a comprehensive student health program. Staff members provide non-judgmental consultation to help you to make your own decision in a safe, informed, and responsible manner.

Women utilizing the contraception services for the first time must attend an educational session. Men are most welcome at this informal program and no appointment is needed. These hour-long sessions are held in Room 302 of the Health Services on Monday at 3:00 p.m., Tuesday at 7:00 p.m., Wednesday at 7:00 p.m., and Thursday at 3:00 p.m. starting Monday, September 16. Two early sessions will be offered Monday, September 9 and Thursday, September 12 at 3:00 p.m.

Contraception Clinic appointments are scheduled on Monday through Thursday evenings. Appointments for re-fill prescriptions, routine pap tests, and check-ups are available with a nurse practitioner. Call 549-2600 between 8:00 a.m. and 5:00 p.m., Monday through Friday, for clinic appointments. If you have any questions, call the Health Education Office at 549-2671.

Counselors are available for consultation during the evening clinics. The counselors are willing to listen and talk with you about your feelings related to the practice of contraception, the selection of a contraception method, pressure from peers, parents or others, or issues concerning your own sexuality or sexual activity. Couples may also seek consultation with the counselors.

You may see them during clinic sessions without an appointment. Stop and tell the receptionist you would like to see the Contraceptive Clinic Counselor.

Pats' Achilles heel still defense

By GIL PETERS
UPI Sports Writer

BOSTON [UPI] — The memories of O. J. Simpson leading a parade of NFL runners through the New England Patriot defense last season keeps Chuck Fairbanks from fantasizing.

The second-year coach has cause for optimism offensively because Jim Plunkett is a year smarter and the kids in the backfield and on the line are a year older.

Yet little has changed on defense, which was last in 1973 among the 26 NFL teams against the run. There may be a couple of new linebackers and quicker men at the corners but the defense will be the same that basically allowed Simpson a league record 250 yards in a 1973 game.

"I would say that our offense has a chance to be improved this season," said Fairbanks. "But we are not, in my opinion, a good defensive team. Our defense gave up 146 points fewer last year than the year before but there are still many miles to go before this becomes as strong a defensive team as I hope it can be."

Even if the Patriots, who were 5-9 last season, can't stop the run any better in 1974, they should be able to run better themselves.

Second year fullback Sam Cunningham, who was injured last preseason and intermittently during the season, is in excellent condition and running as he did as a college star at Southern California.

Bob McCall, picked up on waivers in 1973, also has run well, while veterans Josh Ashton and John Tarver are healthy and opening holes as blocking backs for their younger counterparts.

Plunkett, the 1970 Heisman Trophy winner while at Stanford, will call many of his own plays this season, a reward from Fairbanks which should give the fourth-year pro a mental boost. Plunkett completed 51.3 per cent of his passes in 1973, his best accuracy average, while throwing 13 touchdowns and 17 interceptions.

Wide receivers Reggie Rucker (AFC leader with 53 catches last year), Darryl Stingley and Randy Vataha return. And 5-foot-5 Mack Herron will field punts and kickoffs again in addition to subbing in the backfield.

Center Jon Morris, who missed 12 games with a knee injury, returns to secure the offensive line. Veteran linemen Len St. Jean and Tom Neville, also hurt during the '73 season, will be back while second-year men John Hannah, the No. 1 draft last season, and Leon Gray will have a year's experience behind them.

Defensively, tackle Julius Adams is the one standout. Art Moore, picked up on waivers from San Francisco last season, is a good prospect at the other tackle.

Fairbanks holds hope for rookie linebackers Steve Nelson and Sam Hunt. Nelson, a second-round choice from North Dakota, has impressed Fairbanks with his desire to hit while Hunt, a 15th round pick from Alcorn A&M, has impressed enough to earn a possible starting job.

New faces Jim Massey and Willie Osley will provide a little more size at cornerback to help on running plays while rookies Prentice MacRay and John Sanders add speed at safety. Cornerbacks George Hoey and Ron Bolton will be back and Jack Mildren, Fairbanks's wishbone quarterback at Oklahoma, will be at safety with veteran Sandy Durko.

Wilson respects decision

HOUSTON [AP] — Don Wilson missed his chance for a third no-hitter but says he has more respect than ever for Manager Preston Gomez of the Houston Astros.

Gomez repeated a bit of personal history Wednesday night by pulling Wilson for a pinch hitter to open the bottom of the eighth inning when Wilson was just three outs short of a no-hitter although the Astros were behind 2-0 against the Cincinnati Reds.

Tony Perez killed the no-hit threat by singling in the ninth off Mike Cosgrove, Wilson's reliever.

Wilson went into seclusion after being pulled but when he finally entered the nearly deserted clubhouse he said he had nothing but admiration for Gomez.

"I respect Preston Gomez as a manager and respect him more than ever," Wilson said. "He wants to win, and I want to win as much as he does. When people start putting personal goals ahead of the team, you'll never have a winner. I understand how Preston feels."

Wilson added that Gomez is consistent.

"I know the fans were unhappy with me," Gomez said. "They wanted to see a no-hitter, but I don't get paid to please people. I get paid to win baseball games, and I would make the same decision 1,000 more times."

SPORTS STAFF! — Editor Dave Eibel is looking for a new assistant. If you think you're qualified, see Dave this afternoon in the Collegian office.

Intramural Notices

All residence hall, independent, fraternity and sorority units should elect or appoint Sports Managers (Athletic Chairpersons last year) as soon as possible. There will be meetings for all IM Sports Officials and Supervisors at 7:00, 215 Boyden Building, on Wednesday, 9-11-74, and Thursday, 9-12-74. Attendance at these metings is mandatory.

Another Watergate

CINCINNATI [UPI] — The Cincinnati City Council unanimously adopted Thursday a resolution complaining that the Cincinnati Reds "was robbed" by the decision of an umpire this week.

The resolution, drawn up by Councilman Charles P. Taft, 76, condemned the call of Jerry Dale in Monday night's Reds-Astros game at Houston.

Dale called Joe Morgan out at home plate on a close play in the seventh inning and the Reds went on to lose the game 4-3. Taft claimed a televised "instant replay" showed Morgan was safe.

Taft, who described himself as an "enthusiastic" Reds fan, said the resolution would be forwarded to baseball commissioner Bowie Kuhn, National League President Chub Fenney and to the supervisor of umpires in the league.

Sports Notices

Soccer — There will be a meeting of all soccer candidates at 5:00 p.m., Friday, September 6th, in Room 227 Boyden. All candidates, varsity and junior varsity are urged to attend.

Fall Baseball Tryouts — All interested candidates who want to try out for the upcoming season, please see Coach Bergquist in his office, Room 217 Boyden. Tryouts will be held from Monday, September 9th to Thursday, September 12th from 3—5 p.m. on the Varsity field. Please bring your own equipment.

Fall Lacrosse — A meeting will be held for all fall lacrosse candidates in Room 249, Boyden Gymnasium, Friday, September 6th at 4:30 p.m.

Harriers expect finest year ever

The University of Massachusetts cross country team opens practice this week with expectations for their finest team ever. The defending New England and Yankee Conference champions return four of their top five men, and seven of their top nine from 1973.

Leading the Minutemen will be Co-Captains Randy Thomas (Fitchburg) and Bill Gillin (Holliston). Thomas will be defending his Yankee Conference crown after being an NCAA finalist last spring in the three mile. Gillin just missed All American honors last spring as he finished fifth in the NCAA steeplechase.

Backing up Thomas and Gillin will be two underclassmen that finished in the top fifteen at the New Englands in 1973. Junior Tom Maquire (Foxboro) and Soph John McGrail (Stoughton). Battling for the remaining spots on the team will be returning lettermen Tom Wilson (Merion, Pa.), IC4A steeplechase runnerup, Junior Phil Broughton (Brookfield), soph Chris Farmer (Newburyport), and soph John Scheer (Burlington, Vt.). Junior college transfer Frank Noto (Maywood, N.J.) of Allegheny Community College could also challenge for a top spot.

Head Coach Ken O'Brien's harriers open at home with Boston College on Sept. 28, before meeting two teams that defeated them in 1973, Harvard at Boston Oct. 1, and Northeastern at home Oct. 5. The Minutemen then face two of the country's finest squads, 1973 IC4A champ Manhattan and Southern Conference champ William and Mary at Van Cortland Park in New York, October 12, with Syracuse and Connecticut also competing in the fiveway meet.

Phys Ed Requirement

The General Physical Education two-credit requirement for graduation has been eliminated by action of the Board of Trustees, effective September 1974, and retroactive for all undergraduates presently enrolled in the University.

The General Physical Education Program will now be offered on a voluntary basis. Students who wish to drop PE 100 "G" courses because of the elimination of the requirement are asked to have Course Change Forms signed in Rooms 224 and 226 in the Boyden Gym beginning Friday, September 6, 1974. The official drop procedure must be followed to remove names from rosters, and thereby avoid receiving a grade of "F". Prompt action in this regard by students will facilitate the administrative change over from the required to the voluntary program.

General Physical Education (PE 100) classes G00-G95 will begin on Wednesday, September 18, 1974.

Gridders look for big defense

Opener vs Villanova only one week away

By DAVE EIBEL
MDC Sports Writer

The era of Pennington to Berra, Schubert and Metallo is gone forever from the turf at Alumni Stadium. A week from tomorrow when Dick MacPherson's Minutemen invade Philadelphia to battle the Wildcats of Villanova, the dice will be loaded with new names and new question marks.

UMass football fans will soon become acquainted with names like Harris, Parker, Sprout, Toner et al., and a Fred Kelliher, who this season at least, will be given the opportunity to serve as a "four-quarter" quarterback, not only a last minute messiah.

But they'll also see whether a team with an inexperienced defensive secondary, presently subpar quarterbacking, and a superb group of defensive linemen and linebackers can improve on last year's disappointing but sometimes highly exciting 6-5 ledger.

"If we played Villanova tomorrow," said Coach MacPherson after a hard scrimmage Wednesday, "I'd have to say I'm not satisfied right now with the team as a whole."

"In comparison with last year and my other years here I'd have to say that this was the best camp we've ever had, "continued the UMass coach. "I've had the pleasure of coaching a great group of young men who're hard workers, and eager to learn. But we've had some practices in which I thought we'd reached our peak only to come back the next day to find that we'd lost it. What we need is some consistency and more intensity."

Looking at the defense first, all indications point to the UMass linemen and linebackers being almost impregnable against the run. Spearheaded by co-captains Ed McAleney at defensive end and Dennis Kiernan at linebacker, this unit gives Coach MacPherson no complaints.

"I can't ask the linemen and linebackers for much more than they've already given me, they're ready right now."

But the defensive backs could be an important factor in the UMass fortunes this year. Ron Harris, a phenom with last year's junior varsity, has been a standout so far in workouts according to MacPherson and along with senior Earl Brown will backbone a "young" secondary, which might have the occasional problem of inexperience. The learning and experience will come with game situations.

"The fact that we have a standout defensive line will certainly help the secondary by putting more pressure on the quarterback," said the UMass football coach, and if we do have problems back there they're nothing that coaching and game experience won't solve."

The phrase "mental learning" was also used by MacPherson to describe the problems of the offense, in particular the quarterbacking and receiving corps. UMass has changed its running attack to a quarterback option attack, which in layman's terms, has the quarterback running himself, lateralling off to one of his running backs, or throwing the ball as the situation warrants.

UMass coaches watch Mark Tripucka stay in the pocket during yesterday's workout. Tripucka will try to unseat Fred Kelliher as No. 1 quarterback.

The problem which has occurred so far in scrimmages is that the quarterbacks have not yet perfected their timing to the point where they know when to carry the ball or give it to the backs. Neither the present number one helmsman Fred Kelliher nor number two man Mark Tripucka have shown much consistency in their play action calls.

The basic problem is reading the defenses according to Coach MacPherson. "Our running game's inconsistency so far is not the fault of the line but the quarterbacks and also the receivers. The quarterbacks aren't reading the defenses properly and they're not sure when to keep the ball or give it to their backs. The receivers aren't catching the ball or doing much of a job blocking downfield. But since it's a problem that's mental not physical, we (the coaches) can handle it."

Among the players that have impressed MacPherson who played for the JV's last year is Rich Jessamy a 5'8" sophomore running back from Yonkers, New York. Jessamy is one player whose ability, desire, and willingness to learn have given MacPherson nothing but smiles. He should help to give the Minutemen a far more explosive attack on the ground than the running anemia of a year ago.

The Yankee Conference according to MacPherson should be a hotly contested race with Connecticut, the defending champion, and Rhode Island the teams which will probably give UMass the stiffest competition.

Red Sox 2d

BOSTON [UPI] — Gorman Thomas, who had 51 minor league home runs this season, hit a two-run homer in the ninth inning Thursday night to give the Milwaukee Brewers a 4-3 victory over Boston that knocked the fading Red Sox out of a first place tie in the American League East.

The loss, Boston's seventh straight, allowed the idle New York Yankees to take a half game lead over the Red Sox, who dropped out of first place for the first time since July 14. Baltimore, which also did not play Thursday, is third, two games behind the Yankees.

Thomas, playing his first game after being recalled from Sacramento of the Pacific Coast League, hit his ninth inning homer off reliever Diego Segui after a walk to Darrell Porter.

It was the third homer of the game for the Brewers, who got solo home runs from Mike Hegan and Pedro Garcia in the seventh off Boston starter Dick Drago.

Cecil Cooper's double, which scored Bernie Carbo and Tim McCarver in the sixth, accounted for the first two Boston runs, the first scored by the Red Sox in 35 innings. Cooper left the game on the play after spraining his right ankle going to third on the throw home.

The sport of death

"You only go around once in life," so you've got to try and jump all the Mack trucks that you can.

Not a usual reply to that widely accepted fact? Maybe so, but definitely the reply of thirty four year old motorcycle magician Evel Knievel.

Actually at this point in time though, Knievel's ideal might be changed to read, "so you've got to try and jump a canyon at least once. Because that is exactly what he has wanted to do for the past few years now and that is exactly what he will try and do this Sunday at 4:30 at the Snake River in Twin Falls, Idaho.

The money that Knievel would make on the successful completion of this feat has risen into the millions because of closed circuit television royalties, and private sponsors.

The money though, is not the thing that is the basis for Evel's wanting to flirt with death in an attempt that he has a little less than a 50-50 chance of making. At this point he is a multi-millionaire with financial security for him and his family well beyond this canyon conquering. His desire to jump the canyon is related to a more basic desire to try something simply because it is there to be tried, and his belief that you do in fact "only go around once in life."

But look at what he stands to lose? His life. What other professional performer does that on such simple terms. Knievel's competition is death and his desire to achieve what no man other than himself has ever dreamed of exceeds his fear of it.

When local authorities refused to allow Knievel to jump the canyon a few years back he did the logical thing, he went out and purchased the canyon. Now he can do whatever he wants with it and his attempt to jump it will be seen by hundreds of thousands live at the Snake River and by many millions more on closed circuit television all over this country and Canada. The "motorcycle" that he will be driving is actually more of a jet airplane. It will reach a top speed of about 400 miles per hour as he soars over the 500 foot drop to the jagged rock canyon floor below.

The most uncertain part of the whole affair is his landing, barring his crashing into the other canyon wall. Because if he doesn't go far enough to parachute down to earth with relative ease, the landing on the other side will be something to behold (as will the whole jump) if he makes it sucessfully. During the flight over the canyon Knievel will black out momentarily because of the force with which the jet power will hit him. He should regain consciousness before he reaches the other side and have a few seconds to prepare himself for the landing of his life, that will complete the jump of his life.

Since death rates as the favorite, that makes Evel the underdog and thereby the peoples' choice to sucessfully complete the jump. Whether or not he will live is another question? Regardless of the outcome the man stands as a man unique, playing with death for the sheer sport of it.

terHorst Quits In Pardon Protest

WASHINGTON [UPI] — White House press secretary J.F. terHorst, President Ford's first appointment, resigned last night as "a matter of conscience" in disagreement with Ford's decision to grant a full pardon to former President Nixon.

TerHorst, 52, a longtime friend of Ford, was on leave from his job as Washington bureau chief of the Detroit News and was expected to take the job permanently.

He handled the fast-breaking news of the Sunday pardon announcement. His resignation, effective immediately, came hours after Ford's surprising announcement.

Ford apparently was told of the resignation before he left to play 18 holes of golf at the Burning Tree Country Club. TerHorst was gone when Ford returned to the White House six and a half hours later.

John W. Hushen, deputy press secretary, took over terHorst's job on an acting basis. Hushen was formerly press aide to Sen. Robert Griffin, R-Mich., and also served as Justice Department press chief.

TerHorst assistant Tom DeCair said the press secretary, who had said he would carry out Ford's pledge to conduct "an open administration," had a run-in with White House aides last week when they failed to inform him that Ford was planning a shake-up of the Republican leadership.

Ford pardons Nixon

WASHINGTON [AP] — President Ford granted Richard M. Nixon "a free, full and absolute pardon" yesterday for any criminal conduct during his presidency, and Nixon responded with a statement of remorse at "my mistakes over Watergate."

Ford made a surprise appearance before newsmen and photographers in his Oval Office to announce the pardon, saying, "I feel that Richard Nixon and his loved ones have suffered enough."

The former President responded from his home in San Clemente, Calif., with a statement in which he admitted no criminal wrongdoing but said that "one thing I can see clearly now is that I was wrong in not acting more decisively and more forthrightly in dealing with Watergate."

Within two hours of Ford's announcement, presidential aides made public the terms of an agreement reached Saturday under which the federal government will be given custody of Nixon's public papers and controversial tape recordings.

However, the agreement specified that all the tapes will be destroyed within five to 10 years - sooner should Nixon die within five years.

Philip Buchen, White House counsel, told reporters that Ford granted Nixon a sweeping pardon without any strings attached. However, he acknowledged that Ford might have taken a different course, or delayed a decision, had he not been informed in advance of the gist of Nixon's planned statement of response and the agreement covering the documents of the Nixon presidency.

In announcing the pardon, Ford said any move to try the former President might have taken months or years during which "ugly passions would again be aroused, our people would again be polarized in their opinions, and the credibility of our free institutions of government would again be challenged at home and abroad."

He said:

"My conscience tells me clearly and certainly that I cannot prolong the bad dreams that continue to reopen a chapter that is closed. My conscience tells me that only I, as President, have the constitutional power to firmly shut and seal this book."

Buchen said Ford on Aug. 30 initiated a series of discussions within government and informal contacts with Nixon aimed at deciding whether to grant a pardon.

As part of that process, Buchen said he contacted Watergate special prosecutor Leon Jaworski to get his opinion, at Ford's behest, on how much time might be required to bring about any trial of the former

Fifty Percent Of Student Body Are Eligible For Food Stamps

By JOHN BUTLER
Staff Reporter

Thanks to the Mass. Department of Welfare, about 50 per cent of the students here may be eligible to receive food stamps. Those interested in applying for the stamps should stop in the Dukes Room (ground level, Student Union Bldg.) between 9:30 to 3:00 p.m. today or during the next three weeks.

John Fisher, Economic Development Coordinator for the Student Organizing Project, says he will not be surprised if 10,000 students apply for the stamps.

In order to register a student must be enrolled at least half-time (as defined by the institution Or program in which they are enrolled) in any school or program recognized by any Federal, state, or local agency.

The student's net income (gross income minus deductions) controls the amount of money in food stamps he is allowed to buy. Income is considered to be cash gifts or awards for support, maintenance, or the expenses of education, scholarships, educational grants (including loans or which repayment is postponed until the completion of the applicant's education), fellowships and veteran's educational benefits.

Such income will be spread over the period which it is intended to cover. Income exclusions pertains to income received as compensation for services as an employee, or income from self-employment by a child residing in the household (definition of a household is an individual or group of individuals, related or unrelated who share common cooking facilities, usually buy food together and live together as an "economic unit") who is under 18 years of age and who is attending at least half-time.

Also considered as an income exclusion are all loans, except those on which repayment is deferred until completion of the applicant's education. Income deductions include tuition and mandatory fees for education, including such expenses which are covered by scholarships, educational grants, loans, fellowships, and educational benefits.

Members of a household who are employed by the school who receive income on other than an hourly or piece-work basis from employment under a contract which is renewable on an annual or longer basis.

These people are considered to be receiving compensation for an entire year even though predetermined non-work periods are involved or actual compensation payments are scheduled for payment during work periods only. The contract renewal process may involve signing a new contract each year; be automatically renewable; or, as in cases of school tenure rehire rights may be implied and thus preclude the use of a written contract altogether.

If the student is found to qualify he will receive a card allowing him to buy food stamps. This card is brought to a center (the Student Credit Union is to be one) and he will be given the amount of stamps he is allowed. The amount of food stamps allotted is based on household size, maximum income and monthly income range.

For instance, a household of four has a maximum income (adjusted net income allowable per month) of $500 and has a monthly income range of from $150 to $169.99 must pay $41 in order to get $150 buying value in stamps.

With food stamps one may not buy paper, pet food, alcoholic beverages and some foreign foods.

For further information contact Fisher on the 2nd floor of the Student Union.

The world's first intergovernmental conference on population problems was held in Bucharest, Romania from Aug. 19 to 30.

Delegates from 135 nations presented their demographic situations and national population policies, debated the relation between population and development, environment, and the family and hammered out a compromise World Population Plan of Action.

Duane Dale, a doctoral student in Future Studies at the UMass School of Education, attended the conference. He has prepared a seven-part series which will cover such topics as

Ken Dean heads residence life

By LAWRENCE KORNFELD
Staff Reporter

Sweeping changes have been made in the administration of UMass residential life.

An Office of Residential Life was set up to oversee and improve residential areas, food services, and maintenance.

The office is headed by Ken Dean, acting Director of Residential Life.

Also part of the office are Arthur Warren, Director of Food Services, and Marjorie Lenn, head of the Human Services department.

Lenn describes the office's purpose as to "bring together, under one roof, all services rendered to the residential community."

Dean says his function is to "coordinate all decisions made in the residential services systems."

The office is part of a plan proposed by a special task force set up last December.

Dan Fitzpatrick, Associate Dean of Students, headed the committee which consisted of 12 people; two were students.

The proposal was accepted by Vice-Chancellor Robert Gage on July 1. Dean says the proposal "was not significantly modified."

Also included in the proposal is a Student Policy Board composed of 21 Student Senators.

How much actual power this group will have is still being negotiated by the Student Government Association and Whitmore.

Dean emphasized his office will "work together, with the Policy Board, in making all policy decisions."

The board will have representatives from all dorms, the food services, and married student housing.

The Human Services department will coordinate training and programming of students and staff. It will also oversee Personnel and Affirmative Action Monitoring.

Dean sees the main goals of his office as to "maintain a high standard of living and see that the services are what students want and need."

Dean said he personally hasn't made any significant policy decisions so far.

Lenn, Warren, and Dean are all acting directors. In January search committees, with equal representation of students and administrators, will be set up to find replacements for them.

Some of the projects they are working on now are:
--a campaign to cut down on food waste in the dining commons
--training security guards to improve security in the dorms
--a new key control system for same purpose
--the planned renovation of Hammlin House

Reactions vary to pardon

By BILL DENSMORE
MDC Staff

Students and others interviewed on campus yesterday all had an opinion on President Ford's decision to grant full pardon to Richard Nixon. Most criticized it although many approved.

In 10 to 15 interviews, a majority already knew of Ford's late morning announcement by the 3 p.m. interview time. Three reactions emerged frequently:

—that a full pardon for Nixon is inconsistent with Ford's stand for only limited amnesty for Vietnam War resisters.

—that it might have been better for Ford to wait criminal prosecutions against Nixon before granting pardon.

—that Nixon deserves the same treatment for his crimes as ordinary violators of law; or, alternately, that Nixon was President and deserves special treatment.

Others said the pardon defeated the purpose of the Watergate inquiry by nullifying prosecution of the chief offender, and showed the world and the nation that the President is above the law.

"I think it's all right," said Pat Baughman, 29, of Newton, up for the day visiting her sister. "I just don't think it's necessary to punish him — he's been punished already."

"I think Ford has acted a little hastily," said Bill Comfort, 27, a grad student in English living in Prince House. "Bringing together clemency and justice is a hard thing."

Louise Sapp, 19, was suprised at Ford's decision as she walked beside the Campus Pond. "I think it's awful....All his other men got sentences...it really blows my mind. Nixon was wrong and he's getting off scot-free and the others are going to jail," said the Grayson House sophomore from Leominster.

"It defeats the purpose of dragging the Watergate stuff out," said Brian Barch, 18, a resident of Kennedy upper from Ludlow. "I don't think it's good for the country," said the sophomore music major.

Jeff Pechet, 22, of Brighton, sunning for the day by the pond approved of Ford's decision. "It's a good gesture," the UMass graduate said, "as long as Nixon's in a position where he no longer is powerful, he might as well be pardoned."

"I don't think Nixon is any different from anyone else — including veterans," said Lionel Godin, 36, up from Hartford to visit a UMass friend. "I'm sure Ford was thinking of that when he made the amnesty move so he wouldn't get that back in his face," Godin said.

Ellie Carroll, 18, a freshman in political science, said she anticipated Ford's pardon for Nixon when the new Chief Executive broached his amnesty plan for veterans.

"When he brought up amnesty, I knew it was coming," she said. "Nixon is so crafty, I can't see him leaving without making sure everything's taken care of," said the Ware native.

Robbin Rumelt, 18, sat in front of the Metwampe statue near the Student Union building. The nursing major who lives in Coolidge upper wasn't impressed with Ford's decision.

"I think Ford is wrong. If Nixon was a regular citizen...if he were tried and proven guilty...he would go to prison."

One Hampshire College student on his way to yesterday's Five College concert believed Ford had violated his own earlier statement.

"Before his trial a pardon? Ford has said himself he has no power to grant pardon to a criminal before he is convicted," said the unidentified student.

DVP Sponsers Carl Bernstein

Carl Bernstein, the Washington Post journalist who helped crack the Watergate story and won a Pulitzer prize for his efforts, will speak in the Campus Center Auditorium at 8 p.m. tomorrow night. He is the first speaker of the Distinguished Visitors Program (DVP).

With reporting partner Bob Woodward, Bernstein is the author of the nation's best seller "All the President's Men."

The book tells how the reporters broke the Watergate story through disgruntled workers, secretaries, hard legwork and a secret high-level source they called Deep Throat. Bernstein and Woodward continually printed front-page stories of various Watergate related scandals while Presidential Press Secretar Ron Zeigler accused the team of shoddy, irresponsible journalism.

Zeigler was finally forced to publicly apologize to Woodward and Bernstein after rendering previous Watergate statements "inoperative."

Besides the Pulitzer Prize for Public Service, Bernstein and Woodward won many other journalism awards including the Drew Pearson Award and the George Polk Memorial Award.

The reporters are presently working on the Chappaquidick incidents surrounding Senator Edward Kennedy.

The DVP lecture is free of charge. There will be a coffee hour immediately after the lecture for those interested in personally talking to Bernstein.

The population explosion

breakthroughs in birth control technology and the Vatican's position.

Installment one follows:

Before the final gavel sounded on Aug. 30, the representatives of 135 countries gathered in Bucharest attempted to resolve a basic dilemma for human rights.

With the world's population at 3.7 billion and growing by over 2 percent each year, there will be a doubling of population every 35 years unless the rate decreases. When the population doubles, so also does the need for services of all types — schools, housing, hospitals, transportation — and also the need for jobs.

In the U.S., the growth rate is approximately 0.7 percent each year. More important, the two-child family is becoming the norm. Because there are so many young women entering child-bearing age, it will take as many as 70 years to reach zero population growth, but this will happen if the present trends continue.

It is the less developed countries which have the highest rate of population growth — often around 2½ percent according to UN statistics. These people are not any more prolific than Americans were in the days of large families. However, the developing countries now have the advantages of improved health care and longer lifespans without the other social factors which tend to reduce the birthrate.

Demographers — experts in the field of population studies — speak of the "demographic transition" from high birth rates and high death rates, to low birth and death rates. In many parts of the world today, half of the transition has taken place — death rates have fallen — but the birth rates are still high, resulting in rapid growth.

The U.S.'s concern with population comes partly from its attempts to help developing countries with agriculture and industry.

When the population of a country grows rapidly, the best efforts to improve the standard of living are simply absorbed by the increasing numbers. Mexico, for example, was able to increase its food production by 80 percent in ten years through the use of hybrid seeds, fertilizers, and other technological advances. In the same ten years, the population of Mexico increased 80 percent; nutritional standards were not improved.

Caspar Weinberger, U.S. Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare, addressing the Population Conference called population "a subject that is at the same time the most personal and the most public." The Conference attempted to create a World Population Plan of Action. The official draft guarantees to countries the sovereign right to establish population policies appropriate to their individual situations, and calls on couples to decide freely but responsibly the number of children ey will have.

Dining Commons Fight Waste

By JUDY FRIEDLAND
Staff Reporter

Food ecology, a new campaign to combat the 12-14 per cent food price increase is being instituted today at the four UMass Dining Commons, according to Marie Capadonna, Director of University Food Services.

Approximately twenty-five 40-gallon barrels of garbage are thrown out per day at Worcester Dining Commons, according to Capadonna. She says a majority of the refuse is food items such as beverages, bread, and desserts, which students took, but did not eat. She specified that the money spent on food that is wasted could be used to serve special menu items or reduced board rates.

Food Services reports that the price of sugar has risen 87 per cent, bread has increased 24 per cent, tuna by 18 per cent, and fat used for frying by 6 per cent. Meat and poultry prices are also higher, and fruit and vegetable prices are soon expected to be about double those of last fall.

Food Services have tried to defray price increases by instituting new procedures for using fats, and serving orange juice and Salad dressings from new dispensers. According to Capadonna, however, the major responsibility for food ecology is with the students. The campaign aims at making the student more aware of high food prices and encourages him-her to take an active part in reducing waste.

Capadonna suggested the students take one portion at a time, and eat all that he-she takes.

"Many students' eyes are bigger than their stomachs," said Capadonna. "We don't want to portion such items as bread or desserts, however; nor do we want to police the Dining Commons."

Posters and table tents will publicize Food Services' attempt to cut down on waste. Students will be informed from time to time of the program's progress, which will be determined by surveys which are soon to be conducted. DC employees are also wearing buttons on which are printed, "If you want less, tell me."

"A student who does not like gravy on his-her meat should tell the employee who is serving, rather than not eat the food," said Capadonna.

Michigan State University successfully conducted the first food Ecology program, in conjunction with the Coca-Cola Company. The company will also provide the posters and buttons for the UMass campaign, according to Capadonna. The program has also been successful at Yale University, University of Illinois, Oklahoma State, and Ohio State, among other schools.

88 die in Greek plane crash

By PAUL ANASTASSIADES
Associated Press Writer

ATHENS, Greece [AP] — A TWA Boeing 707 jetliner crashed into the story Ionian Sea off Greece on Sunday, and Greek aviation officials said all 88 persons aboard were believed killed.

Airline officials said 17 Americans, including an infant were aboard the plane.

The Greek Civil Aviation Authority reported its rescue pilots saw "remnants of the wreckage and bodies floating on the surface" about 60 miles west of Kefallinia Island and 235 miles west of Athens.

"Only when our ships can get nearer will we be able to finally confirm whether anyone has survived, but their chances are minute," a spokesman for the authority said.

The plane went down on the Athens-to-Rome leg of Flight 841, originating in Tel Aviv and continuing to New York and Los Angeles, after an engine apparently failed.

The Greek Merchant Marine said the pilot of a Alitalia plane reported seeing a 707 "plunging steeply into the sea with one engine on fire" at 11:42 a.m. local time — 5:42 a.m. EDT — 40 minutes after the TWA jet left Athens.

Trans World Airlines officials in Israel said the Americans were among 49 passengers boarding in Tel Aviv for Rome and the United States. Others aboard included 13 Japanese, four Italians, two Iranians, two Israelis, two Ceylonese, an Australian and a Canadian.

The nationalities of 30 passengers who joined the flight in Athens and the nine crew members were not immediately known.

TWA headquarters in New York ruled out sabotage, despite a claim by a telephone caller in Beirut that a Palestinian organization called the Nationalist Youth for the Liberation of Palestine had sabotaged the plane. In Beirut, the Palestinian news agency WAFA reported that a spokesman for the Palestine Liberation Organization, which speaks for the guerrilla organizations, said the call was a hoax and emphatically denied that Arab groups were involved in the disaster.

Candidate Expects Win

By MIKE KNEELAND
MDC Staff

Kenneth R. Mosakowski, the 27-year old UMass grad and library assistant here, says he expects to beat his opponent in tomorrow's democratic primary election for the First Congressional District.

"I've campaigned in 25 of the 88 towns and cities in the district — many several times over," he said Saturday morning.

His opponent is Thomas Manning, an assistant district attorney in Berkshire County. Mosakowski says Manning has confined his campaign to the Berkshires. "I can't see how he can win," Mosakowski said.

Silvio Conte currently holds the First Congressional seat. If he is successful in tomorrow's election, Mosakowski said he will need about $25,000 to unseat the well-known Republican.

Conte has not been opposed since 1962 and Mosakowski feels his position with the voters may be eroding.

The issues Mosakowski has been hitting hard are inflation and unemployment.

"I favor selected price control on selected items such as food, fuel and clothing," the candidate said.

On unemployment, Mosakowski favors a "massive" program of providing public service jobs to the unemployed.

He feels that if excess money, such as can be found in the military's budget, is redirected towards the proper channels, unemployment will go down as will inflation.

Mosakowski raised slightly more than $1,000 to conduct his primary campaign. He says he is a "strong supporter of complete funding of federal elections" such as the Senate, Congress, and Presidential elections.

About 50 people on an "off and on" basis have been campaigning for Mosakowski.

The candidate himself claims to be "more exhausted than nervous" over tomorrow's election, saying he's been campaigning very hard.

White rebels fighting

Portugal seeks order in Mozambique capital

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Portugal ordered its forces yesterday to "restore peace and tranquility" in the Mozambique capital of Lourence Marques, where armed white rebels have taken over key points in a bid to stop the imminent transfer of power to a black guerrilla-dominated regime.

A communique from Premier Vasco des Santos Goncalves said the armed forces have avoided using their arms thus far because the rebels were "using women and children as hostages."

It said negotiations were continuing with the rebels, who broadcast repeated pledges to keep Mozambique out of the hands of the African guerrilla movement, Frelimo.

Portugal's chief of staff Gen. Francisco da Costa Gomes, said Portuguese troops in Mozambique were ordered to restore law and order so "that the agreements reached in Lusaka can be carried out in full."

On Saturday, Portugal and Frelimo signed a pact in Lusaka, Zambia handing over Mozambique to a guerrilla-dominated government almost at once, calling for a cease-fire to end 10 years of colonial war, and stipulating Portugal will formally recognize the territory's independence on June 25, 1975 after nearly five centuries of Portuguese rule.

The counter-coup against the Lusaka agreement was still holding firm in Lourence Marques less than 24 hours after crowds took over the Radio Club of Mozambique, the official broadcasting service.

Celebrating crowds of whites with a sprinkling of blacks gathered in the square outside the city hall to watch motorcades of wildly cheering, flag-waving youths roar past in cars and hear continuous loudspeaker broadcasts from the nearby balcony of the Radio Club.

The Radio Club, calling itself "Radio Free Mozambique" and interspersing murtial and pop music with cries of "Long Live Free Mozambique," broadcast numerous appeals to troops and civilians in other Mozambique cities to join the new "Popular Democratic Movement of Mozambique."

The counter-coup, by a virtually leaderless crowd which swelled at times to several hundred, came after 24 hours of almost bloodless rioting in which Frelimo organizations in the city were smashed up, including the offices of the newspapers Noticias and A Tribuna, those of the weekly magazine Tempo, the headquarters of the Students Union and offices of the Radio Club itself.

TWA plane crashes; bombing suspected

ATHENS |UPI| — A Trans World Airlines jetliner trying for an emergency landing on the Greek island of Corfu with an engine in flames crashed into the Ionian Sea yesterday.

In Beirut, an underground group calling itself the Arab Nationalist Youth Organization for the Liberation of Palestine claimed responsibility for the crash. The group said one of its agents set off a bomb aboard the jet.

The plane, Flight 841 from Tel Aviv to New York, carried 88 persons-79 passengers and a crew of nine. It had stopped in Athens and was scheduled to make another intermediate stop in Rome.

More than 10 hours after the crash both the airline and Greek authorities were unable to determine if there were any survivors. They said no bodies had been recovered.

A TWA spokesman said 34 of the passengers, including two infants, were en route to New York. He said the passengers also included a tour group of 13 Japanese who had changed planes in Tel Aviv en route to Rome.

TWA in Israel said the passengers included 17 Americans.

Greek Air Force planes dropped flares in the crash area near the small islands of Paxos south of Corfu as rescue vessels converged on the scene.

Emmanuel Kelaloyannis, deputy minister of transportation in charge of civil dispatched to the area. A TWA spokesman said the U.S. aircraft carrier Independence and destroyer Biddle and the Greek merchant ship Hellas were among the rescue flotilla.

"We have air force planes overflying the area and keeping it illuminated with flares but we have no exact reports of survivors or bodies," Kefaloyannis said.

Kefaloyannis said the jet took off from Athens at 11:12 a.m. local time (5:12 a.m. EDT) and the pilot gave his last radio report as he left the Greek mainland and began flying over the Ionian Sea.

Wilson seeks new elections

LONDON |AP| — Prime Minister Harold Wilson asked Queen Elizabeth II yesterday to dissolve Parliament to make way for national elections next month, political informants said.

Wilson hopes to bolster his minority government with a resounding Labor party victory.

His talks with the queen, at Balmoral Castle in Scotland, were in line with traditional visits by British prime ministers to talk over state affairs that have come up during the monarch's vacation.

Wilson has scheduled a cabinet meeting in London on Tuesday, the day after his return from Balmoral, and political sources said he will inform his ministers then of the date of the election and announce it to the country later in the week.

Government ministers have said they believe Wilson has chosen either Oct. 3 or Oct. 10.

China ties strong

WASHINGTON |UPI| — President Ford apparently has succeeded in maintaining U.S. Chinese relations on course despite the upheaval of President Nixon's resignation and the seemingly insoluble Taiwan problem.

The assessment, which emerges from a series of interviews with administration ooficials and non-governmental trade promoters, stands in sharp contrast to private expressions of disappointment by Chinese Communist diplomats in the United States that relations have not improved faster.

France buys jets

PARIS |UPI| — The French Air Force announced yesterday will buy 40 of its own nation's Mirage F1 M53 jet fighters in what defense sources said was a move to beat the United States out of the "sale of the century" — a $3.5 billion contract for warplanes.

Sikkim annexed

CALCUTTA, India |UPI| — The king of Sikkim pleaded with India's leaders to reconsider before absorbing his tiny Himalayan kingdom, and asked permission to fly to New Delhi to personally appeal his case.

The king, Chogyal Palden Thondup Namgyal, sent cables to Prime Minister Indira Gandhi and President Fakhruddin Ali Ahmed asking them not to proceed with virtual annexation of Sikkim, which has been denounced within India and abroad.

Ford grants "full and absolute" pardon

President.

Buchen told reporters he was authorized to quote Jaworski as saying that the widespread publicity given Nixon's resignation and impeachment hearings before the House Judiciary Committee would "require a delay before the selection of a jury is begun of a period from nine months to a year and perhaps longer."

A spokesman for Jaworski said the special prosecutor's office played no direct role in the decision to pardon Nixon but said, "obviously we accept it."

Speaking slowing in a dramatic appearance at his desk in the White House Oval Office, Ford said, "It is common knowledge that serious allegations and accusations hang like a sword over our former President's head and threaten his health as he tries to reshape his life."

The reference to Nixon's health was not in Ford's prepared text for the occasion and Buchen, when asked if the President had some private knowledge about Nixon's physical and mental condition, replied, "I think it's generally known this man has suffered a great deal."

The pardon prohibits any criminal prosecution of Nixon "for all offenses against the United States" during his term of office.

However, Nixon still would be subject to any civil court proceedings and is still subject to being subpoenaed as a witness - as has already happened - at the trials of Watergate defendants.

One effect of the pardon, legal sources said, is that the former president will not be able to claim his 5th Amendment rights against self-incrimination if he appears as a witness at the Watergate cover-up trial scheduled for Sept. 30. The pardon effectively immunizes Nixon for anything except perjury.

By terms of an agreement between Nixon and the General Services Administration, the former President is depositing all tapes and most records of his presidency to the national archives for storage in a federal facility at Laguna Miguel, Calif., near his oceanside home.

To safeguard the records, which could be sought as evidence in criminal or civil proceedings, the agreement specifies that papers and tapes will be guarded by special locks which can only be opened by using two different keys, one of them to be in Nixon's possession and the second to be used by the archives staff.

In response to a question, Buchen said this meant Nixon could not get at the records and destroy any of them.

Another provise said Nixon's controversial tapes will be formally donated to the American people on Sept. 1, 1979.

After that date and for a five-year period, the administrator of GSA would be required to destroy any tapes which Nixon directed him to destroy.

Moreover, the agreement said all tapes "shall be destroyed at the time of my death or on Sept. 1, 1984, whichever event shall first occur."

Under the terms of the accord, Nixon said in a letter to GSA Administrator Arthur F. Sampson, "I reserve to myself such literary use of the information on the tapes."

However, Buchen said Ford's pardon would not absolve Nixon from contempt of court findings should he ever fail to honor a valid subpoena.

Power to pardon in Constitution

WASHINGTON [UPI] — Article II of the Constitution defines the powers, and duties of the presidency, and gives the chief executive power to grant "pardons for offenses against the United States."

Article Two, Section Two, Paragraph One states:

"The President shall be Commander-in-Chief of the Army and Navy of the United States, and of the militia of the several States, when called into the actual service of the United States; he may require the opinion, in writing, of the principal officer in each of the executive departments, upon any subject relating to the duties, of their respective offices, and he shall have power to grant reprieves and pardons for offenses against the United States, except in cases of impeachment."

Cox feels Nixon's pardon shows inequality of laws

BOSTON [UPI] — Former special Watergate prosecutor Archibald Cox said yesterday he "regreted" President Ford had pardoned his predecessor because it reinforced the impression that all men were not equal under the law.

Cox said that he was unhappy that former President Nixon had been pardoned of any crimes committed during his term of office before a grand jury determined whether the former chief executive had actually broken the law.

"I feel the advance pardon, following the Agnew settlement will seem too many to carry the lession that the law does not apply equally to those who achieve the highest office," he said.

Cox added, however, that once the case had been processed in a normal manner, he would not have been opposed to some form of amnesty for the man who fired him when Cox refused to stop his attempts to obtain White House tapes.

Cox said that unless the decision had been necessitated by Nixon's health, the advance pardon "defeated" the principle of government by the people.

"The guilt or innocence of a high public official charged with a crime, especially a president," he said, "should be determined once and for all by the established system of justice."

Cox said the announcement would "invite endless uncertainty and division," saying circumventing the legal process "risks the integrity of government."

"It is through the legal proceedings and the criminal courts that a self governing people declares and validates the moral and legal standards applicable to their chosen officials," he said.

Ford's pardon statement

"...it is the right thing to do"

WASHINGTON [UPI] — Edited text of President Food's statement announcing he has pardoned Richard Nixon:

Ladies and gentlemen, I have come to a decision which I felt I should tell you and all of my fellow American citizens, as soon as I was certain in my own mind and in my own conscience that it is the right thing to do.

There are no historic or legal precedents to which I can turn in this matter, none that precisely fit the circumstances of a private citizen who has resigned the Presidency of the United States. But it is common knowledge that serious allegations and accusations hang like a sword over our former President's head, threatening his health as he tries to reshape his life, a great part of which was spent in the service of this country and by the mandate of its people.

After years of bitter controversy and divisive national debate, I have been advised, and I am compelled to conclude that many months and perhaps more years will have to pass before Richard Nixon could obtain a fair trial by jury in any jurisdiction of the United Stated under governing decisions of the Supreme Court.

I deeply believe in equal justice for all Americans, whatever their station or former station. The law, whether human or devine, is no respecter of persons, but the law is a respecter of reality.

The facts, as I see them, are that a former President of the United States, instead of enjoying equal treatment with any other citizen accused of violating the law, would be cruelly and excessively penalized either in preserving the presumption of his innocence or in obtaining a speedy determination of guilt in order to repay a legal debt to society.

During this long period of delay and potential litigation, ugly passions would again be aroused. And our people would again be polarized in their opinions. And the credibility of our free institutions of government would again be challenged at home and abroad.

In the end, the courts might well hold that Richard Nixon had been denied due process and the verdict of history would even more be inconclusive with respect to those charges arising out of the period of his presidency, of which I am presently aware.

As President, my primary concern must always be the greatest good of all the people of the United States whose servant I am. As a man, my first consideration is to be true to my own convictions and my own conscience.

My conscience tells me clearly and certainly that I cannot prolong the bad dreams that continue to reopen a chapter that is closed. My conscience tells me that only I, as President, have the constitutional power to firmly shut and seal this book. My conscience tells me it is my duty, not merely to proclaim domestic tranquility, but to use every means that I have to insure it.

I do believe that the buck stops here, that I cannot rely upon public opinion polls to tell me what is right.

Ford's proclamation pardoning Nixon

WASHINGTON [UPI] — Edited text of President Ford's proclamation granting pardon to former President Richard M. Nixon:

"Richard Nixon became the thirty-seventh President of the United States on January 20, 1969, and was re-elected in 1972 for a second term by the electors of forty-nine of the fifty states. His term in office continued until his resignation on August 9, 1974.

"Pursuant to resolutions of the House of Representatives, its Committee on the Judiciary conducted an inquiry and investigation on the impeachment of the President extending over more than eight months. The hearings of the Committee and its deliberations, which received wide national, publicity over television, radio, and in printed media, resulted in votes adverse to Richard Nixon on recommended Articles of Impeachment.

"As a result of certain acts or omissions occurring before his resignation from the Office of President, Richard Nixon has become liable to possible indictment and trial for offenses against the United States.

"It is believed that a trial of Richard Nixon, if it became necessary, could not fairly begin until a year or more has elapsed. In the meantime, the tranquility to which this nation has been restored by the events of recent weeks could be irreparably lost by the prospects of bringing to trial a former President of the United States. The prospects of such trial will cause prolonged and divisive debate over the propriety of exposing to further punishment and degradation a man who has already paid the unprecedented penalty of relinquishing the highest elective office in the United States.

"NOW, THEREFORE, I, Gerald R. Ford, President of the United States, pursuant to the pardon power conferred upon me by Article II, Section 2, of the Constitution, have granted and by these presents do grant a full, free, and absolute pardon unto Richard Nixon for all offenses against the United States which he, Richard Nixon, has committed or may have committed or taken part in during the period from January 20, 1969 through August 9, 1974.

Nixon's statement after his pardon

SAN CLEMENTE, CALIF. [UPI] - The following is the text of Richard Nixon's statement concerning President Ford's pardon for all offenses related to the Watergate scandal the former President committed or may have committed while in office:

"I have been informed that President Ford has granted me a full and absolute pardon for any charges which may be brought against me for actions taken during the time I was the President of the United States. In accepting this pardon, I hope that his compassionate act will contribute to lifting the burden of Watergate from our country.

"Here in California, my perspective on Watergate is quite different than it was while I was embattled in the midst of the controversy while I was still subject to the unrelenting daily demand of the presidency itself.

"Looking back on what is still in my mind a complex and confusing maze of events, decisions, pressures, and personalities, one thing I can see clearly now is that I was wrong in not acting more decisively and more forthrightly in dealing with Watergate, particularly when it reached the stage of judicial proceedings and grew from a political scandal into a national tragedy.

"No words can describe the depths of my regret and pain at the anguish my mistakes over Watergate have caused the nation and the presidency a nation I so deeply loved and an institution I so greatly respect.

"I know that many fair minded people believe that my motivation and actions in the Watergate affair were intentionally self-serving and illegal. I now understand how my own mistakes and misjudgments have contributed to that belief and seemed to support it. This burden is the heaviest one of all to bear.

"That the way I tried to deal with Watergate was the wrong way is a burden I shall bear for every day of the life that is left to me."

New England senators disagree on pardon

Sen. Brooke

BOSTON [AP] - President Ford's decision to grant a pardon to Richard M. Nixon was "a serious mistake," Sen. Edward Brooke, R-Mass., said yesterday.

Brooke issued the following statement:

"President Ford's blanket pardon - without Mr. Nixon's full confession of his involvment in Watergate - is, in my judgement, a serious mistake."

Brooke was the first Republican senator to publicly call for Nixon's resignation as President.

Sen. Cotton

CONCORD, N.H. [UPI] — Sen. Norris Cotton said yesterday he is in complete agreement with Presidnet Ford's granting of a pardon to former President Nixon.

"I thoroughly approve of the President's action in granting full pardon to former President Nixon," Cotton said. "Unquestionably, President Nixon's concealment of his knowledge of Watergate was unjustifiable, but no worse and no different than some actions on the part of several of his predecessors whose names still shine in undiminished splendor."

Cotton said Nixon had already been punished severely by the humiliation of his resignation.

Sen. Aiken

WASHINGTON [UPI] - Sen. George D. Aiken, R-Vt., praised President Ford's decision to pardon former President Nixon yesterday.

"He had tremendous courage to take this action at this time in order for the counnry and the Congress to get down to the business that confronts us," Aiken, the Senate's senior Republican, aid.

"I think he wanted to put an end to the frenzy of those who were demanding punishment for the president," Aiken said.

"He did the right thing. It's going to make it much easier for him to deal with the amnesty situation," Aiken said.

Aiken said "the judicial process should proceed" for former Nixon aides still awaiting trial on Watergate cover-up charges.

Congress reacts to pardon with party line split

By United Press International

Initial Congressional reaction to President Ford's pardon of Richard M. Nixon split sharply along party lines yesterday. Most Republicans praised Ford, for taking a courageous step, while Democrats criticized the pardon as "premature" and "an outrage."

Virtually all agreed it was a controversial act.

Vice President-designate Nelson Rockefeller called the pardon "an act of conscience, compassion and courage, undoubtedly, controversial in the short run, but promising in the long run in that it will speed the healing of our nation."

The pardon drew citicism from one Republican, Sen. Edward W. Brooke of Massachusetts, who said: "President Ford's blanket pardon without Mr. Nixon's full confession of his involvement in, Watergate is, in my judgment, a serious mistake."

And one of Ford's close congressional assiciates, who asked not to be identified said: "Ford knows full well that by doing this he's blown up his honeymoon with Congress."

Representatives of both parties said granting a pardon to Nixon raised serious questions of fairness in light of the many others who have been charged for Watergate offenses conducted in the former president's name, some of whom have gone to prison.

One of the harshest early comments came from Rep. John Moss, D-Calif., who told UPI: "This is an outrageous act, rewarding Nixon for his crimes and proving that our country maintains a double standard of justice."

Sen. William R. Brock, R-Tenn., said Ford had taken "a tough road" in granting the pardon.

Sunday morning, September 8, 11:45, a bulletin flashes over the screen and radios of America: President Gerald Ford has granted full pardon to Richard Nixon. These interviews that follow were conducted two days prior to this historic decision.

THE QUESTION ON 9/6/74: What do you think should be done with ex-president Richard Nixon?

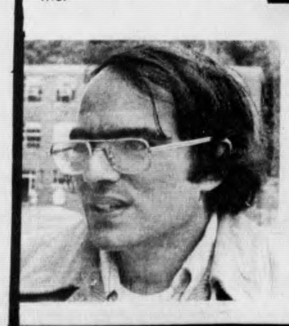
Jerry Roddy, 19, freshman from West Roxbury, Mass., Silvan-MacNamara; People have almost forgotten anyway, but he should be given justice like any other citizen. They should bring him to court and if they find him guilty of anything they should put him in jail. I think it would be good for the country; it wouldn't be too much of a hassle.

Mark Hughes, 20, Pre-Med major, senior from Watertown, Mass., Kennedy-Southwest; Nothing. Nothing at all should be done to or with Nixon. His humility is punishment enough for his actions. Let him be, let him just fade away into obscurity.

Brenda O'Shea, 18, freshman from Milton, Mass., CASIAC major, Vanmeter-Central; What good would it do if he was brought to trial. It's in the past; he did what he did and it's over with. It's bad enough what I know about what happened in Washington and I don't want to know anything else. Let the poor guy fade into the past.

Gholam Sami, 26, grad student from Iran, Landscape Architecture major, Prince-Southwest; It seems to me that if he did not resign he would have been impeached and brought to the courts. Now he has resigned, what is the difference? A crime is still a crime. I think it is good that the American people have such power in their control.

Al Faro, 20, junior from Andover, Mass., Psychology major, John Adams-Southwest; I'm pretty torn right now. My opinion is always changing from minute to minute. He's just a common criminal; most people want him locked up. I guess he should be locked away. He may be more powerful but he's no better than you or me.



Dr. David Van Blerkom, UMass professor of Astro-Physics from Montigue, Mass.; It seems manifestly unfair that the people who are under him should go to jail and that he should escape. I think that with all the country has been through they don't want to get involved in any mess again. I believe that President Ford will step in to prevent his getting prosecuted. He said he would, but still it is rather unfair.

Amnesty — now

By LUIS MANUEL MEDINA

Humankind, as individuals and as collectives have need for the opening of new frontiers as well as the constant renovation between old and new values, ideas, concepts, etc., that help to maintain the constant progress. Many times it is difficult to carry on these innovations because institutionalized barriers and unreadiness to try something new.

President Ford has brought an important issue to the attention of the people, amnesty to those that left the country because their convictions about the Viet Nam War. Ford's proposed solution to heal the wounds of the war, and in a great extent, the wounds of Watergate, is a very innovative but controversial solution. The issue of amnesty, and the way that the parts involved in it come out, obviously will set a precedent in American History, and possibly could help to present a better image of the U.S. in those counnries which didn't see the value of the war of Viet Nam, or Watergate.

Amnesty could be the solution to one of the old an unresolved problems that perhaps have had more participants.

Because the solution to amnesty needs to be one acceptable to all the parties involved, and is not an easy solution since all the parties involved need to make concessions to others.

President Ford as quoted by Times Magazine said that: "I have made a decision which I think is right and proper: No (unconditional) amnesty, no revenge... But war resisters need to make concessions, too. As John Keny, former of the Viet Nam Veterans Against the War, said "The purpose of amnesty is to forget the war and heal the wounds, and it may be that the way to do that is to demand a sacrifice on both sides".

Concessions because the war resistors have the right to come home, because the acceptation of amnesty implies in many aspects that they were right. But the resisters also, need to accept that the Establishment is right in many aspects, too. If amnesty is granted to war resisters they will work at least a year in government services jobs to restore their citizenship.

This decade has opened new frontiers. We saw Armstrong and the other astronauts walking on the moon, the United Nations today has dozens of independent African countries, India has atomic energy, relations with China have been restored, Israel, India and Argentina, have had women running their countries, and we can keep adding all the traditional 'impossibles' that today are reality.

Amnesty could show that this society have enough flexibility to accept that in the war issue the Establishment as well as the war resisters were both right and wrong. The return home of thousands of Americans could help in restoring in the people confidence of government.

The issues — 1974

By CARL P. LEUBSDORF
Associated Press

WASHINGTON [AP] — The search for a solution to the nation's economic woes is becoming a battle for political advantage, spurred by the 1974 election campaign.

Other issues too, such as the question of when Nelson A. Rockefeller will be confirmed as vice president, are inevitably going to be caught up in politics as the Nov. 5 balloting for 435 House seats, 34 Senate spots and 34 governorships approaches.

Strategists in both the Republican-held White House and the Democratic-controlled Congress are acutely aware that economic issues have become the most potent politically in the month since Richard M. Nixon resigned the presidency.

For example, Senate Democrats acted quickly last week after a White House official indicated major action on the economy might be delayed until January because Congress was planning to adjourn in mid-October.

In a resolution passed Thursday, Democrats pledged cooperation with Ford and indicated they stood ready to stay in session all year, if necessary, to deal with the economy.

"We want to debunk the idea that Congress is getting ready to go home and stay home because of the election," Asst. Democratic Leader Robert C. Byrd of West Virginia said.

White House officials expressed delight with the promise of cooperation on the economy and repeated Ford's hope that a lame-duck session, after the election, would be unnecessary.

House Republican Leader John J. Rhodes of Arizona, however, took aim at the political aspects of the Democratic statement, saying he sees "no realistic need for a lame duck session of Congress this year."

Senate and House Democratic leaders will have to decide this week whether they want to adjourn in October and risk Republican accusations they failed to act on economic problems.

Senate Democratic Leader Mike Mansfield indicated Saturday for the first time, however, that a decision has been made to return. Again he put the responsibility on the administration to come up with economic solutions promptly.

Noting Ford's vow to lick inflation by July 4, 1976, Mansfield said the situation must be faced up to "not next year, not on July 4, 1976, but this month, this year."

He indicated Democratic senators don't think it is wise to go home for nearly three months, even though congressmen generally don't like lame-duck sessions.

The annual appropriations bills, for a change, seem likely to be passed by mid-October. And Democratic leaders don't think they can act this year on health insurance and tax reform, two issues that could form the cornerstone of their program in 1975 when they expect to have an even stronger majority in both houses.

That leaves campaign reform, strip mining and trade reform, where action could be concluded by mid-October, and the more complex problem of the Rockefeller nomination.

Publicly, both House and Senate leaders have talked of action by the mid-October adjournment target. Privately, many say they would be just as happy if the former New York governor can't campaign as vice president this fall.

USA, nation on trial

By E. PATRICK McQUAID

The purpose of history, so we are told is to study the past, relate it to the present, and improve our future prospects. Well, apparently we will never learn.

These are historic times that we live in. Cavett quotes Dickens and calls them the best, the worst, the highest, and the lowest; and you can't help but be swept away into the lost, mad confusion of what is termed by modern historians as the Watergate era. The author feels that Watergate error would be a more appropriate title.

The very word democracy, supposedly the foundation of our republic, takes its roots from the Greek term demokratia meaning "of the common people". Somewhere in time, meaning and application have lost their relativity.

The Greeks have left us with an endless supply of terminology which we can apply to our present state of affairs. For instance, let us reflect back on the downfall of the Greco-Roman emperor, Trickius Dickus. His employ of the policy of "claritus perfectus" is a prime example. Like Oedipus he was blind to the true issues at hand and lead himself and his people deeper and darker into nescience.

This is known as pseudos-pistis, a false proof of faith. This lead to pistis-offtus and needless to say pistus proof didn't please the people. According to Empedoules the punishment for crime back then was banishment for "one great year", which is 30,000 seasons. This sentence seems hardly the contemporary method of dealing with such crimes.

What is the prime object of justice? Is punishment a method of deterrance to other criminals, or a gratifying relief to immediate victims and "moral men"? Once a crime has been commited, of any calibre, an incessant itch of frustration seizes the victims until "justice" has been done. This avengenousness is called by the Greeks, Catharsis, a purgation and purification of mind and soul.

The victim of crime employs Catharsis when he imagines the criminal suffering before him. He may forget the crime and concentrate entirely on the punishment with deterrance as a mere after thought. When the nation's sense of security is jeapordized every law abiding citizen, and every not so law abiding citizen feels menaced.

Richard Nixon has been granted pardon by the president but his crimes will not go unpunished. He needn't be reminded, he hasn't forgotten them. This entire business has placed a nation on trial; every person must now look more closely at himself before condemming another.

Perhaps our entire system of morals needs looking at. Who is to say that what had been done in Washington is wrong? A revaluation of our rights and wrongs is necessary.

What man is safe who challenges the principles of our modern democracies? Unfortunetly, the individual who stands up against the sins and crimes of the State must act in privacy if he is to work at all. And if we are a true "common people" democracy, then that connotates that a man has the right to be wrong.

Joyce Kosofsky

I am not responsible

When I was eight years old, I thought that by the time I was thirteen, I'd have it all together. At that time, that was the age to be.

When I made it to thirteen, realizing that I had it even less together than I did at eight, I figured that eighteen was the age to be.

Needless to say, at eighteen, I still didn't have it together, wishing I was twenty-one.

Well, today is my twenty-first birthday. And if I can get my shit together by the time I'm thirty-five I'll consider myself lucky.

I'm twenty-one years old today. Yeah and far out and all that. I guess that this is an important landmark in the development of my character. I guess that this is an age where I am supposed to assume some sort of adult-like behavior and/ or mannerisms.

In other words, I had a long talk with my mother and she wants me to settle down and become responsible.

Yeah, right. Become responsible. Have some responsibility. Act like an adult. Stop daytripping and get serious.

But, become responsible for what? Act like an adult for who? Become serious so that I can become a housewife in West Newton with grey hair, a dog, three kids and stretch marks? Think that one over again, Mom.

I am not responsible.

As the Diggers of San Francisco gave their name to the community, I give my responsibility to the world.

Take it, it's yours, with no strings attached.

I am not responsible for my sarcasm and cynicism in the classroom. When a professor tells me that I have an eight page paper due at the end of the week, I find it totally limiting. What if I become creative in six pages? Or fourteen? For what? An A?

An A and a quarter will put me on the subway.

I am not responsible for wanting to make wallpaper out of the next male who tells me that I have a cute ass and have nothing else to offer to the world.

I am not responsible for anything that is expected of me. I do not believe in the future, so that anything that I am supposed to do implies the future, which does not exist.

I am not responsible for what was not taught to me in the classroom, that I had to learn in the streets. I will no longer allow school to get in the way of my education.

To those who feel that I am totally irresponsible, all I can say is mea culpa.

And the funniest part of it all is that I am not even responsible for being here.

Equal justice

So now it is official. Nixon won't go to jail. Equal justice under the law? The phrase leaves me with a gripping gap of cynical disgust. Watergate has gone on too long, yet you don't end the incident by freeing the protagonist.

Perhaps it is not a coincidence that Ford picked the day of Evel Kneival's canyon jump to announce his decision. For in the atmosphere of a Roman Circus, even the most absurd realities sometimes go unquestioned. A society yearning for an escape from a murky reality, that will pay twenty-five dollars a head to see a guy risk his life, might just be willing to want to "forgive and forget" with Nixon. But somehow the whole things rings a farce.

Nixon was the chief demagogue of the sixties and early seventies. He would stir emotions, play us off against each other, and talk about his love for "America". Yet while with some people talk is cheap, with Nixon it was a fire sale. For while he talked about patriotism, all the time he was stabbing our constitutional freedoms in the back with the flag, and throwing apple pie in our face.

At least President Ford could have put the same conditions on Nixon's pardon, as he did for his previously announced Vietnam amnesty proposal. Nixon should have to "earn his way back".

Seriously, Nixon should be forced to say something to the effect of "I'm guilty, I'm sorry, and I'm not a victim of any liberal media conspiracy". President Ford shouldn't let Dick Nixon on the loose again. It just isn't fair.

Perhaps Nixon could "earn his way back" by doing some public service for the country. Here are a few things that he could do.

Perhaps Nixon could "earn his way back" by doing some public service for the country

Work for the telephone company and specialize in removing the various "national security" wire taps that are planted like mine fields in the national psyche.

Work as an intern in a South Vietnamese hospital, where many young children who don't even know what a Communism means, much less be one of them, are trying to live without their legs are arms.

Make him work in the inner city, where the air is bad and the pace is fast. See the fatigue of the people who have to struggle just to live in a society where prices rise faster than wages, and pensions stay virtually the same.

Let him become a "pen pal" of one of the people who have been in some jail for over a year now without a trial, simply because they can't afford to post bail.

Or maybe, just maybe we could get him a job as a water carrier for George Allen's Washington Redskins.

Nixon never really quit, he abdicated. Never admitted that he was wrong, just down. There are still about fifty million people in this country who feel that he is innocent. President Ford's decision to pardon Nixon yesterday did nothing to discourage that kind of thinking.

In front of the Supreme Court building in Washington, it still reads "Equal Justice Under Law".

However, today the concept is still a bit less solid.

Learning by Mistakes

It is a funny feeling to start the daily editorial with an apology, but alas we must. Last Friday there appeared an advertisement for minority recruitment for the Collegian staff. Next to the ad was a column titled "Man in the Street." The column was supposed to have been titled "Campus Comments", the fact being of course that we are interested in the opinions of all people on the campus, not just men.

Which brings us to point number two. Tonight at 8:00 p.m. in rooms 904-909 there will be a recruitment meeting for all people, grad or undergrad interested in taking part in any of the several areas the Collegian needs help in to continue daily publication. It's not that we are desperate, just that we've come to the conclusion that this is a great place to learn skills that cannot be learned anywhere else on the campus.

Besides the areas in which there are openings already, the Board of Editors is open and anxious to hear any new ideas for features, news or whatever. With over twenty-three thousand undergrads and five-thousand grads at UMass there must be an uncountable number of ideas and projects we are not beyond attempting.

So jocks and freaks and in betweens if you want to be part of a learning experience that does not require any more work than you wish to give come see us.

It will make things better for everyone.

How do you feel about the pardoning of Richard Nixon?

Pelham celebrates a past

By Judy Boucher

By JUDY BOUCHER

Staff Reporter

Pelham, a few miles west of Amherst on rt. 202, is the site of the oldest town hall in continuous use and the home of Revolutionary War Captain Daniel Shay, leader of an organized insurrection in 1786.

Saturday and Sunday Pelham celebrated its annual Historical Days Festivities. Sponsorers were the Pelham Historical Society, "a group of well over 200, many from out of state" said Richard Shurbert, treasurer of the society.

Featured attractions included a tag sale, book sale, basket weaving demonstration, performances by the Five-College Folk Dancers and a harmonium recital by Gordon Dean. Also there was freshly pressed cider, home-baked food and hand polished apples.

Money raised from the event will go towards preservation and restoration of the Town Hall complex which is recognized as both a Massachusetts and National historic landmark.

The Town Hall complex consist of the town hall built in 1743, a church built in 1839 presently housing the town's historical artifacts, a cemetary where Pelham's first settlers are buried and the Common where Shay trained his men for the unsuccessful attempt at capturing the Springfield arsenal.

.Shay's Rebellion was essentially a farmers protest against excessive taxation and debt prosecutions when times were hard and currency worthless. Shay's rebellion indicated the inherent weakness of the national government under the Articles of Confederation and historians attribute it to be "the principal fact that precipitated the calling of the Continental Congress that led to forming our Constitution."

The Pelham Historical Society museum is open Saturdays and Sundays from 1:30 to 5:30 p.m. June through October. Appointments can be made in advance at other times by writing to the society.

The town hall of Pelham was built by Scotch Presbyterians and retains the original beams and panelled sounding boards.

Hebert Goodell of Pelham made apple cider at the town hall complex on a 100 year old cider press. For the best tasting cider he recommends using "all kinds of apples."

ESP Freaks - your time has come

A series of four non-credit courses in the field of psychic phenomena will be offered this fall by the Division of Continuing Education.

The courses are designed to answer the growing demand for information in this field and to enable the student to explore his own psychic faculties while sharing with others in experiencing personal development.

"Explorations into ESP" will be offered Wednesday and Friday evenings Sept. 11 through Oct. 11 on campus, taught by Claudette Kiely of Granby, a lecturer, teacher, writer and psychic. The course will conclude with a lecture and workshop on spiritual healing and an assessment of astral projection.

The second in the series is "Harmony In Healing," a 10-week meditation course based on the writings of Edward Cayce. The course will explore little understood forms of healing and the power that the average person may have in creating a healing and the power that the average person may have in creating a healing condition. It will be taught by Floyd McAuslan, who has 25 years of experience in healing, including work with the nationally known Arthur Ford. The course will meet Tuesday evenings, Sept. 19 through Nov. 19 at the UMass-Amherst campus.

Third in the series is a 10-week course on "The World of Herbs," covering lore, legend and history, art forms and symbolism, healing herbs, aromatic herbs, culinary herbs and many other topics. The course will be given Tuesday evenings, Sept. 17 through Nov. 19 at the UMass-Amherst campus and will include lectures, demonstrations, student participation and home study. The instructor is Priscilla McAuslan, who has had many years of practical experience with herbs, has maintained her own herb garden and been an exhibitor and lecturer on the subject.

Further information on the whole series is available from the Program Development Office, Hills House North, UMass Amherst 01002; telephone 545-3440.

The course will be given Monday evenings, Sept. 30 through Nov. 18.

terHorst Protests Ford's Decision On Nixon

TerHorst complained and said he had misled the press and did not "want it to happen again," according to DeCair.

TerHorst was not taking any telephone calls at his home last night and it was impossible to get through the White House switchboard because of the barrage of telephone calls relating to the pardon.

A Newsweek magazine statement yesterday said terHorst told the magazine the pardon "was a matter of conscience with him, Ford, which I respect. It was also a matter of conscience with me."

The magazine statement said it also learned that Ford and terHorst discussed the resignation and terHorst said he felt the President would accept it. Even if Ford did not accept it, terHorst said, he would not stay, according to the statement.

The press secretary seemed to have been enjoying his job and was making plans to make White House officials much more accessible to reporters.

TerHorst began covering Ford as a reporter for the Grand Rapids Press when Ford first ran for Congress in 1948. His biography of the President, Gerald R. Ford and the Future of the Presidency, is being carried in installments in newspapers throughout the country.

Ford introduced terHorst to the White House press corps a few hours after being sworn in as President Aug. 9 and pledged that he would have "an open administration."

TerHorst, who characterized himself as a political independent, has known the President closely for 25 years and his appointment was widely welcomed by fellow members of the White House press corps who respected his energy, intellect and solid professional experience.

"I agreed to come aboard to restructure the press operation," terHorst said at the time.

TerHorst quickly displayed a different style from that of Ronald L. Ziegler, who became Richard M. Nixon's press secretary after an advertising and public relations career and without any experience in journalism.

For example, terHorst surprised reporters the first time he told them "I just talked to President Ford and he says..." Ziegler rarely conveyed direct quotes from Nixon.

And his candor won quick praise. "I think he shows a good professional touch" because "when he doesn't know, he says he does not have it and he will try to get it," said one reporter recently, adding that Ziegler "treated information as if it was something to be packaged, labeled and merchandised."

Continuing Ed Receives Grant

A $1000 grant has been awarded to the Division of Continuing Education at the University of Massachusetts-Amherst through the Clairol Loving Care Scholarship Program, part of a $50,000 nationwide fund designed to encourage women over 35 to continue undergraduate degree programs previously interrupted by other responsibilities.

Recipients will be chosen by the Division of Continuing Education on the basis of need and merit. Women must be 35 or older and enrolled in either a full or part-time degree program through the Division. Applicant's general financial position will be taken into consideration, to include her need for part-time work, child care expenses, transportation expenses, and other responsibilities. There are no restrictions on marital status, and recipients do not have to use Clairol products.

Applications are due by Sept. 20, and may be obtained from the Division of Continuing Education, 545-0905, 205 Hills North, UMass, Amherst.

Continuing Education was selected on the basis of significant undergraduate programs specifically designed for women who face special counseling, scheduling, and financial problems.

Chapter 766

The School of Education at the University of Massachusetts in Amherst, in cooperation with the UMass Division of Continuing Education, is sponsoring a conference for teachers and administrators on "Implications for Chapter 766."

The five-day conference will be held on Saturday and Sunday, Sept. 28-29, and Saturday, Sunday, and Monday, Oct. 12-14, from 9 to 4:30 each day at the UMass-Amherst campus. Participants will be granted two UMass graduate credits through the Division of Continuing Education.

Chapter 766, a state law being implemented this fall, states that the traditional classroom must begin meeting the educational needs of exceptional children. "Implications for Chapter 766" provides an overview of present concepts, expertise, and successful techniques concerning exceptional children in the regular classroom.

The first weekend is structured as a conference with individual and group presentations. The second weekend consists of small groups of workshops geared toward intensive skill development in specific competency areas as defined by the regulations pertaining to Chapter 766.

Presentations will be offered by experts in this field, including Professor Robert Jackson, director of special education at UMass; Dr. Robert Audett of the Massachusetts Department of Education's Division of Special Education; Dr. Fritz Redl of North Adams State College, author of "When We Deal with Children;" and others.

The conference fee is $160 and includes registration, tuition, materials, and daily luncheon. Meal and lodging options are available. Further information is available from Conference Services, 920 Campus Center, telephone 545-2591.

Wilderness bill considered

WASHINGTON UPI — Rep. Robert H. Steele, R-Conn., has urged passage of legislation to preserve wilderness areas in the eastern United States.

Steele said development and preservation of such areas is essential "before it becomes something we merely remember and tell our children about."

Steele has joined other congressmen in sponsoring the Eastern Wilderness Areas bill that would establish 19 wilderness areas in 15 states and encompass a total of 251,788 acres.

The construction of roads and the use of motor vehicles would be barred from the preserves that would be available to the public for such uses as hiking, camping, fishing, hunting and sightseeing.

The bill also would create 40 new temporary wilderness study areas in national forests until congress could designate the areas wilderness preserves.

Spice your schedule with project ten

With courses ranging in subject matter from the pursuit of "the world spirit" to practical experience in political campaigning, the campus experimental college, Project Ten, is beginning the fall semester with over 20 special 3-credit courses open to every student at the University.

"This is the week when students are looking for new courses," says Charles Adams, the faculty director of Project Ten. "We think they should check out some of ours."

Among the special seminars are courses in "Black Rhetoric," readings from black authors taught for both black and white students; in "American Politics," with the stress on Watergate and the role of social class in government; in "The Role of the Sexes in the Contemporary European Novel; and in "Drugs and Society."

"One of our courses would be of special interest to theatre majors," Adams indicates. "It's concerned with so-called 'popular drama,' with the entertainments for mass audiences, like the melodrama and the musical."

Another course is of special use to people interested in politics and elections. Taught by the candidate for the Democratic nomination for Congress, Kenneth Mosakowski, the seminar in "Political Campaigns" is described as a "working, practical seminar in the nuts and bolts of political mechanisms which obstruct achievement of true democratic representation in American government." Every participant is expected to become involved in a political campaign in the November elections.

The economist Robert Cole is leading a seminar on "The Economics of Africa and the West," particularly relevant in the light of the current sub-Saharan famine.

The political scientist Jane Flax begins her seminar in "Theory and Philosophy" with the basic question: "How does it feel to think philosophically?" --- explored through the use of role-playing, and puzzle-solving, and through readings in Marx, Marcuse, Laing, and Carlos Castenada.

Any students interested in enrolling in Project courses should either register at the Project office in Pierpont (Southwest), or phone the academic office at 5-0871.

Ford's administration irratates conservation

By DONALD LAMBRO
United Press International

WASHINGTON — Conservative Republicans are beginning to grumble about Gerald Ford's first month in the White House.

"They're concerned, they're upset," one Senate conservative said of his congressional GOP colleagues.

"There are a lot of little irritants: Ford's appointments, his advisers, changes in positions or issues here and there. It's what these things are telegraphing to conservatives that is causing us dismay."

While GOP conservatives were reluctant to place their criticisms of Ford's first four weeks on the record, several were willing to say what they thought without being identified.

A major complaint was Ford's nomination of Nelson Rockefeller for vice president. Rockefeller, they say, was never part of GOP "Mainstream" philosophy, was rejected by his party three times for President and did not reflect the so-called "1972 mandate" won by President Nixon.

Sen. Barry Goldwater, R-Ariz., bluntly stated it would be "difficult" for many conservative Republicans to accept Rockefeller as the party's vice presidential nominee in 1976. Rep. John M. Ashbrook, R-Ohio, expressed the feeling of many House conservatives when he said he was "very disappointed" with Ford's selection of Rockefeller.

Conservatives are also uneasy over advisers Ford has gathered around him, including former Gov. William Scranton of Pennsylvania who opposed Goldwater in 1964, Ford's chief job recruiter; former Defense Secretary Melvin Laird, considered Ford's closest adviser outside the government; and former Sen. Charles Goodell, R-N.Y., a prime target of Nixon and Spiro T. Agnew as a "radic-lib."

Another complaint is Ford's appointment of Mary Louise Smith of Iowa, a moderate, as new GOP national chairman.

"He hasn't thrown us a bone in any of his appointments," one House member said, "with the exception of retaining Dean Burch," the long-time Goldwater aliy who do Ford's liaison with the regulatory agencies and the national committee.

"It just seems to be a lot of little signals he keeps sending us," said another disgruntled conservative.

He cited Ford's shift in favor of the Equal Rights Amendment and the boycott of Rhodesian chrome, his amnesty for draft evaders and his call for a major health insurance program while urging cuts in federal spending.

Conservatives are also galled that Ford has consulted the House Black Caucus, labor leaders and liberal politicians while almost ignoring his old conservative House allies.

"They feel they've been totally shut out," said a key strategist of the conservative House Republican Steering Committee. "He's gone out of his way to talk to everyone but the conservatives."

Conservative reactions reach beyond Congress.

"The President is reacting to liberal pressures, said Oklahoma GOP Chairman Clarence Warner. "He may have forgotten that he is where he is today because of his conservative record."

California Gov. Ronald Reagan seemed to be aiming his remarks at Ford when he told a recent Maryland fund-raising affair that most "Americans voted conservative not liberal" in 1972.

Indeed, a principle argument of many conservatives is that Ford inherited Nixon's 1972 election mandate, supposedly a mandate for conservatism, and must now reflect that in his policies.

One knowledgeable Senate conservative concludes that conservatives "will come down on Ford hard and fast" if they are not included in future policy-making.

"They've been burned by Nixon," this conservative said, "They are not going to be as easy on Ford as they were on Nixon."

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

By Stella Wilder

VIRGO: (Aug. 23-Sept. 7) — Business arrangements can be made well ahead of time. Keep to your own method of operation at this time; another's can wait its turn. (Sept. 8-Sept. 22) — Stick to a schedule that has proven feasible in the past. To try new ways and means at this time could mean to introduce a definite sour note.

LIBRA: (Sept. 23-Oct. 7) — Keep appointments even though you may have to put yourself out considerably to do so. There is no point turning another against you. (Oct. 8-Oct. 22) — Concentrate on those activities which require you to use your mental capacities to the utmost. Don't be persuaded into taking the easy way out.

SCORPIO: (Oct. 23-Nov. 7) — If your are wise, you will meet whatever events occur when they occur. To put off your responsibilities is to forfeit success. (Nov. 8-Nov. 21) — Although problems on the home front may not have financial gain as an incentive to their solution, they must not be neglected. Tackle them at once!

SAGITTARIUS: (Nov. 22-Dec. 7) — This is not the "take it easy" week you may have expected. Do what you can to adjust to situations and circumstances that arise. (Dec. 8-Dec. 21) — Make no mistakes as to what issues are involved in your success this week. There is very little margin for error built into present events.

CAPRICORN: (Dec. 22-Jan. 5) — Conserve your energies. Make an effort to remain calm, to swim easily and laxily with the prevailing current. Fight against nothing. (Jan. 6-Jan. 19) — Although you have imagination and creativity, you would do well to keep both under absolute control this week. Remain calm.

AQUARIUS: (Jan. 20-Feb. 3) — Problems of employment may make it difficult for you to meet another's demand this week. Do what you can and then don't worry! (Feb. 4-Feb. 18) — You would do well to hold your enthusiasms in check all through the week. Approach your work affirmatively, but don't go overboard with eagerness.

PISCES: (Feb. 19-March 5) — If you would undertake a conciliatory course of action, make sure that those with whom relations are strained and are ready and willing. (March 6-March 20) — You could make an error of identification early in the week that would cause you regrets for many weeks to come.

ARIES: (March 21-April 4) — The future success or failure of this week's activities depends upon your willingness to adapt to present circumstances. Bend with the wind. (April 5-April 19) — Personal contacts will not be as helpful this week as you had hoped. Trust, instead, to your ability to help yourself progress.

TAURUS: (April 20-May 5) — You should be able to get a clear picture of your immediate future this week. Take care not to underestimate your ability to adapt to ills. (May 6-May 20) — A business association may cause you considerable trouble this week. Don't be alarmed if you are unable to change things to suit yourself.

GEMINI: (May 21-June 6) — Make decisions wisely, but don't expect everything you decide on to turn out your way. Develop old plans into new methods of operation. (June 7-June 20) — Make all plans in accordance with what you know from past experience you are capable of accomplishing.

CANCER: (June 21-July 7) — A new professional project could prove more than you expected where hours and labor are concerned. Find relief through the attainment of new knowledge. (July 8-July 22) — Depend upon your own knowledge and your own ability to act. If you depend upon others, you may be in for genuine disappointment.

LEO: (July 23-Aug. 7) — Keep financial issues from boiling over at this time. You would do well to ask for professional help early in the week.

NFL Exhibition Round Up

By NEIL HERSHBERG
UPI SPORTS WRITER

If the Minnesota Vikings and the Miami Dolphins, the two participants in Super Bowl VIII last season, have any weaknesses, they weren't in evidence Saturday night as both clubs wound up preseason play with convincing victories.

The defending world champion Dolphins rode the 40-year-old arm of Earl Morrall to a 30-7 victory over the Chicago Bears. The Dolphins waited until there were nine minutes left in the second quarter before they made a first down and then scored 10 quick points in the final 1:34 of the half.

Bob Griese hit Paul Warfield on a 40-yard TD pass and Garo Yepremian added a 48-yard field goal.

Morrall entered the game in the second half and promptly launched the Dolphins on successive touchdown drives of 73 and 68 yards, ending them with scoring passes of 21 yards to Howard Twilley and 19 yards to Marlin Briscoe.

Morrall was 7-for-7 for 102 yards passing before he was lifted for third string quarterback Don Strock.

Bob Berry passed for three touchdowns and Oscar Reed ran for three more to spur the Vikings to a 42-0 romp over the San Diego Chargers.

Berry, subbing for injured Fran Tarkenton, hit on 13 of 15 passes for 198 yards before leaving the game midway in the third quarter.

Chuck Foreman, last year's NFC offensive Rookie of the year, rushed for 109 yards in 11 carries in the first half as the Vikings ripped the Chargers' defense for 289 yards and five touchdowns before intermission.

The Dolphins, who have won 26 out of 28 games the past two seasons, romped to their second consecutive Super Bowl victory with a 24-7 triumph over the Vikings in Houston last January. Miami and Minnesota finished with identical 12-2 records in the 1973 campaign and are rated the favorites to win their divisional championships again this season. Regular season competition begins next week.

In other Saturday games it was New Orleans 24 Houston 16; Detroit 21 Cleveland 7; and Oakland 31 New York Jets 6.

Wide receivers Doug Winslow and Joel Parker ran for a touchdown apiece on end around plays to spark the Saints to a come-from-behind 24-16 victory over Houston.

Altie Taylor and Charlie Sanders scored touchdowns in a 3:16 span early in the third quarter to lead Detroit over the Browns.

Rookie quarterback Larry Lawrence passed 44 yards for one touchdown and ran 19 to set up another as Oakland defeated the Jets.

Holloway evens Tennessee with UCLA

By UNITED PRESS INTERNATIONAL

Tennessee Coach Bill Battle decided to settle for a 17-17 tie with UCLA on national television Saturday when he saw quarterback Condredge Holloway come up limping after a spectacular 12-yard touchdown run.

Holloway, who missed more than half the game with a shoulder injury, came back in the fourth quarter and directed an 80-yard drive climaxed by his scoring burst with 3:11 left.

The stylish quarterback hurdled several Bruin defenders to get into the end zone and came up limping.

"I thought about going for two on the extra point but Holloway got up limping after the touchdown run and that changed my mind," said Battle. Instead, Ricky Townsend booted the extra point to give the 15th-ranked Vols the tie with the 12th-ranked Bruins.

Holloway, an all-Southeast conference selection last year, was hurt in the first quarter after Tennessee built a 10-0 lead and without him the Vol offense became a shambles of missed assignments and inept ball handling.

"With Holloway in the game more, they would have given us more trouble," conceded UCLA Coach Dick Vermeil.

Holloway and UCLA's John Sciarra staged a shootout that went to the last 14 seconds when UCLA placekicker Brett White missed a 40-yard field goal attempt.

Sciarra had the best of it statistically, passing for 212 yards and one touchdown and running for 154 more yards for a total 366 in total offense, while Holloway got 148 yards through the air and one touchdown.

In other games among ranked teams, No. 16 North Carolina State pounded Wake Forest 33-15 and No. 13 Arizona State shocked No. 10 Houston 30-9. No. 18 Tulane's game with Mississippi was postponed because of hurricane warnings.

Wolfpack quarterback Dave Buckey passed for two touchdowns and ran for another as defending champion N. C. State chopped down Wake Forest in an Atlantic Coast conference game.

N. C. State, owner of a 9-3 record as well as a Liberty Bowl victory in 1973, was plagued by 74 yards in first half penalties which kept the Wolfpack lead to 3-0 at halftime. Wake Forest managed only one win

Skycycle is a bust

The "Skycycle" was 13 feet long, about 450 pounds and powered by steam. The take-off ramp reached 108 feet into the air and was tilted 56 degreeu. There was a three-foot pogo pole in the nose for softening his landing.

Several Hollywood stars — including John Wayne, Steve McQueen Elvis Presley and Dustin Hoffman — were on hand as were President Ford's sons, John, 22, and Steve, 19. And there was Bobby Riggs, tennis hustler, who beat Knievel out of a $25,000 bet by riding a motorcycle here from Las Vegas in less than 72 hours.

Knievel, a onetime hubcap thief and bank robber who now prides himself on being a "big spender" and lover, dreamed up the idea of a super-jump eight years ago. At first he planned to rocket over the Grand Canyon, but he switched to the Snake River after trouble with the Interior Department.

The night before his crack at the Snake River was spent at his home in Butte, Mont., 200 miles away.

Despite the futile attempt, the blastoff earned Knievel at least $6 million from total receipts estimated at $26 million by the promoter of the event and the closed-circuit television.

The rocket was only in the air a couple of seconds before two parachutes popped out, the first being a drag chute. Knievel and the craft — which looked like a kiddies' carnival rocket — floated gently to the river bank 600 feet below the rim of the canyon.

Knievel climbed from the rocket and waved to the anxious crowd to signal his well-being. The crowd cheered wildly.

A boat and three helicopters rushed to the touchdown spot. Knievel climbed into the red motorboat — again waving to the crowds on both sides of the jagged-

The parachute which saved Knievel's life opened just two seconds after the launch at 3:35 p.m. MDT. Just before liftoff, Knievel exuded confidence and said: "I'll be back."

There had been two previous test flights. Both attempts failed. However, Truax said the tests were designed only to check certain facets of the flight and it was known the two craft would not make it all the way across the canyon. Their wreckage was placed near the launch site for everyone to see.

Knievel's rocket landed just as it was supposed to — with its nose down. The pogo stick shock absorber made the craft bounce a couple of times on a rocky outcropping, then settled down on its side with Knievel's head up.

Knievel once philosophized about the jump:

"I believe that 50 percent of the people don't want Evel Knievel to tame the canyon. I believe that 45 percent don't want to see me die either — but they want to be there in case I do."

When Knievel returned to the canyon rim, spectators stretched to touch his white leather jump suit with blue and white stars crisscrossing his chest.

Red Sox top Milwaukee again

BOSTON [UPI] — The Boston Red Sox are back in the swing of things both figuratively and literally.

The Red Sox, whose bats were dormant during a recently-concluded eight-game losing streak, came from behind for the second day in a row Sunday to defeat the Milwaukee Brewers, 8-6, and move back into a first place tie in the American League East with the New York Yankees.

And, for the second day in a row, a darkhorse hero emerged. Saturday it was Mario Guerrero, who drove in the winning run with a bloop single. This time it was 23-year-old relief pitcher Dick Pole.

Pole came in for Juan Marichal with one out in the first and the bases loaded and two runs in. He gave up a single to Tim Johnson to make it 4-0 but didn't allow a run or an extra base hit until the eighth. By that time the Red Sox were leading 8-4.

"I was nervous," said Pole. "They told me afterwards that my hands were shaking when I grabbed the ball from Marichal. I'm always nervous but this time I settled down."

Pole, who has been riding the Boston-Pawtucket shuttle all season, picked up his first win of the year. The Red Sox now face the Yankees for a two-game series at Fenway Park where they have not lost to New York since 1972.

"We all have to play baseball," said veteran Rico Petrocelli. "We have to do the same thing we've been doing all along. We lost eight straight games but we really didn't play that badly. We kept on fighting and we still have to do that. Look, we're not the 1927 Yankees but neither are they."

The Red Sox snapped a 4-4 tie in the sixth on a double by Doug Griffin which scored Petrocelli, who had walked and moved to second on a sacrifice. Guerrero then knocked in Griffin with a single to left to make the score 6-4.

However, it was a two-run homer by Dwight Evans in the seventh that proved decisive. Evans' homer was the first for Boston since Sept. 1 when Carl Yastrzemski hit one in Minnesota. The Red Sox have only had four home runs since the middle of August.

The Red Sox started their comeback in the fourth when designated hitter Cecil Cooper hit a sacrifice fly to score Juan Beniquez. In the next inning, Tim McCarver looped a single to right and went to second on another single by Griffin. A sacrifice by Guerrero moved the runners over, and after a walk to Tommy Harper loaded the bases, Beniquez hit a sacrifice fly to make it 4-2 and Bernie Carbo followed with a double to tie the score.

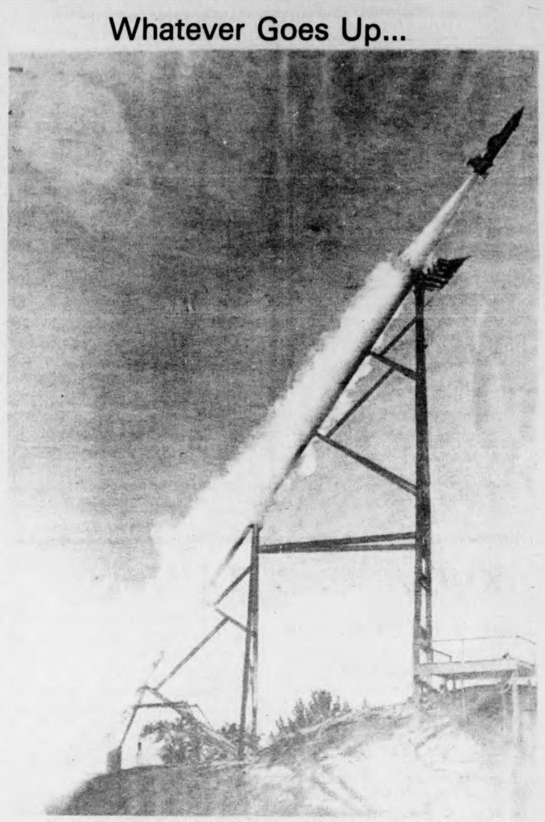
Evel's Skycycle Is A Bust

...but earns him $6 million paycheck

Whatever Goes Up...



Evel Knievel's skycycle begins its very short-lived trip through space.

By DUSTON HARVEY

TWIN FALLS, Idaho [UPI] — Space-age stuntman Evel Knievel parachuted in his mini-rocket into the Snake River Canyon without serious injury Sunday in a futile — but lucrative — attempt to soar across the quarter-mile gorge.

Knievel, at least $6 million richer for his seconds-long flight, explained later that he himself triggered the chutes which lowered the ricket safely to the bottom of the 600-foot deep canyon because the rocket had begun rolling over.

But the producer of the closed-circuit TV of the super-ballyhooed event said the chutes had been activated accidentally when Knievel's hand was jolted loose from the parachute trigger.

Whichever way it happened, Knievel emerged from the dented "Skycycle X2" waving to the throngs that lined the rims of the treacherous, lava-walled canyon. He then was whisked by helicopter back to the launch site.

The blastoff came at 3:35 p.m. PMT 5:35 p.m. EDT. The red, white and blue rocket rose from the launch pad for 8.7 seconds. Then the drag parachute popped from the tail, pulling out the main chute. The rocket floated 600 feet to the rugged canyon floor alongside the swirling waters of the river.

"The shot almost knocked me out," Knievel said afterwards.

The 34-year-old cyclist, whose flight made him the highest price daredevil in history, had trouble getting off his seat belt.

"Thank God I didn't go into the river or I never would have made it," he said.

As the "Skycycle" bounced to a stop Knievel's head was straight up.

Harold Conrad, chief publicist for the promoter, Top Rank, Inc., said the daredevil "suffered slight cuts."

The chutes were controlled by a "deadman stick" which was capable of triggering the chute with the release of pressure. Knievel said he activated the chutes.

He said the designer "told me many times that, if I could ever see any opposite wall of the canyon instead of sky that would mean it was rolling and I should pull the chute and, thank God he taught me that. He saved my life."

He added that the rocket was rolling.

But John Branker, executive producer of the closed-circuit television operation, said, "The strain of the G's force of gravity under direct acceleration loosed his grip on the bar."

Branker also said he was with Knievel's blonde wife, Linda, and their three children at launch time. "She thought he was dead," he said. "We all thought he was dead." He said there was minor bleeding from the stuntman's nose and eyes.

Knievel made his pre-launch arrival at the launch site in a helicopter. He alighted with his wife and children and walked hand-in-hand with his wife to the star-spangled "Skycycle X2," with their sons and daughter following.

Steam was spewing from the tail of the mini-rocket as crewmen scurried about making the final preparations for the blast-off.

Some 30,000 spectators were massed on the south side of the 4,000-foot wide gorge in the desolate area, having paid $25 a ticket to watch the flight.

At 3:17 p.m. Knievel was placed in a chair dangling from a crane so he could be lifted into the cramped seat.

"I've never been afraid in my life of dying under any circumstances," he said in a pre-jump interview. "Rather than be the victim of a senseless tragedy, I'd rather be busted into the wind like a meteorite."

He gave a thumbs-up sign as the chair gently lofted him into "Skycycle X2."

"I'm living a dream they said never could be dreamed," he told a television interviewer.

The cyclist's cousin, the Rev. Gary Sullivan of Carroll College in Helena, Mont., gave the benediction as the wind stirred up the barren land's dust.

"We all pray that he'll have a successful landing, whether that may be on earth or in heaven," Sullivan said.

The 34-year-old Knievel, who assumed the first name "Evel" because it rhymed with his last name, began his career in stunt jumping at the age of nine when he rode a bicycle over an obstacle.

Now — 25 years later — he claims some 300 motorcycle jumps and only 11 crashes. His defiance of nature earned him 50 bone fractures over the years.

The rocket was the creation of Robert C. Truax, a former president of the American Rocket Society and an engineer who worked on the Polaris missile. A safe landing guaranteed him $100,000, to be collected Monday.

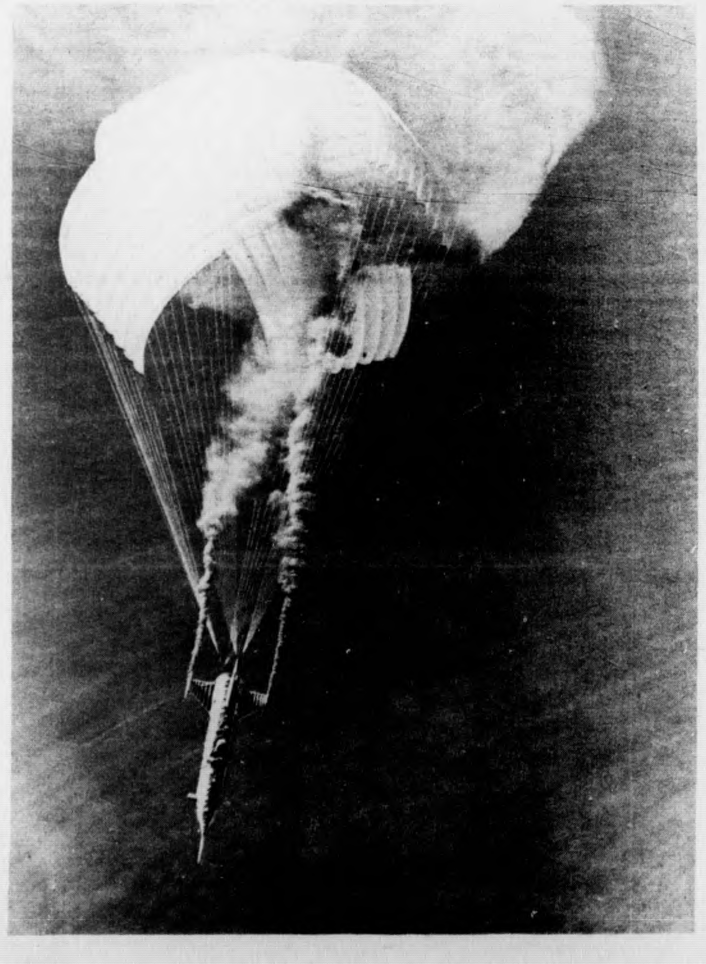
Must Come Down



Dave Eibel

It was a big sleaze

To put it mildly Evel Knievel's jump over the Snake River Canyon in Idaho was a joke. For the thousands who paid twenty-five dollars to see this glorified folk-hero "risk his life" it was a ripoff.

Let's compare the fans along the canyon rim, to the fans at Indianapolis on Memorial Day for the 500. In the first place they are there to see human beings race each other at inhuman speeds. But most importantly they are there to see men look death in the face and not even bat an eyelash. Racing drivers are extensions of each and every one of us. They express the daring, courage, and brashness which we'd all like to have, or say we have, but which, deep down we know we don't have. So we use surrogates to feel what we are not, and what few of us can be.

The fans at Snake River Canyon were massed to see Evel Knievel flirt with death. Would he make it to the other side and crash or would he fall into the abyss and disappear forever, or would he land unscathed on the other side? Most of the onlookers wanted Knievel to make it over the canyon and live to jump other canyons, other Mack tracks or whatever a daredevil jumps. But deep down the evil part of their minds probably hoped that something terrible would happen to Knievel. Obviously such a feeling would be a horrible one, but just think for a moment and realize that fires, riots, and executions are among the most popular forms of entertainment in the world. But no matter whether people wanted Knievel to live or die, I'm sure that they wanted to see him honestly risk his life, in a true test of courage.

But the whole buildup was a hoax. Forget the canyon and its swirling waters at the bottom of the abyss. Forget the dangers of a crash landing. Just remember the parachute. No matter how horrible it sounds, for six million dollars, there shouldn't have been one. That would've been a risk.

I've got to admit to a certain cynicism about the whole affair. I do not believe for a moment that Evel would have ever conceived of making such a jump unless he knew that survival was a certainty. It was this injection of fear and the illusion of danger that enabled him to make over six million dollars from people who should have known better. What we all thought was an incredible risk was nothing of the kind.

According to reports, Knievel accidently pulled the parachute release, even before he reached the highest point of the climb. But he would have done it sooner or later, more likely sooner. No matter what Knievel said before, you've got to believe that he himself knew that the odds were all on his side.

It is noteworthy that Knievel lost a $25,000 bet with the most famous hustler of our time, Bobby Riggs. But that title must now go to Knievel who from only scant moments in his life became the Six Million Dollar Man, except that this new one is human.

The whole thing was one great put on, like the stories behind so many "so-called" folk heroes are. I didn't want the man to die but I wanted him to do more than take off and parachute to safety as peacefully as a graceful swan paddles its way around a pond. I guess I was as naive as the 20,000 at the site or all the multitudes paying six dollars a seat for the closed-circuit view of one of the great frauds of our time; but I thought he really was going to risk his life.

Whether you like it or not he pulled a fast one on all of us. He didn't flirt with death; for him discretion, as the saying goes, was the better part of valor. And Kneivel forgot the valor part and took home at least six million dollars worth of discretion. To use the vernacular, it was all a big sleaze.

One million turnout expected in primary today

Physical Education requirement dropped

By Judy Friedland
Staff Reporter

UMass students must no longer fulfill a Physical Education requirement to graduate, UMass officials said yesterday.

The elimination of the requirement came at the August meeting of the Board of Trustees and marked the culmination of five years of study by the PE Department.

The proposal had previously been passed by the PE Department, in which it received only one veto, the Academic Matters Committee, Faculty Senate, and the Provost's Office.

The department hopes that the reduced pressure will enable them to offer more interesting courses with smaller enrollments, according to David Bischoff, Dean of the School of Physical Education and Associate Provost in charge of Professional Schools.

"We're one of the most responsive PE Departments in the country, sensitive to the changing needs and interests of the students," said Bischoff, citing the broad range of courses offered by the department, such as martial arts, gliding and gymnastics.

"With the requirement, however, we were forced of offer courses.

Now, that there is no pressure, we will be offering a better range of options, such as series courses at higher levels, "like Yoga," he said.

2 arrested for bike theft

Two UMass students were arraigned Saturday in Hampshire District Court in Northampton on charges of larceny over $100 and receiving stolen property, according to Detective Sergeant Philip Cavanaugh of the UMass police department.

Thomas A. Novembrine and Thomas C. Hill, both 19 and living in Mackimmie dormitory in Southwest, had their cases continued until Oct. 3.

Police arrested the pair early Saturday morning following a tip that stolen bicycles could be found in their room Five ten-speed bicycles, valued at $800, were discovered on the premises.

David Johnston, Director of Public Safety for UMass, said that the police were able to quickly locate the owners of three of the five bikes because they had been rigistered with the campus police

"This incident shows how effective our bike registration program is," said Johnston. "I definitely urge all students who have not yet done so to come down to the campus police station in Dickinson Hall and register their bicycles."

Sergeant Cavanaugh reported that most of the bicycles had been taken from bike racks outside of dorms in Southwest.

Task force views UMass in the 70's

By Martin J. Waters
Staff Reporter

Members of a task force now beginning study of the academic future of UMass-Amherst are widely split about the nature of the job before them. There is a consensus that the growth era on campus is over and the availability of funds will largely shape the school in the immediate future.

The Academic Program Review Task Force is the result of a proposal from Robert L. Gluckstern, Vice-Chancellor for Academic Affairs. Organizational work began this spring, with David C. Bischoff, a special assistant in the chancellor's office, chairman of the 19-member committee.

Student leaders protested the lack of student representation during the summer. The recent addition of delegates from the undergraduate and graduate student senates brings student membership on the task force to five and the total to 21.

Bischoff says "hard decisions" must be made about allocation of available resources within the campus community.

Prof. Stevenson W. Fletcher, acting chairman of the Department of Hotel, Restaurant and Travel Administration, sees the job of the task force as that of determining the general philosophical basis for

Court denies Lovejoy motion

By DAVID GREENSLIT
Staff Reporter

GREENFIELD — Sam Lovejoy's chances of using his trial as a political forum on the dangers of nuclear power appeared to diminish yesterday when the trial judge denied two pre-trial motions apparently crucial to his case.

Lovejoy later told the Collegian, however, that yesterday's hearing in Greenfield Superior Court "hasn't changed the scope of (his) trial at all."

He is charged with willful and malicious destruction of personal property in connection with the toppling of Northeast Utilities' meteorological tower at the company's proposed nuclear power plant site on the Montague Plains, 15 miles north of Amherst.

Northeast Utilities built the tower as a first step in their proposed $1.3 billion nuclear power plant, which is scheduled to be completed in Montague in the early 1980's.

Superior Court Associate Justice Kent Smith denied a Lovejoy motion to subpoena Northeast Utilities for information showing the dangers of nuclear power plants. He also denied part of a motion for exculpatory evidence which requested the state attorney general to submit evidence on nuclear power in general and on the Montague nuclear power plant in particular.

Democrats in hot primary election today

By MARK VOGLER
Staff Correspondent

Vogler is a graduate of UMass-Amherst and a contributing writer to the Collegian. He now lives in Amherst.

Whether party differences flare or are resolved among Massachusetts Republicans and Democrats may hinge on the outcome of today's gubernatorial primaries.

UP until last week the race to the Governor's mansion was billed as a lop-sided three-foe fight against the incumbent Francis W. Sargent.

While Sargent's former state commerce commissioner Carroll P. Sheehan concentrated on maligning the Governor from the state's conservative GOP wing, Democratic challenger Michael S. Dukakis and Atty Gen. Robert H. Quinn stayed away from a party dispute and capitolized on Massachusetts' economic woes and "the man in charge."

But the truce ended last Wednesday in the majority party ranks as Quinn attacked Dukakis for his "wishy-washyness" on the racial imbalance issue.

The lack of Democratic harmony which has figured highly in the election of four Republican Governors in the last five campaigns because of primary disputes could not be a factor in November--if the loser choses not to bow out gracefully.

Tempers flared when Quinn's staff distributed leaflets suggesting that Dukakis had changed his position on forced busing--from support for it while in the legislature to opposition since becoming a gubernatorial candidate.

Quinn also hit his primary opponent as a pro-abortionist and non-advocate of the elderly, in several newspaper advertisements.

Dukakis, who vigorously--but unsuccessfuly sought a televised debate with the Attorney General throughout the campaign, called Quinn's tactics "irresponsible and inflamatory."

"This is precisely the kind of hack politics that we've seen so much of in this state over the last 40 years," Dukakis reacted, adding, "It's going to stop next January."

Many political observers feel the late Quinn-Dukakis tiff was triggered two weeks ago after Dukakis released a statement critical of the way the state was using Federal Law enforcement funds which Quinn oversees.

Although both sides have pledged support to the victor of the Democratic primary for party unity's sake, some close sources have observed that Quinn or Dukakis might not accept a defeat in that light.

Marked differences

Dukakis and Quinn, while having sharp political differences in policy areas, are not the type of politicians who would join hands after a grueling primary contest.

The 39-year-old Dukakis voted against Quinn when the Legislature elected him to succeed Elliot Richardson as attorney general early in 1969.

Three years earlier the former Brookline representative unsuccessfully sought the party's attorney general nomination at the state convention and threatened to run against Quinn in 1970.

However, Dukakis instead decided to run as Lt. Governor on the Kevin White ticket which was defeated by Sargent that year. Even though Dukakis would have been elected if the posts were not tied together Mayor White refuses to endorse his former running mate while maintaining neutrality.

...the lack of Democratic harmony could now be the factor in November

if the loser chooses not to bow out gracefully.

Quinn had not prior to last week campaigned in public against his primary opponent, but in private he told one reporter "If you were running for public office, would you rather live in Boston or Brookline? Would you rather be a graduate of Swarthmore (Dukakis' alma mater) or Boston College? Would you rather be a speaker or a member of the House? Attorney General or the moderator of a TV show?"

Both are well primed for their party's nomination.

Dukakis was noted as a liberal reformer in the legislature, claiming to be the chief architect of the no-fault insurance legislation which was passed in 1970 after a four-year battle.

Other favorable measures he took were to help reorganize the state police, crack down on favoritism in promotions, revamp the Youth Services board, back the bill that created Mass Housing Finance Agency and advocate environmental protection.

Quinn cites an impressive political career which brought him to the top party echelon as majority whip and speaker of the house before assuming his present office.

His accomplishments include the reorganization of the state's Department of Education, the new UMass campus for Boston, single-member legislative districts and the decriminalization of alcoholism.

Quinn and Dukakis are in agreement that the economy across the Commonwealth has taken a nosedive--number one in unemployment throughout the nation--because of the current administration. But the two have different plans on how to get the state back on its feet.

Quinn proposes the formation of an economic action council with himself as chairman which would pull together the various segments of labor and industry to develop more jobs by attracting new companies to Massachusetts.

He says he would favor "a startup tax moratorium" or any other incentive that would be effective in getting more business for the state.

Dukakis wants to implement a budget reform program which through what he calls greater productivity increase in state government and a no-hire, no-fire employee policy for the state.

He advocates a five per cent cutback in state spending by shaving $150-million off the fiscal 1975 budget of $3-billion.

Sheehan's candidacy

The ugly economic state of Massachusetts was undoubtly the basis of Sheehan's motivation to run against Sargent in the Republican primary--but it lacks substance.

He contends "a hostile economic climate," -- thanks to the Sargent administration--has hindered employment in Massachusetts and virtually driven commerce from the state.

Sargent's lack of concern to the business community seriously handcuffed him from carrying out his duties and later forced him to resign, the Republican contender says.

Sheehan's candidacy seems to hold few answers for the business state of affairs in Massachusetts and resembles more the anti-Sargent ramblings of sorts.

He points the finger at the Sargent administration for the economic stagger the state took from 1969-71.

According to the Division of Employment Security, the average state unemployment rate rose from 3.9 to 7.0 per cent during that time.

Obviously Sheehan has some interesting data of sorts to back his assault on Sargent.

Between 1969 and 1970 the state lost 35,000 manufacturing jobs.

Between 1970 and 1971, 48,000 manufacturing jobs were lost.

But Sheehan's resignation was followed by a rapid turnabout. Between 1971 and 1972, only 600 jobs were lost. During the following year the state enjoyed a gain of 19,100 jobs in manufacturing.

With the given data in mind, Sheehan really has no business attacking Sargent on the economy. Sargent maintains that his one-time subordinate is merely holding a grudge over the Governor for failing to receive a cabinet appointment.

Sargent's economy

Sargent should really have no fear. Registered Republicans represent less than one-fifth the registered voters in the state--and Sarge shrugged their support last time.

He says Sheehan is typical of partisan Republicans who put the interests of their party before the interests of the people and the Commonwealth.

Never-the-less, it is the first time since 1950 that a Republican gubernatorial candidate has been opposed in a party primary. Regardless, incumbent governors usually get their party's endorsement for the asking and without opposition.

Sargent is undoubtly hoping that Dukakis will defeat Quinn for the Democratic nomination so the conservatives will have no place to go except with the governor.

Otherwise both parties could be in disarray after today's votes are finally tallied.

Sargent's stand on the economy:

"Inflation I can't do anything about; but there are some things we can do something about. We can and did propose 13 major tax incentives to industry to grow and to expand here. We can and did propose a very major program for MHFA housing that will provide jobs for 35,000 people, that will promote over $300 million of private investment.

"I still believe that we will not have to raise taxes. But, when every single day you pick up the paper and find that the price of automobiles is going up, the price of food is going up, the price of everything is going up, there's no way of knowing where this is going to end."

Despite the economic issue, Sargent as Governor for the past six years, has his record to fall back on.

He has kept a distant from the policies of former President Richard Nixon and has argued the Commonwealth's case in Washington as well as any Governor could.

His appointments--while many times controversial to GOP leaders--have been fair and not based on partisan considerations.

The Governor has been a national pace setter in the areas of privacy, the protection of offshore fisheries and matters in the environmental field.

However, while making daring moves in the area of Human Services, his administration has come under attack for major shortcomings within the Department of Corrections, Youth Services and Mental Health.

Experts will be surprised if Sheehan gets as much as 30 per cent of the vote in his match-up with Sargent.

1 million turnout seen in Dukakis-Quinn race

BOSTON [AP] - More than a million people are expected to vote in the primary election today spurred by a close battle in the Democratic gubernatorial race and unusual Republican contests for top state jobs.

James D. Leary, director of the state Election Division, predicted a "strong 35 per cent turnout" if weather throughout most of the state remains fair.

With 18-year-olds voting for the first time, registrations are close to three million, Leary said.

On the Democratic side, liberal Michael S. Dukakis is in a neck-and-neck race for the gubernatorial nomination with Atty. Gen. Robert H. Quinn.

A Boston Globe telephone poll published yesterday showed Dukakis clinging to a 39 to 32 per cent lead over Quinn, with 29 per cent undecided.

For the first time in recent history, an incumbent Republican governor, Francis W. Sargent, is being challenged in the primary.

The Globe poll showed conservative Carroll P. Sheehan trailing by more than two-to-one. But this primary could be affected particularly by the size of the turnout, and, Leary said, "the Republican race is losing steam."

The GOP campaign for attorney general is still tight. Three candidates are making a close fight of it - Josiah A. Spaulding of Manchester, William I. Cowin of Newton, and Charles C. Cabot Jr. of Dover.

Spaulding, who lost a 1970 campaign to Sen. Edward Kennedy, is perhaps the best known, but the race is considered close.

Among the Democrats former Lt. Gov. Francis X. Bellotti is seen holding a slight lead over former crime fighter Edward F. Harrington.

The Republicans a.e fielding only one candidate for lieutenant governor. Lt. Gov. Donald R. Dwight is unchallenged in his primary.

Other Democratic candidates for lieutenant governor are Boston City Councillor Christopher A. Ianella; Eva B. Hester, an aide on the legislature's House Ways and Means Committee; Randolph Selectman Thomas Sullivan and Hampden County Register of Deeds John Pierce Lynch.

Where to vote:

Registered Amherst voters may cast ballots from 10 a.m. to 8 p.m. today at the following polling places by precinct. To find out your precinct, call the Amherst Town Clerk's office:

--Meadow St., at Amherst Auction Galleries for precincts 1 and 7.

--The Kellogg Ave. Odd Fellows Hall for precincts 2, 3 and 4.

--The new Fort River School on South East Street for precinct 5.

--South Amherst's Munson Memorial Library for precinct 6.

If you are a registered independent, you may vote in either the Democratic or Republican primary.

6 UMass police honored for bravery

Acts of valor, bravery, and lifesaving were noted Saturday, Aug. 31, when Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery of the University of Massachusetts-Amherst presented medals to six UMass public safety officers.

Accepting the awards at ceremonies at the V.F. W. hall in Amherst were Patrolmen: Richard S. Grader, Michael R. Grabiec, Michael Bozek, Daniel C. Hagan, Robert E. Hawkins, and James S. Tucker.

Grader and Grabiec were honored for their "valor" in a May 8 incident involving a campus visitor who had been barred from the campus and who returned with a revolver with which he threatened to kill the officers.

In letters of appreciation to the two men, UMass Director of Public Safety David L. Johnston said, "This act took place in full view of scores of innocent bystanders. You and your fellow officer then disarmed the man without resorting to the use of deadly force and at great risk to your own lives."

Bozek and a UMass student fireman, Gary A. Childs of Orleans, Mass., are credited with saving the life of a student. Childs will also receive an award for his action.

In his letter to Bozek, Johnston said, "Your good judgement and quick thinking on May 15, 1974 by rendering immediate and proper mouth-to-mouth resuscitation to a person who had ceased breathing, undoubtedly saved a life."

In another May 15 incident, three UMass officers faced campus visitors who were armed and dangerous.

In his letter to Hawkins, Hagan, and Tucker, Johnston said, "Your courageous response. . . to a desperate situation involving two armed men who were threatening several citizens, required great bravery and restraint. Thanks to your efforts the gunmen were arrested without the use of deadly force by the police, which could have harmed innocent bvstanders."

Parking rules take effect on Sept. 30

Strict enforcement of the parking decal regulations will begin at 7:00 a.m. on September 30.

This is two weeks later than the previously anticipated date of September 16. The parking decals were delivered by the vendor to the Parking Office four weeks late, and therefore distribution of decals to the people registered in the parking system has been delayed. Rather than jeopardize the users of the system because of circumstances beyond their control, strict enforcement will be delayed until the 30th of September.

Safety and hazardous violations will continue to be strictly enforced at all times and will include ticketing and towing.

Until the 30th, either 1973-74 or 1974-75 decals will be honored. Guards will direct persons with no decals to the peripheral lots, meters, or Campus Center Garage.

People who have received the notice of parking assignment in the mail are urged to complete the transaction and get their decals by mail as described in the notice.

New editor to be elected Thursday

The Daily Collegian will hold elections Thursday at 8 p.m. in room 904 of the Campus Center to elect an editor-in-chief.

Karen Lynch, who was elected by the Collegian staff last Jan. for a one year term, withdrew from the University Friday for personal reasons.

The new editor-in-chief will serve the remainder of Lynch's term.

Old method... ...New look

While attending the World Population Conference in Bucharest this summer, UMass doctoral student Duane Dale filed the following report on an interesting subject — colored condoms:

By DUANE DALE
Special Correspondent

New breakthroughs in birth control technology may be some time off, according to experts who recently gathered in Bucharest for the World Population Conference, but an old method has taken on a new look.

The old method is the condom and the new look is color. The Japanese prefer pastels, Swedes are buying pale green and black, while Kenyans like blue and white, according to a recent study. Colored condoms are a new arrival on the U. S. market.

In Thailand, as in the U. S., there had been a stigma attached to the actual purchase of condoms. To make the method more popular, Thai family planner Mechai Viravaidya has sponsored condom-inflating contests.

As with balloon-blowing contests, prizes are awarded for the largest. To make condoms more available, Mechai has stocked them aboard the small boats which sell fruits and vegetables along the riverbanks.

The last decade has seen four major improvements in the technology of fertility control: the pill, IUDs, the suction procedure for abortion, and outpatient procedures for female sterilization. Experts agree that better methods are still needed, but the next round of advances may not come so quickly. Injections, implants, a male pill, and reversible vasectomies are under investigation.

Nixon will testify at trial

Nixon's pardon sparks protests

WASHINGTON [UPI] — President Ford's surprise unconditional pardon for Richard M. Nixon provoked widespread protests yesterday and threatened to shatter Ford's month-long courtship with Congress, but stood unchallenged by Watergate special prosecutor Leon Jaworski.

Ford's action, which legal sources said virtually guarantees the former president will have to testify at the Watergate cover-up trial, resulted in the resignation of White House press secretary J. F. terHorst and a hostile greeting from demonstrators when Ford arrived in Pittsburgh for a speech.

There was dismay on Wall Street, already battered by inflation and economic uncertainties. "In two words, it is a disaster," said economist Eliot Janeway. "Ford and Knievel went down at the same time."

Tilford Gaines, vice president of Manufacturers Hanover Bank, said the pardon has "shortened the honeymoon" between Ford and the financial community.

The White House reported that telephone callers opposed the President's decision by a 3-to-1 margin. At the Capitol, some liberal members of the House Judiciary Committee spoke of reopening impeachment proceedings against Nixon - the only recourse open to Congress.

But Rep. Peter W. Rodino Jr., D-N.J., the Judiciary chairman, let it be known he opposed the idea. Senate Democratic Leader Mike Mansfield urged Jaworski to prosecute Nixon anyway, but Jaworski's aides said privately they doubted he would contest Ford's decision by seeking to indict Nixon.

Ford announced Sunday he was pardoning Nixon for all crimes he "has committed or may have committed" as President to spare him further suffering and to close the books on Watergate, even before his predecessor's case reached the courts.

Nixon, who resigned Aug. 9 in the face of certain impeachment for his role in the Watergate cover-up, promptly accepted Ford's grant of immunity from possible trial and conviction with a statement of regret at his handling of the Watergate scandal.

The pardon applies only to federal offenses during Nixon's five-year, seven-month presidency, but leaves him open for state or local prosecution, civil suits and subpoenas.

His chief Watergate lawyer, Herbert J. Miller Jr. of Washington, was reported to have conceded that Nixon, now denied the Fifth Amendment protection against self-incrimination, will have to appear at the cover-up trial of six of his former White House aides and campaign associates starting here Sept. 30.

Ford was roundly booed by spectators yesterday when he appeared in Pittsburgh to address an urban transportation conference. Demonstrators chanted "Justice Died" and "Prosecute Nixon," and waved placards reading "Ford and Nixon are Collaborators" and "We Demand Amnesty for All War Resisters."

Reaction in Congress generally split along partisan lines, and nationwide editorial comment was mixed, but some of Ford's Republican legislative allies joined Democrats in criticizing the Nixon pardon.

Sen. Sam J. Ervin, D-N.C., chairman of the old Senate Watergate committee, said the pardon "aids and abets the efforts of those who sought to hide the truth in respect to Mr. Nixon's personal involvement in the Watergate affair from the American people, and thus continues the cover-up operations."

U.S. astronauts and Russian cosmonauts got together yesterday at the Houston space center to begin training for the scheduled U.S. space link up in mid-1975. The American astronauts (from the left) are: Tom Stafford, Vance Brand and Donald "Deke" Slayton.

Jaworski's no. 2 assistant resigns to protest pardon

WASHINGTON [UPI] — Philip A. Lacovara, a Republican and the No. 3 man at the Watergate special prosecutor's office, quit yesterday as a result of President Ford's decision to grant Richard Nixon full pardon for all Watergate crimes.

Lacovara, refusing to detail his reasons for fear of compromising the upcoming Sept. 30 cover-up trial, nonetheless said Ford's action alone had triggered his decision to quit.

"I like to think of myself as a serious person and I do not do things lightly," he said in an interview. "I gave it a good deal of thought. We all have to do what we think is right."

Lacovara's resignation as counsel to the special prosecutor Leon Jaworski was the second high-level casualty of Ford's decision Sunday to pardon the former President. Presidential press secretary J. F. terHorst quit immediately, saying it was a matter of conscience.

Lacovara's resignation was submitted to Jaworski in mid-afternoon after a long talk and becomes effective Sept. 29. He said it was "absolutely not related in any way" to any policy clash with Jaworski.

The foreman of the Watergate grand jury, meanwhile, said some members of the panel feel "betrayed" by Ford's action and may consider making evidence against Nixon public anyway.

The foreman, Vladimir Pregelj, said he "would prefer the initiative to come" from Jaworski but might have to take it upon himself to call the grand jury into session to consider possible options regarding Nixon.

Lacovera, who was deputy soliciter general in the Justice Department before joining the special prosecutor's office last year, said he planned to return to private law practice but had no firm plans at this time.

He declined to say whether any other members of Jaworski's staff were on the brink of resigning as a result of the Nixon pardon.

"Everyone has to speak for himself as to what their feelings are and what the significance is," he said.

Pregelj said a few members of the grand jury had called him and that their reactions ranged from "deep dismay to high outrage."

Impeachment inquiry might be reopened

WASHINGTON [UPI] — Angered by the pardon of former President Richard M. Nixon, a few House Judiciary Committee members yesterday considered the idea of reviving their impeachment investigation of Nixon - either by calling him as a witness or renewing the subpoenas which he refused to honor.

The idea of reopening the inquiry and calling Nixon as a witness was proposed by Rep. Jerome Waldie, D-Calif., who said the pardon leaves the nation with "no forum except the Congress of the United States in which the entire record of Nixon can now be exposed.

Rep. Peter W. Rodino Jr., D-N.J., chairman of the 38-member panel which voted to impeach Nixon before he resigned from office last month, said he had no intention of reopening the inquiry. But Rodino, like most of the other committee members interviewed, deplored the pardon granted Sunday by President Ford.

Waldie indicated he "might very well" take his proposal to the full House if Rodino continued to oppose it.

Ford postpones amnesty decision

WASHINGTON [UPI] — President Ford will not announce his amnesty plan for war resisters as scheduled today because he has been too preoccupied with the Nixon pardon to decide on amnesty options, a White House spokesman announced yesterday.

But deputy press secretary Jack Hushen said that whatever Ford decides and whenever announces it, the Vietnam draft evaders and deserters will not get the unconditional pardon that former president Richard M. Nixon got.

Asked whether Ford considered the Nixon pardon "more urgent" than the question of amnesty which covers some 50,000 individual, Hushen said, "that seems a conclusion you can draw."

Hushen announced Ford's decision to postpone the amnesty announcement indefinitely as he returned to Washington aboard Air Force 1 from Pittsburgh, where Ford was booed and heckled by a street crowd protesting the Nixon pardon.

Hushen said Ford "has not finished his consideration of what he plans to do about amnesty" because of the press of other business over the past week and especially the past three days - meaning the pardon decision announced Sunday.

"It's a very complex subject, more complex than he thought initially, and he wants to be personally involved in the entire matter, so that there will be no announcement on amnesty tomorrow.

"I can't give you a date when the plan will be announced, but there will be one."

Portugal moves to quiet rebels

LOURENCO MARQUES [UPI] - Portugal move yesterday to put down a rebellion by Portuguese settlers who had threatened to seize control and declare Mozambique independent under a white regime.

The Lisbon government of President Antonio de Spinola, describing the situation in Mozambique as "extremely delicate and tense," pledged firm action against the self-styled white Mozambique Popular Movement.

Troops from northern Mozambique were sent to reinforce units in Lourenco Marques, according to Portuguese armed force chief of staff Gen. Francisco da Costa Gomes.

The Lisbon government said its action to quell the uprising, details of which were not disclosed, would be firm. But attempts would be made to avoid bloodshed.

Lisbon's promise of firm action came after two troubleshooters from Portugal spent a day talking with the dissidents.

The leader of Mozambique's black guerrillas, Samora Machel, was reported to have warned earlier of a resumption of the 10-year bush war unless the white breakaway movement was quelled.

White unrest at Portugal's determination to break up its Africa empire yesterday spread to mineral-rich Angola, the largest of Lisbon's colonies.

The Portuguese news agency, ANI, reported that groups of demonstrators "appear to have occupied" the radio station in Nova Lisboa, Angola's second largest city, and were broadcasting messages of support for Mozambique's whites. Many shops and factories were closed in Angola.

Noisy demonstations were held in Lourenco Marques and violence flared in the northern port of Beira. Troops firing their weapons into the air waded into a crowd of white demonstrators. Some hand grenades exploded, wounding at least five persons, authorities said.

In Lisbon, Prime Minister Vasco Goncalves met senior members of the armed forces movement, which engineered the April 25 army coup to discuss the situation in Mozambique, which has a population of 200,000 whites and eight million blacks.

Some irate nothers shout at Sen. Edward Kennedy as he attended a rally of white parents at Boston to protest a federal desegregation order for the city's schools.

Kennedy booed off stage at Boston anti-busing rally

BOSTON [AP] — Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass., was booed off a stage and splattered with a ripe tomato yesterday when he tried to address an angry crowd of anti-busing demonstrators.

A crowd estimated by police at 8,000 to 10,000 persons shouted insults, chanted "Impeach Kennedy" and sang "God Bless America" when Kennedy stepped to the microphone.

As Kennedy and his aides climbed down from the platform and strode briskly around the edge of the crowd, frenzied women leaped in front of him and shook their fists. At least one struck him on the shoulder.

One of two tomatoes hit people near Kennedy and splattered onto the senator as he walked quickly into the John F. Kennedy Federal Building.

Once inside, the demonstrators pounded their fists on the building's windows and smashed a 10-foot-long pane of plate glass. The building was streaked with eggs thrown by the crowd.

Kennedy, who says he favors peaceful integration, had been identified by speakers at the rally as a proponent of busing.

The gathering had been called to protest a court-ordered busing program scheduled to begin when Boston schools open on Thursday.

After leaving the crowd, Kennedy said he was disappointed that he had not been able to speak. But he said he had been subjected to worse abuse during antiwar demonstrations.

"People feel very strongly about this," he said. "They're entitled to their views."

He said he could not speak at the rally, because the plug to his microphone had been pulled.

On their way to the federal building, the marchers, most of them women and virtually all white, stepped in front of the office of U. S. District Court Judge W. Arthur Garrity and shouted, "Garrity must go."

Garrity ordered the integration plan, which calls for the busing of 18,200 Boston school children, 8,500 white and 9,700 black.

Many white parents have vowed to keep their children out of school for at least two weeks in protest. Some said they hoped this would make officials rescind the busing program.

White calls for order

BOSTON [AP] — Mayor Kevin H. White appealed to parents yesterday to keep Boston from being "polarized by race or paralyzed by fear" when schools open on Thursday.

White said in a speech carried on four Boston television stations that anyone who tries to interfere with the opening of school will be prosecuted.

"To those who would violate the order and the peace of our city, and to those who would exploit the tensions of next week and the weeks to come, jeopardizing the young and innocent, I promise swift and sure punishment," White said.

"We will pursue and prosecute any individual, white or black, male or female, young or old, who tries to interfere with any child's right to go to school."

Plane crash investigators seek to check out terrorist claim

ATHENS [UPI] — U. S. experts will check into the claim that a pro-Palestinian guerrilla on a suicide mission blew up a Trans World Airlines Boeing 707 jetliner which crashed with 88 persons aboard into the Ionian Sea Sunday, the team leader said yesterday.

Greek Transport Minister Emmanuel Kefaloyannis said rescue workers did not expect to find any survivors of the Tel Aviv to New York flight that plunged into stormy waters with one of its four engines on fire. At least three crewmen and 17 passengers were from the United States.

Edward Dreifus, head of the National Transportation Safety Board team that flew in from Washington to take over the investigation, said his experts would look into the claim by the underground Arab Nationalist Youth Organization for the Liberation of Palestine in Beirut that one of its members detonated explosives aboard the plane in a suicide mission.

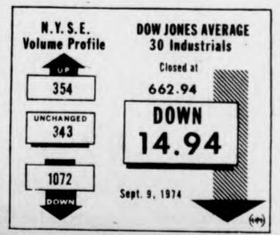
An official of the Palestinian Liberation Organization, the major Arab guerrilla group, denied Monday that any commando group it sanctions was responsible for the crash.

Dreifus said no possible cause of the crash would be overlooked.

The pilot of the plane, which was to make stops in Athens and Rome, radioed before the crash he was trying to make an emergency landing on the Greek island of Corfu with one engine on fire, an Athens flight controller said.

The Palestinian group said in anonymous calls to Beirut newspapers that a Chilean member carried explosives on his body and detonated them to kill passengers believed to be "Israeli suicide squads who were commissioned to assassinate Palestinian guerrilla leaders."

Greek authorities said a Chilean, identified as Jose Santos, 17, boarded the plane in Athens.



Carmen fades over Texas

BATON ROUGE, La. [United Press International] - Hurricane Carmen, whose 155-mile-an-hour winds killed two persons and destroyed much of Louisiana's lush sugar cane crop, yesterday decayed into a breezy rainstorm over Southeast Texas.

A spokesman for the American Sugar Cane League (ASCL) said crop losses were not as heavy as first anticipated.

"Actually, I would say you may have more than 75 per cent of the sugar cane down in the fields," said ASCL economist Charlie Hodson. "While you may have practically all the cane down, this does not mean it is all lost."

Told not to talk

Men who studied 18½ minute gap dismissed

WASHINGTON [AP] - The six experts who did the detective work on 18¼ minutes of erased White House Watergate tape have been dismissed with thanks and an admonition not to talk - for a while.

The team's six-months effort discovered the how of the erasure but not the who. The why can only be guessed at.

U.S. District Judge John J. Sirica, advising the panelists of their release, said they were under no further restrictions of silence.

Sirica will preside over that trial, expected to begin Sept. 30.

The gap was in the first tapes subpoenaed from the recorded conversations of then President Richard M. Nixon with his aides.

The experts issued a final report on June 4, saying the erasure was done by hand and included at least five and perhaps as many as nine separate erasures.

It was, one of the experts explained, as if someone had erased a portion, played it back to make sure the wipe-out was complete, and then went on to the next segment.

"This report draws no inferences about such questions as whether the erasure and buzz were made accidently or intentionally, or when, or by what person or persons," the report said.

But it said it was clear they were made on the recorder used by Nixon's personal secretary, Rose Mary Woods. Testimony at days of hearings produced evidence that Miss Woods was one of five people handling the tape. One of the other four was Nixon himself.

Miss Woods said she was transcribing the Haldeman conversation when her telephone rang. She said she took off her earphones, reached for the stop button with her right hand but hit the record-erase button instead. In the 4-5 minutes she was on the telephone, Miss Woods said, she must have kept her foot on the start pedal. She had no explanation for the other 13 minutes of erasure.

Boobytrapped pens found in Belfast

BELFAST [UPI] - The British Army warned Northern Ireland residents yesterday to be on the alert for boobytrapped ballpoint pens packed with lethal explosive charges.

An army patrol making a routine search of ahousing development in Londonderry Sunday found one of the pens on the grounds and a military spokesman said more could be around.

Part of the mechanism had been removed from the pen and replaced with a detonator rigged to go off when the button on top of the pen was pushed, the spokesman said.

"If the detonator had gone off it could have blown off several fingers," he said. "If explosives had been packed with the detonator, the blast could have blown your arm off."

There was no indication who had built the boobytrapped pen. But the spokesmen said the process involved the same technical know-how used by members of the illegal Irish Republican Army to make letter-bombs.

Authorities blame the IRA for much of the violence that has taken the lives of 1,068 persons during the five years of sectarian violence involving majority Protestants, minority Roman Catholics, and security forces.

The spokesman said munitions experts late Sunday disarmed a 150-pound bomb packed with 50 pounds of shrapnel left in a milk churn alongside a road outside Newtonhamilton, 40 miles south-west of Belfast.

Electrical wires ran from the bomb to a battery several hundred yards away in a wooded area, the spokesman said.

Nursing home burns

ST. JOSEPH, Mo. [UPI] - A flash fire in an unlicensed nursing home yesterday killed six elderly women and an 11-year-old boy, prompting officials to study the possibility of law violations by the owners.

The Shildknecht Nursing Home, a red flagstone and frame one-story structure bordering a fashionable area of north St. Joseph, was burned to the ground in a ball of flames that at times reached 75 feet in the air.

The L-shaped 15-year-old structure at the end of a tree lined lane, had been the center of some controversy in the last two years. Fire chief Cloyd Campbell said the building was actually a boarding home.

He said there was no fire warning system in the building.

"If it's a nursing home, we can go in and it has to meet our fire code. But when they go under a boarding home classification, it's one of the ratty things we've got in the state of Missouri, this boarding home thing."

China warns India

HONG KONG [UPI] - China has warned India against moves to absorb the tiny Himalyan border state of Sikkim, specialists in Chinese affairs said yesterday.

The analysists said the threat was implicit in an article in the Chinese Communist party newspaper, People's Daily, which said resistance to India in Sikkim will have "sympathy and support" of Sikkim's neighbors.

It is believed the Indian government's desire for a buffer to China was behind the move of the Indian parliament last week to adopt a constitutional amendment changing Sikkim from the status of a Indian protectorate to an "associate state" with representation in parliament.

"In the world no one can enslave a nation without punishment," the People's Daily said in an article transmitted by the New China News Agency.

Maine, N.H. conflict

CONCORD, N.H. [AP] - The New Hampshire Fishermen's Association is prepared to go before the U.S. Supreme Court to plead its case against a proposed settlement of a marine border dispute between New Hampshire and Maine, a spokesman said yesterday.

Stephen Katz, a lawyer representing the association, said the fishermen have new evidence to invalidate the proposed settlement of the dispute over 2,400 acres of lobstering waters off Portsmouth Harbor.

The executive councils in the two states gave their approval in June to the agreement that would equally divide the disputed waters between the two states.

A map drawn in 1854 by United States and United Kingdom surveyers was among the new evidence presented, which Katz said showed that New Hampshire was entitled to a larger share of the disputed waters.

We offer you the key to unprecedented calculating power.

We invite you to experience it. Come see for yourself how Hewlett-Packard's exclusive ENTER ↑ key lets you "speak" with total consistency to their pocket-sized scientific calculators.

It lets you load your data into a 4-Register Stack, so you always enter and process them the same way, no matter what your problem. It means you rarely have to re-enter data and you can see all intermediate data anytime.

It's one reason Hewlett-Packard's HP-45 is the most powerful pre-programmed pocket-sized calculator ever built and their HP-35 is the runner-up. Here are three of many others.

1. The HP-45 is pre-programmed to handle 44 arithmetic, trigonometric and logarithmic functions and data manipulations beyond (+, -, ×, ÷). The HP-35 handles 22.

2. The HP-45 stores constants in nine Addressable Memory Registers and has a "Last X" Register for error correction. The HP-35 has one Addressable Memory Register.

3. Both display 10 digits in fixed-decimal or scientific notation and automatically position the decimal point throughout a 200-decade range.

If you're looking for unprecedented calculating power for your money, by all means see and test these instruments. The HP-45 is priced at just $325; the HP-35—$225. Both are on display at our place. Come on in. And bring a stubborn problem.

Physical education dropped

Bischoff emphasized that no one will be held to a PE requirement. Although there might be an initial drop-off of enrollment in PE courses, Bischoff "strongly suspects" that the overall drop will be slight, because most students take PE courses not to fulfill a requirement, but rather to learn new skills and to keep physically fit.

Bischoff said students now have a better chance of getting into courses that were often oversubscribed when the requirement was in effect.

The two semester, two credit PE requirement at UMass was instituted during the late '60's when the four semester, no credit policy was abandoned. Bischoff explained that the priority of physical education in the education process is closely related to a nation's self image and is constantly open to revision.

Shelf-life goal of food tech

One of the primary concerns of food technology is to provide the longest practical shelf life. That is the period between manufacture of a food product and its retail purchase during which the product is safe, and its nutritional value, taste, texture, and appearance are satisfactory, according to a report just released by the Institute of Food Technologists.

Food products are susceptible to spoilage, loss of nutrients, insect infestation, changes in color, flavor or odor, and even package corrosion and leakage, so storage studies are part of each product development program. Dr. F. M. Clydesdale of UMass and IFT Regional Communicator for Massachusetts, said that the report discussed the considerations involved in determining the methods to be used in processing, packaging, storing and distributing various types of food products, to produce the longest practical shelf life.

Food products are divided into two main categories, shelf-stable and perishable (including semi-perishable), the IFT communicator said, and the conditions affecting shelf life vary from one type of product to another. For example, the main causes of deterioration in perishable foods are bacteria, molds, yeast and enzymatic breakdown, and the most important factor in maintaining quality during the time such food is in the distribution and supply system is a consistent low temperature.

The reason temperature is so important, according to the Scientific Status Summary, one of a series released by the IFT Expert Panel on Food Safety and Nutrition, is the fact that the rate of chemical reactions, including those which degrade foods, increase with increasing temperature. While the reaction rates of simple chemical reactions double as the temperature rises 10 degrees C (18 degreesF), reactions in food products can quadruple with a similar rise in storage temperature, or even increase by seven times under certain conditions. This is because the reactions involve biochemicals and enzymes, the IFT communicator explained.

We won't get fooled again

By BOB FOSTER

Summertime; its description varies from Nat King Cole's lazy, hazy, crazy days to summers of '42 and long, hot summers and even endless summers. Yet, summer always carries a special meaning for me. Summer means birthday time and another birthday means becoming a year older, supposedly a year wiser. The summer of 1974 brough a unique and sadistically pleasureful gift to my political soul. For on my birthday, Richard Nixon announced his resignation.

A better gift, I could not have received. I'm the type of retentive individual that gleefully saved the front page of the New York Times when Spiro Agnew took a similar step under similar pressure. Now, I have another page to add to my collection of fallen demagogues. At no other time in history has anyone been able to collect fallen leaders as kids collect bubble gum baseball cards! 'Tis a sad commentary upon the integrity of political power when we are forced to catch a President in a spider's web of mangled lies and tortured half-truths. The question one asks becomes "Is it the power that twists the man or the man that twists the power?" In the context of the summer past, one is forced to answer yes to only the latter of the two questions.

Summer has been neatly pronounced dead in rites of celebration near Alumni Stadium. And to most, all the Effigies of Richard of San Clemente have been burned and buried with a mood of passion similar to Summer's End. Comfort has settled upon the nation in the form of a blinding political fog. Yet, it is that same feeling of ambiguous calm that settled upon a German nation only 35 years ago amid acute recession and political paranoia.

Gerald Ford is not another Hitler. Instead, he seems to be the perfect personality for moderation, for the continuation of the status quo. Yet America has a dangerous habit of labeling politicians as messiahs before digging below the superficial politicing. In 1972, Richard Nixon was the messiah of 60 per cent of the nation. Perhaps the "Silent Majority" was voting against George McGovern and his ideals; perhaps not. Analysis of that election varies from observer to observer. One must be wary of an appointed President who suddenly has decided to run in 1976 for an office that has already been presented to him upon a platter of gold with the blessings of the legislative and judicial branches. The appointment process is always dangerous. Mandate and accountability do not exist in the vocabulary of the appointed individual. Accountability to oneself is the only protection granted to us by such a leader.

Thus, we've entered a new era of appointive politics. We're told that the economic Horatio Alger story is no longer realistic in our tooth and nail business system. Indeed, such a statement is true. Yet a new form of the same story has taken over, the political Horatio Alger. The rags of political riches President without so much as a heated election to conted with has become an accepted act. Desperation breeds troubled decisions nd desperation bred this President. Though trial by fire is outdated as a political method, it has its merits when compared to a "rise through the ranks" appointee.

When Alexander Haig is offered as an appointee for the NATO command, question the nomination. When amnesty is offered but only under conditional circumstances, ask yourself why not total amnesty. When Nelson Rockefeller becomes Vice President, study him carefully. Examine his financial support. Don't be lulled to sleep by a Presidential opiate of domestic tranquilty and "peach-keen" news releases. Continue to "keep 'em honest!"

Aid for the handicapped

To the Editor:

As an alumna of the graduate school of the University of Mass., I was most pleased to learn of the establishment of an office of handicapped student affairs, staffed by Ms. Peggy Stevens. However, I am disturbed by something I discovered recently regarding the availability of the campus to handicapped students.

I had followed, with an interested eye, the improvements in the campus buildings where adaptation to the handicapped is concerned. I know it is a time consuming operation to convert existing facilities but recently the conversion seems to have slowed for no apparent reason.

I was interested, also, in the fine efforts of the University to do something extra for handicapped students in need of transportation on the campus by building a special vehicle for that purpose. Several people donated a great deal of time and effort to the "cart project" and the resulting prototype was something each one could be proud of. A search for funds and backing was conducted so that more could be produced after the "bugs" were worked out of the original. Suddenly it seems the project has been scrapped.

That the University could allow this to happen is inconceivable to me. At the very time when the state is preparing more and more handicapped students for college, the University seems to have slammed the door in their faces by saying, "You can come here but if you can't get around on foot, better think again about coming". The forward position toward aiding the handicapped taken in the recent past by the promise of more of these especially designed carts has been abandoned apparently. As an alumna of this university, I would like an explanation for this action.

Surely the reason cannot be that such carts are not needed on the campus. Nor can it be that no handicapped students are applying for entrance to the University. I believe funding is not the reason either as I know last year's class gift was specifically designated to help in adapting the campus for the handicapped. There is, in my mind, no logical reason for abandonment of this cart project except a desire to exclude from the university population anyone who might require this individualizable type of transportation to get around the campus.

This kind of subtle discrimination cannot really be tolerated in a public university in 1974. It is about time the "cart project" be reconsidered so that the University of Massachusetts can continue its forward position in aiding handicapped students to obtain a college degree.

Trust in Ford

To the Editor:

I would like to at this time publicly express my admiration and respect for our president, Gerald Ford. Since his inaugural speech to his recent decision to pardon former President Nixon he has impressed me as a president who has the courage and the ability to get this country back to the principles on which it was founded.

This coutnry was founded on a deep trust in God. In the Declaration of Independance who was Jefferson referring to that gave us our rights to life, liberty, and he pursuit of happiness? It was the great Creator, God. It is my belief that what has brought this coutnry to national shame is not the alleged crimes Mr. Nixon may have committed; it is the loss of trust in God. What is printed on all our money? In God We Trust. In our pledge of allegiance we say that we are one nation, under God, indivisable. America has become a nation very divisable simply because it does not trust in Him.

The forgiveness that President Ford has given to Nixon is very much in line with what God would have us do for each other. The personal ordeal Nixon has gone through for the past year is punishment enough for the crime he may have committed. God would have us forgive one another just as he has forgiven us. Therefore I am proud of President Ford for the courage it took to make such a decision. God bless our President.

Cotton credit

To the Editor:

I am writing to you to express my surprise and bewilderment at the almost total lack of coverage given to the James Cotton Band in your article on last Thursday's stadium concert. My surprise stems from the fact that first, the whole article was devoted to a band whose skill is far below the caliber of the Cotton band and secondly that the article ended before there was any description of the Cotton band's set. I think it fair to mention that the style and sound of the Beatles, which Liverpool so cleverly copied, has its deepest roots in American Black music, especially the type of music the Cotton band plays, that is, the blues. I think it is also reasonable to question whether the Beatles (much less Liverpool) would ever be around if it weren't for bands like the Cotton band, which incidentally have been around for years before the Beatles were ever known. Why no mention of the James Cotton band then? I didn't notice that Liverpool had the crowd up on its feet and dancing like the Cotton band did. Please, Collegian, credit where credit is due. This type of reportage can only lend credence to the accusations of racist overtones to what otherwise is a fine daily newspaper.

Eibel— —off base

To the Editor:

Dave Eibel's "report" on Evel Kneivel's canyon jump is, at best, a study in ignorance and useless for any purpose beyond training puppies. He seems horrified that Evel should have better than a fifty per cent chance of success. What a crime! God forbid he should disappoint us all by surviving! He even had a parachute-what a cheat! So what if Jules Bergman would not even guess at the chances for a safe jump. Never mind the fact that the rocket was designed to hit speeds in excess of 750 MPH in only five seconds. Ignore the fact that Evel could never have gotten out of the craft in time to use his reserve canopy. So what if the only "landing gear" the craft had was a parachute and a pogo stick which would topple the craft over, killing Kneivel. Ignore his wife and children, Evel should have splattered himself on the canyon wall to give us all a "spectacle."

Better yet, ignore Eibel, who is a hoax as a sportswriter. Go back to pulling the legs off ants, Dave. I am sure you are more skilled at that.

Ford unpardonable

To the Editor:

The nightmare that began in 1968 and unfortunately-or should I say successfully was made to appear dormant in August 1974 has reached out and touched us with the cold and thought rotting process of nixonian last laughs as it always will if some measure is not taken to awaken us from the haze these monsters wish to lead us.

Anyone who accepts the pardon of Richard Nixon is asking for continual murder of true constitutional law, leaving only the dangerously ridiculous manipulative devices such as the one Ford used to, (I shudder at the thought of typing this,) pardon Nixon. This should be the case to wake us to the realization that many times men can refer to some rule in the constitution and because it exists in this document, they can reasonably assume most people will apply this logic: "Well if it's in the constitution..."

Clearly this is insane. The constitution is no sacred combination of some divine text. On the contrary, it is the work of fallible men and should be given constant scanning literally. Some of the "founders", those whose inclinations were not aristocratic as many were, would step forward with the "pinkoes" and condemn many of the clearly criminal attachments which have sprung into the law like leads in a swiss cheese boat over the past two hundred years of our history. Of course it does not take a dead patriot to see the deception and find the real origin for these laws loopholes and other carefully worded sanitized shit.

It appears that now that the King Rat has, at least for the time being and hopefully not forever, been let off many people are going to raise their voices in a chorus of: "It is injustice we must free the Rat's subordinates from their (plushly) (well padded) cells." Many may tend to agree and in my opinion that is INJUSTICE. These were men spewing their personal brand of democracy over the real one which has had a long history of trying to keep its head above the political maelstroms of the watergate's ancestors. Yes, these men were subordinate's by titles but they clearly danced the dance of pigs with the rancid pearl himself, Richard Mudhouse Nixon. We must not expect bitter vengeance but only the allowance for law to take its unfettered course so that the American people are not inadvertently pulling the strings of the real puppet masters they had been tricked into believing were public servants.

Facing the harsh realities

"Rufus," I said as I poked at my 99 cent Hatch special, "you're not looking well. What's the matter? Didn't you get any of the courses you signed up for?"

"It's not that," Rufus replied. "I did get one of the discussion sections I pre-registered for, which is better than I did last semester. Of course, they switched the class time, so now it meets Monday, Wednesday, and Friday at 8 a.m., but you can't expect everything..."

"Well, that's not bad," I conceded. "Now you only have to hunt for four courses; that couldn't take more than a few weeks..."

"It's not my courses I'm worried about," said Rufus. "Everyone knows that should be the last thing on anyone's mind. I mean, could you imagine what this place would be like if all we had to worry about was academics? Christ, they'd have to change the name to UMass Junior College..."

"I know what you mean," I said.

"It's those other things that really get me down," said Rufus.

"Like?"

"Like parking..."

"Say no more," I said, raising both hands in protest. "You're talking to a man who paid over $470 in tickets and towing. In one semester, no less."

"It's not so much that I object to paying $5 to park in East Kalamazoo; it's waiting in line to get that damned sticker. Me and Benjie were out there for 72 hours straight, a stunt I haven't pulled since the Beatles played Shea Stadium. We took turns slapping each other's faces to stay awake. You should have seen the mob..."

"Yeah," I reminisced, "those Beatles sure were something..."

"No, no, no. Not the mob at Shea Stadium. The mob to get parking stickers. Over 3000 people waiting to be told that the computer broke down and to come back in two weeks."

"You're kidding," I exclaimed.

"That's what I said," said Rufus.

"So what did you do?" I asked.

"So what could I do? I drove over to the Bluewall to drink and forget."

"But if you drove over," I reminded him, "you must have had to park your car somewhere..."

"Well, I spotted a campus cop xeroxing parking tickets, and I asked him where I could find a safe place to park."

"And what did he say?"

"He didn't say a thing. He just showed me a map of Greenfield, Mass. So after I hitched back from Greenfield, I went to the Bluewall."

"That's always a good place to hide from the harsh realities of UMass," I said.

"If, that is, you get in."

"You mean they wouldn't let you in?"

Rufus shook his head. "No TOC card, no drinky. That's what the jock at the door said. So I went to the other place on campus where people go with the one goal in mind of puking their guts up..."

"The dining commons," I said with a knowing smile.

"The dining commons," he repeated. "You should see the posters they have now. Food Ecology. It's the coming thing."

"Food Ecology?" I asked.

"Well, you know what a nut I am for fads," said Rufus. "So I did what any right-thinking, upstanding young UMie would do...I recycled my meal."

"You barfed your guts up?"

"I barfed my guts up."

"Jeeez, Rufus," I said, "your mind and body sure are taking a whipping this week. So early in the semester yet. Tell me, what happened after dinner?"

"Well, I had to wash my clothes, of course, so as not to offend the fools on my corrider. You know how those jocks feel about puke-stained clothes..."

"Don't tell me the washing machines were broken again?"

"How did you know?" Rufus asked surprisedly.

"Just a feeling," I said. "So what did you do?"

"I called my mother to see if she could wash my clothes this weekend. I figure I could just hang them out the window till then."

"A weekend at home should do you good, Rufus."

"I'm not going home," said Rufus.

"How come?"

"My mother. When I called her, she said I should do my own laundry. She told me it's about time I grew up and started taking care of things on my own. She said she thought it would be better if I was a little more responsible and...."

"And started facing the harsh realities?"

Rufus sighed. "And started facing the harsh realities..."

Full, free and absolute

A slap in the face

By ANTHONY BARNES

"Ford has a better idea". Remember that one? When the ad men at Ford Motor Co. created that slogan they certainly weren't thinking about Gerald Ford. This is one Ford who's actions of late have this writer wondering about the possibilities of a lemon in the White House.

"A free full and absolute pardon for any criminal conduct during the period from January 20, 1969 until August 8, 1974." That's what Ford has given Nixon, a full and absolute pardon. But what Ford has given us, the American people is a "full and absolute" slap in the face.

He has slapped the right-wingers who believed (or still believe) that this is the land of liberty and justice for all. He has slapped the left-wingers who were out in the streets during the Nixon years tasting liberty and justice via the "law and order stick" or in some cases, via the barrel of a policeman's or National Guardsmen's gun. he has slapped Daniel Ellsberg and his psychiatrist directly in the face with his decision, he has slapped Muskie, he has slapped the Democratic Party, he has slapped the men in the Nixon Administration who are in jail, but most depressing of all he has slapped all the many thousands of people who are in jail for victimless crimes cleanly and fully across the face. These people didn't have "dirty tricks" squads, it wasn't in their "game plan" to bug offices of people who were against them, they didn't compile "enemies list" and they didn't pay "hush money" to keep themselves out of jail.

All the talk of our "great democracy" in action that was spoken when Nixon was forced to resign last August must now come to a halt with Ford's decision.

One thing that puzzles this writer is the lack of student reaction to the decision. Is it that the majority of students agree with Ford's decision, or is it that apathy has finally taken us over.

One of Ford's possible terms for amnesty for draft evaders is re-stating their allegiance to America. In this writer's opinion that is modern day hypocrisy in action. To declare your allegiance to this country would be acknowledging your belief in the processes and actions undertaken by those who run this country, and actions of Ford are contradictory to the pledge of allegiance who's last few words are, "liberty and justice for all."

Yes friends, Ford has a better idea; a full pardon for Nixon is a slap in the face for us all.

If in the future anyone tells you that this is the land of equal justice for all, where justice grinds fine and where justice is blind, slap him/ her in the face and tell him/ her that that was one of Ford's better ideas.

Lovejoy motion turned down

Exculpatory evidence is state evidence that tends to prove the defendant's innocence.

These denials indicate that Judge Smith intends to conduct the trial on a narrow, strictly legal basis, and that political arguments concerning nuclear power plants will therefore be ruled inadmissible.

At one point, he asked rhetorically, "Does any person have the right to break the law to perpetuate a higher purpose? Does the end justify the means?"

Lovejoy answered, "Yes... if one's willing to accept the consequences of his act."

Much of yesterday's hearing centered upon the words "willful" and "malicious" in the wording of the offense charged. If the state fails to prove either willfulness or maliciousness on Lovejoy's part, the case will be dismissed.

Last February Lovejoy accepted responsibility for downing the top 360 feet of the 500 foot meteorological tower. Since that time he has planned to use his trial to discuss the dangers of nuclear power plants. He still plans to have sympathetic nuclear experts testify in his defense.

Judge Smith granted another Lovejoy motion which requested that the court view the site of the tower and the proposed nuclear power plant.

Atkins opposes Collins

William C. Atkins

William C. Atkins, one candidate in today's primary, faces a special problem. He needs at least 150 votes to get on the November ballot because he failed to file before Sept. 10.

Atkins, a Republican candidate for state representative against Democratic incumbent James Collins of Amherst kicked off his candidacy two weeks ago by saying Boston politicians are unresponsive to the western part of the state.

In his campaign statement, the Republican former Amherst-Pelham Regional School Committeeperson said he has lived in the Amherst area for 57 years.

"Common sense must return to Beacon Hill," Atkins said. "The legislature must carefully evaluate the progress and problems of the University of Massachusetts at Boston."

The GOP hopeful said since Hampshire County represents only 1 percent of registered Massachusetts voters, "our representatives must work longer and harder to obtain significant achievements.

Beating the freshman blahs

By Ann McNamara,
Staff Writer

The first few weeks of school are upon us, as most upper classmen can tell by the lines of freshmen at the infirmary. It happens every year when tearful parents drop off the "too scared to be tearful" freshman at his or her dorm. After almost a year of preparation, the freshman is ready for his first encounter with college, usually all of his work is forgotten along with his old high school jacket. For you see, not even that old jacket is going to protect him from the throes of freshmanitis.

Freshmanitis usually runs its course in two or three weeks, but severe cases last up to a full month. The symptoms are easily recognizable: The victim will usually steer clear of all social contact. He or she finds it difficult to eat, as food sort of sticks in their throat. The severe cases may find themselves a bit queasy or nauseous.

There is only one sure cure for this malady and the treatment should begin immediately. First, as the old song goes, "Don't stay sitting alone in your room". The freshman must go out and meet people.—Take a walk down his hall and say hi to his neighbor, he or she might be a freshman. Visit friends from home - they're not only good company, they can probably introduce you to friends they have made.

Go to parties or the Blue Wall and the Hatch. You are sure to meet people there. Sit in the Campus Center and just peoplewatch. UMies are a fascinating species to watch. If all else fails take a walk to the infirmary - you're sure to find a freshman around there somewhere.

Remember, UMies may seem strange at first, but they can be friendly. All started in the same position, and each one tries to make it a little easier for the next freshman who enters. UMass is more than a bunch of names, numbers, and courses. It's people meeting people, the development of lifelong friendships, and the development of everyone as an individual. It all starts as a freshman.

But not if you sit in your room and vegetate. Get up, get out, and give yourself a chance to grow.

Mrs. Ford sure her kids tried pot

United Press International

BIRMINGHAM, Ala. — First Lady Betty Ford says she is certain her four children have experimented with marijuana and suggested she might favor softening some harsh marijuana laws on the books of some states.

Speaking to reporters after a tour of St. Vincent's Hospital here last Saturday, the President's wife was asked her views on marijuana.

"I know there is such a thing," she said. "Fortunately I haven't had to have any. As far as I know we've never had it in our house."

Asked whether her children might have tried pot, Mrs. Ford replied, "Oh I'm sure. Children try everything, don't they? But they definitely don't like it, and it isn't used."

Mrs. Ford, who is in Birmingham for a weekend of activities honoring her as one of America's "ledendary" women, refused comment on the question of legalization of marijuana. When asked whether she would favor softening of the pot laws, however, Mrs. Ford said, "I think that is a possibility."

One reporter, noting that Alabama has been a stronghold of opposition to the Equal Rights Amendment for Women, asked what she would tell the state's citizens in pushing for passage of the ERA.

She replied: "I believe that every woman has a place in this world and I believe that whether you are a housewife, a mother, or whether you want to go into a business....this is your choice, and every woman should have her choice. In that choice I think they should be considered equal, and that's what it's all about."

Mrs. Ford, who toured St. Vincent's Hospital Saturday morning and put on a sterile gown to visit babies in the nursery, also spoke again on the issue of abortion.

White House spokesmen earlier this week had said Mrs. Ford favored therapeutic abortion in cases of rape or incest, or for the physical or mental well being of the mother.

She told reporters in Birmingham, however, that she believes the issue has been dealt with sufficiently by the Supreme Court, which, in effect, legalized abortion on demand during the first 24 weeks of pregnancy.

"The Supreme Court made a ruling, and the Supreme Court is the law of our land, and as long as that is the law of our land I will abide by it," Mrs. Ford said.

BERNSTEIN CANCELS

The Washington Post has assigned Carl Bernstein to report on President Jerry Ford's Sunday "bombshell." The Pulitzer Prize winner was forced, therefore, to cancel his appearance here tonight.

Si Hersh, who also holds a Pulitzer Prize, will speak in his place. Hersh works in the Washington bureau of the New York Times.

Hersh is probably best known for uncovering the My Lai massacre story, for which he won the Pulitzer.

Hersh is a highly respected investigative journalist. Newsweek Magazine calls him a "scoop artist," while the Washington Post says he is "awesome."

Hersh has also covered the Watergate Story and Paris Peace Talks.

The lecture will take place at 8 p.m. tonight in the Campus Center Auditorium. Following the lecture, Hersh will conduct what the Distinguished Visitors Program is calling a "midnight seminar" on Chile.

WMUA
STATION MEETING

THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 12th

8 p.m. 105 C.C.

All old members and any new people interested in radio should attend.

ATTENTION COLLEGIAN STAFFERS

A one hour general staff meeting is scheduled for Thursday at 8 p.m. in Campus Center room 904- 909.

Among items to be considered:

- — election of new editor-in-chief. Nominations accepted in writing through Wednesday night. Give to Bill Densmore.
- — introduction of Charlie Berube, business advisor; two part-time news advisors — Chuck Kidd and Chris Kertesz.
- — Explanation of beat reporting system and tentative assignments — by Mike Kneeland.
- — The Life-Style section and what you can do for it — by Sherm Boyson.
- — Probable night staff reorganization — by Bill Densmore
- — Suggestions for time of staff party. We'll all have to contribute money and food if we're going to have it.

Also, Two Proposed Constitutional Changes

- — Shall the editorial board election be held in December of each year? Vote yes or no. Simple majority carries.
- — Shall Collegian constitutional amendments and editorial board elections be accomplished by either of two methods — secret balloting over a period of several days after due notification of question; or, vote tally of staff members assembled as a body at a particular time. Vote yes or not. Presently we must have a meeting to make changes or have elections.

If your name does not appear below and you wish to vote in the election and on the constitution changes, see Bill Densmore soon.

Future of campus task force meets

assigning available staff and funding. "If you have no more growth, where do the resources come from?" he asks.

There is a sentiment within the committee that the '70s is a decade of general scarcity. Bischoff says administrators and teachers in Amherst must accept the mood of the times and of the state legislature.

The task force has met three times. Preparation of a statement of general goals for the campus is the first half of the group's charge. There are doubts that a membership of such diversity can agree on such a statement. Sharp conflicts about the extent to which the task force should then apply the statement of goals to evaluation of individual academic programs and departments are clear.

Botany Prof. Otto L. Stein says: "Without a full-time staff the study is very limited. I'm not sure it's going to accomplish anything. With such a diversity of interests I don't foresee any great decisions."

Stein, too, talks about allocation of available resources. "The growth years are over, now we've got a closed system-so they call task forces and committees together," he says.

Stein says: "It's the administration that needs to tighten its belt, not the faculty. The administration has done nothing in terms of resource allocation."

Barbara T. Stack, a doctoral student in the Department of Linguistics and an original student member of the task force, says: "There's a prevailing sentiment of suspicion about the committee...whether we're just a front for further administration decision-making."

She lists the recommendation of optimal department sizes and the ratio of undergraduate to graduate students as the most important items before the task force. Stack "fears issues of importance to women won't be represented." There are two other women on the task force.

Fletcher represents the rules committee of the faculty senate. He downplays the fear that the task force will be used by top UMass officials in Amherst and Boston to legitimize unilateral decisions.

"I am on the committee to see that decisions are put in the proper context of governance responsibility," Fletcher says, referring to guidelines guaranteeing open review procedures before major changes are made in academic programs.

Bischoff underlines the importance of the first phase philosophical work of the task force: "The decision-making regarding specific programs will be based on the statement of goals. Just because a program is good doesn't mean it should stay, just because it is bad doesn't mean it should go."

Fletcher rejects the spectre of drastic shake-ups within the academic community of UMass-Amherst. He predicts "perhaps elimination of one or two programs, but not wholesale shifting."

At the same time, Fletcher believes there are two basic conflicts the task force membership will face: the interests of professional vs. liberal arts programs and the importance of academic quantity vs. quality. He concurs with Bischoff's rejection of judgements of "good" and "bad" as the basis for decisions.

The president of the undergraduate student government association, Richard Savini, says "these ideas are going to be forced because of the economic considerations." Savini expects major academic changes within several years.

He says undergraduates are concerned over the rhetoric course requirement and the foreign language requirement. He points out that the requirement of two semesters of a physical education course has now been eliminated.

Chamber music set for next Sunday

A program of chamber music will be presented as the first in the Faculty Recital Series offered by the University of Massachusetts Department of Music at 8 p.m. Sunday, Sept. 15, in Bowker Auditorium.

Oboist Charles Lehrer of the University faculty will be the featured performer. Assisting Dr. Lehrer from the music department will be flautist Joanne Tanner, bassoonists Linda Smith and Janet Lyford, and on keyboard instruments Paula Pardee.

The program includes Francis Poulenc's Trio for Oboe, Bassoon and Piano, Sonata I of J.S. Bach and Sonata IV by Johann Zelenka. Also Hindemith's Sonata for Oboe and Piano and the Dowland "Lachrimai," which are instrumental settings based upon his well known songs "Flow Sweet Teares" and "Can She Excuse My Wrongs."

The recital is open to the public without charge.

Course Listings

Additional history courses have been announced for the Fall semester: History 200-500 Ancient History to 500 B.C., History 385, Special Problems, and History 750 Research Seminar in History. Some changes in meeting times and meeting places are: Hist. 115, TTh 11:15-12:30 Hert. 206, and Hist. 750c, Th 4:00-6:30 p.m., Hert. 546. To sign up for any of these courses, go to the History Dept. Herter Hall.

The Student Center for Educational Research (S.C.E.R.), in cooperation with Orchard Hill, Project 10 and Southwest Residential Colleges, is sponsoring a 3 credit course -- The Student Interest Research Seminar.

Using techniques from the Social Sciences, Investigative Journalism and Public Interest Research, the course will focus on various aspects of the University of Massachusetts--uncovering information which can be used for published documents, in student organizing or for reform proposals.

Specific topics will be agreed upon by the class and the instructor, but the studies will include a continuation of last semester's counseling study and a look into the university residence hall policies.

Those interested should contact the instructor, Larry Magid, prior to Wednesday, September 10th. Call 545-0341 or drop by Room 432 Student Union and day between 1:00 and 3:00. The course will meet Tuesdays and Thursdays from 1:00 to 2:15 (place to be announced; beginning Thursday, September 12th.

The Southwest Women's Center is offering five 3 credit courses in the fall semester as part of the Women's Studies curriculum. A number of these courses still have room for interested students.

The courses listed are: Women, American Politics and Capitalist Society, Economic History of Women (1840-WWII), Women in the World of Work, Women in Action: Practicum in Southwest Women's Center, and Women in Africa.

For more information or registration, contact the Southwest Women's Center, Mackimmie House.

Driver Training

The Student Senate Transit Service is looking for candidates for the Fall training program. These people will be trained to drive buses and prepared for taking the Registry of Motor Vehicles Class II license road test. The training will be done in hourly segments between 9:00 A.M. and 3:00 P.M. on weekends. Interested parties should also meet the following qualifications:

1. UMass student
2. 18 years of age or older
3. a licensed driver with at least one year's driving experience
4. physically capable of driving class II size vehicles

The average student requires about 15-20 hours of training before he-she becomes proficient with a bus. If you have 15 hours to spare and can afford the $5 registration fees, why not learn to drive a bus? Those who get their licenses will be considered for employment with the University bus service immediately. For information call Jeff McCormick or Bob Brulotte, 5-0056 or 5-2086.

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

By Stella Wilder

VIRGO: (Aug. 23-Sept. 7) — Business arrangements can be made well ahead of time. Keep to your own method of operation at this time; another's can wait its turn. (Sept. 8-Sept. 22) — Stick to a schedule that has proven feasible in the past. To try new ways and means at this time could mean to introduce a definite sour note.

LIBRA: (Sept. 23-Oct. 7) — Keep appointments even though you may have to put yourself out considerably to do so. There is no point turning another against you. (Oct. 8-Oct. 22) — Concentrate on those activities which require you to use your mental capacities to the utmost. Don't be persuaded into taking the easy way out.

SCORPIO: (Oct. 23-Nov. 7) — If your are wise, you will meet whatever events occur when they occur. To put off your responsibilities is to forfeit success. (Nov. 8-Nov. 21) — Although problems on the home front may not have financial gain as an incentive to their solution, they must not be neglected. Tackle them at once!

SAGITTARIUS: (Nov. 22-Dec. 7) — This is not the "take it easy" week you may have expected. Do what you can to adjust to situations and circumstances that arise. (Dec. 8-Dec. 21) — Make no mistakes as to what issues are involved in your success this week. There is very little margin for error built into present events.

CAPRICORN: (Dec. 22-Jan. 5) — Conserve your energies. Make an effort to remain calm, to swim easily and laxily with the prevailing current. Fight against nothing. (Jan. 6-Jan. 19) — Although you have imagination and creativity, you would do well to keep both under absolute control this week. Remain calm.

AQUARIUS: (Jan. 20-Feb. 3) — Problems of employment may make it difficult for you to meet another's demand this week. Do what you can and then don't worry! (Feb. 4-Feb. 18) — You would do well to hold your enthusiasms in check all through the week. Approach your work affirmatively, but don't go overboard with eagerness.

PISCES: (Feb. 19-March 5) — If you would undertake a conciliatory course of action, make sure that those with whom relations are strained and are ready and willing. (March 6-March 20) — You could make an error of identification early in the week that would cause you regrets for many weeks to come.

ARIES: (March 21-April 4) — The future success or failure of this week's activities depends upon your willingness to adapt to present circumstances. Bend with the wind. (April 5-April 19) — Personal contacts will not be as helpful this week as you had hoped. Trust, instead, to your ability to help yourself progress.

TAURUS: (April 20-May 5) — You should be able to get a clear picture of your immediate future this week. Take care not to underestimate your ability to adapt to ills. (May 6-May 20) — A business association may cause you considerable trouble this week. Don't be alarmed if you are unable to change things to suit yourself.

GEMINI: (May 21-June 6) — Make decisions wisely, but don't expect everything you decide on to turn out your way. Develop old plans into new methods of operation. (June 7-June 20) — Make all plans in accordance with what you know from past experience you are capable of accomplishing.

CANCER: (June 21-July 7) — A new professional project could prove more than you expected where hours and labor are concerned. Find relief through the attainment of new knowledge. (July 8-July 22) — Depend upon your own knowledge and your own ability to act. If you depend upon others, you may be in for genuine disappointment.

LEO: (July 23-Aug. 7) — Keep financial issues from boiling over at this time. You would do well to ask for professional help early in the week.

Trevino bests player in W-Series playoff

By BOB GREEN

AKRON, Ohio [AP] — Lee Trevino finally conquered the course he said he couldn't play and won a two-day sudden-death playoff for the $50,000 first prize in the World Series of Golf.

He beat South African Gary Player with a routine par on the seventh extra hole — and the second of the day — Monday on the long, troublesome, 7,180-yard Firestone Country Club course.

It's a layout that Trevino had avoided as much as possible in the past, saying it was too long for him.

"My game has turned around," Trevino said Monday. 'I'm hitting the long irons better now than I ever have in my life.

"I can take a two-iron, three-iron or four-iron out of the bag and not have to try to figure out a way to hit it high and fade it. I have confidence. I get the club in my hand and I know I can do what I want to do.

"I've never been able to do that before.

"I now feel like I can play any course."

It was Trevino's first victory in four starts — he had finished last two times — in this elite event that brings together only the winners of the world's major titles.

PGA champion Trevino and Player, the British Open and Masters winner, finished the regulation 36 holes Sunday with scores of 139, one-under-par.

Canadian Open champion Bobby Nichols, the host pro at Firestone, had a 143 total and U. S. Open king Hale Irwin had 148.

Player, who once led by six strokes in regulation play, and Trevino, went back to the 14th hole for the playoff that produced five holes of high drama — but no winner — before darkness settled in and the playoff was extended to Monday.

They began on the 14th hole, a 410-yard par four. Player drove the fairway and Trevino got his drive in the rough. His second was on the green, but some 40 feet away. Player put his approach only 10-12 feet from the flag.

"I thought I was dead," Trevino said. "I didn't think I had a chance. I knew Gary had a pretty easy putt. I was just trying to get down in two.

"If I said I was trying to make the putt I'd be lying. I really thought I left it three, four feet short but it kept going and kept going and kept going and fell in the left side of the hole."

It was a birdie. But Player made his and they still were tied.

On the 230-yard, par-three 15th, Trevino hit a one-iron 3 feet behind the flag and Player put his in a bunker on the left. Gary came out about 15 feet short and Trevino got down in two. Player missed his putt and it was over.

Player collected $15,000 for second.

Cvellar named AL Star of the week

NEW YORK [UPI] - Mike Cuellar, winner of two 1-0 games for the Baltimore Orioles last week, was selected Monday as the American League's "Star of the Week."

The 37-year-old lefthander allowed Boston only two hits in the second game of a Labor Day doubleheader and then limited Cleveland to five hits in the second game of a doubleheader last Friday, raising his season record to 18-10.

Cuellar's back-to-back shutouts helped Baltimore tie an American league record of five consecutive shutouts.

Cross Country team seeks new members

By MDC Staff

The women's cross-country club seeks new members from any class, grads or under-grads, for this fall season. The R.S.O. club is affiliated with the local A.A.U. club the Sugarloaf Mt. A.C. and will compete in open meets in New England.

The first major meet of the season will take place here in Amherst on Sept. 28th. It will be an open competition against other clubs in Massachusetts. About fifty runners are expected in this yearly Sugarloaf Open cross-country meet which will include a high school girls race and a men's six mile as well as the three mile open women's event.

The season will consist of several open meets building toward the New England Championship November 9th here in Amherst again and the Regional championships November 17th on Long Island. The Nationals this year will be held in Kettering Ohio November 30th and will see a team of at least 5 women from UMass.

Four returning veterans will provide the nucleus for this year's team. Charlotte Lettis won the New England's and Regionals last year and finished 16th in the Nation, Marianne Wilcox placed 3rd in the New England indoor half mile, and Marion Kulick held the New England 440 hurdle mark, Junior Karen Fiske is the other returning veteran.

This weekend the four ran in the annual Granby 4-mile women's roadrace. Lettis won the race with a course record time while Wilcox ran tenth and Kulick 11th. Fiske finished the race with her best time over four miles.

A meeting of the whole team will plan training and introduce new members Wednesday evening at 7:30 in Room 177 of the campus center. Any curious and willing women of any class including graduates and faculty are invited.

Any men, graduate students or faculty, may join the Sugarloaf male section to compete in cross-country races in New England this fall.

UMass Football luncheons kick-off tomorrow

Coach Dick MacPherson will kickoff the weekly University of Massachusetts football luncheons on Wednesday, September 11 (This Wed.) at 12:05 p.m., in the Newman Center at the University of Massachusetts with an in-depth-report on Villanova—the Minutemen's gridiron opponent this weekend at Villanova, Pa. The weekly luncheons (which will be held from Sept. 11 thru Nov. 27,) are open to the general public and special parking has been arranged for those attending. Door prizes, movie highlights of every game, and the appearance of team players feature the popular luncheons and Bob Foote, President of the UMass Gridiron Club, will emcee the luncheons this year....

It's runners vs. cyclists at Holyoke

By MDC Staff

Not since John Henry died with a hammer in his hand has there been such a classic confrontation between man and machine. This time instead of a steam drill against a hammer the struggle will be feet against bicycles.

The Runners of the Sugarloaf Mt. A.C. will meet the cyclists of the Valley Cycle Club today on the road up to Skinner Park on Mt. Holyoke on the west end of the Holyoke range at 6:00.

In an earlier race up Mt. Sugarloaf the bicycles defeated the runners soundly. That first race ran as a time trial with one runner and one cyclist starting together at one minute intervals. Runners soon found themselves running alone which made for a rather ardous grind. This time the runners and bicyclists will start in two masses with a certain time interval between them. This should produce a much more thrilling race.

The runners claimed the Sugarloaf Mt. wasn't steep enough and no hill in the area with pavement is steep enough. The cyclists won't race on dirt and rocks.

Any cyclists or runners are invited to roll or run along.

Connors, King smash Aussies at Forest Hills

By WILL GRIMSLEY

FOREST HILLS, N. Y. [AP] — "I was so high, I felt like I was on cloud nine - I didn't know when I might come down," said Jimmy Connors.

"I had to get bahoova in gear - I was afraid until the last point I might blow it," said Billie Jean King.

So, the mop-haired court-killer from Belleville, Ill., and the gritty old lady from Hilton Head, S. C., returned American tennis supremacy to home base Monday with singles victories in the U. S. Open Tennis Championships.

The 22-year-old Connors - bold as a bandit and as assassin with a steel racquet in his hand - swept past the great Ken Rosewall of Australia in 68 minutes of devastating shot-making, 6-1, 6-0, 6-1.

Then, the 30-year-old Ms. King, down a set at one stage and trailing 3-0 in the final set, gritted her teeth and hammered out a 3-6, 6-3, 7-5 triumph over the unpredictable Evonne Goolagong of Australia.

Miss Goolagong, daughter of an aboriginal sheepherder, had upset top-seeded Chris Evert in a stirring semifinal and had been favored by most observers to take the measure of Mrs. King, who in recent months has become more deeply involved in publishing and women's lib interests.

However, the graceful lady from Down Under, lapsed into too many losses of concentration and allowed the highly competitive American to fight her way out of trouble. Billie Jean previously won in 1967, 1971 and 1972.

The new champions, each of whom received $$22,500 cash prizes plus new automobiles and other loot, succeed a pair of Australians - Margaret Smith Court, now retired while expecting a second child, and John Newcombe, who had been beaten by Rosewall in the semi-finals.

The American titles have been Australian property for much of the last two decades. Australians have won the men's title 13 times since 1956. Mrs. Court had won five of the last eight women's championships.

Connors dazed a gallery of a sellout crowd of more than 15,000 with his whirlwind assault against one of the game's classic stroke-makers and all-time great players.

He never lost a service and permitted the pint-sized Australian, whom he previously had beaten in straight sets at Wimbledon, only two widely separated games - the fifth game of the opening set and the fourth game of the third set, both on the Australian's service.

Rosewall himself became so discouraged near the end that his head dropped, his shoulders sagged and he just shook his head in disbelief as Connors drilled shot after shot into the corners and cross court placements.

"Never since I started the international tour 22 years ago has anyone beaten me so badly," Rosewall said. "He kept the pressure on me all day. He hit the ball early and on the rise and never gave me a chance to get into the match."

Mann nears point record

DETROIT [UPI] — Errol Mann only needs 79 more points to become the leading scorer in the history of the Detroit Lions.

He hopes the National Football League team gets a whole lot of touchdowns this season. Because he knows he won't get these 79 points three at a time.

"They definitely changed it," the Lions' placekicker said emphatically but with a hearty laugh.

"I think maybe a little bit of a change was in order," Mann said of the NFL rule that puts missed field goals come out to the line of scrimmage instead of to the defending team's 20 yard line. "But I think maybe they changed it more than they should have.

"I believe they overreacted a little bit to start with," said Mann, who only scored 53 points with his foot last season after averaging more than 100 for the four previous seasons.

Long field goals? "They're gone," Mann said flatly.

"You're also going to see poorer field goal percentages," he said, "I think the average field goal this year will be about 35 yards — and you're not going to see any 70 per cent kickers any more."

Though the use of field goal kickers is going to go down, Mann is not so sure the salaries for three-point play men will decline.

"That depends on the World Football League," he said, "and how bad they go after kickers."

Jimmy Connors

Connors— "Get me Laver"

FOREST HILLS, N. Y. [UPI] — "Get me Laver."

That's what Jimmy Connors, deprived of a grand slam by being banned from the French tournament, said Monday to his manager, Bill Riordan, and Riordan contacted Rod Laver, challenging the two-time grand slam winner to meet Jimmy in a winner-take-all match sometime this fall in Madison Square Garden.

"Laver's manager said Rod was interested," Riordan said. "I expect to hear from Rod shortly. As to the purse, perhaps $50,000, maybe even $100,000."

Laver has riled Jimmy by what the 22-year-old Australian, Wimbledon and Forest Hills winner regards as disparaging comments.

Yanks grab top, drop Sox, 6-3

BOSTON [UPI] — Chris Chambliss and Elliott Maddox drove in two runs apiece Monday night and the New York Yankees, taking advantage of two errors, defeated the Boston Red Sox 6-3 before a standing room only crowd of 34, 981 to regain sole possession of first place in the American League East.

Chambliss hit a solo homer off loser Roger Moret in the third and singled in a fourth inning run while Maddox singled home the first run and brought in another with a sacrifice fly in the fifth.

SPORTS

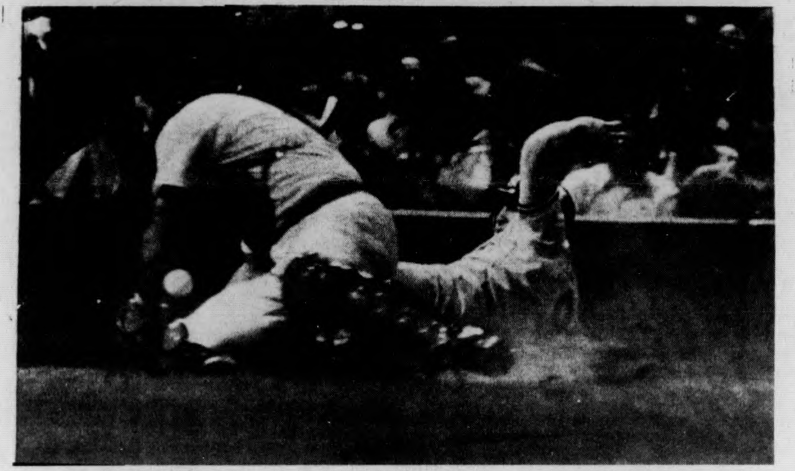
However, it was the Red Sox' shaky play in the field that led to their downfall. In the first inning Roy White reached safely on the first of two errors by shortstop Mario Guerrero, stole second and continued to third as catcher Bob Montgomery's throw went into centerfield. White then scored when Maddox singled.

Chambliss' sixth homer gave the Yankees a 2-0 lead in the second, but Boston's Dwight Evans homered in the third to cut the margin to one run.

New York got a run back in the fourth with the aid of a dropped throw at the plate by Montgomery. Graig Nettles doubled and Chambliss followed with a single to right. Evans made a perfect throw to home which appeared to have Nettles beaten, but in the collision at the plate Montgomery dropped the ball and Nettles was safe.

The Yankees then picked up two more runs in the fifth and another in the sixth to build a 6-1 advantage.

George Medich carried that lead into the eighth inning but the Red Sox struck for two runs and Sparky Lyle was forced to come in and get the final four outs. Medich gave up a pair of singles to start the eighth then got bailed out of trouble when Evans hit into a double play. However, Carl Yastrzemski followed with a homer and Lyle relieved to preserve Medich's 18th win.



The Yankees Graig Nettles helps to break "The Jinx" as he slides home safely past Bob Montgomery. The New Yorkers broke their Fenway losing streak, 6-3.

Courageous hopes to prolong 123-year streak

By JACK WOLISTON

NEWPORT, R. I. [UPI] — The United States placed its longest winning streak in sports on the line today, sending the 12-meter yacht Courageous against the Australian challenger Southern Cross over a 24.3-mile course on Rhode Island Sound in a best-of-seven series for The America's Cup.

This is the 22nd challenge for a battered, bottomless goblet which the United States won from England 123 years ago and has defended tenaciously ever since. And it probably is the most determined one that ever has been made in cup history. Alan Bond, 36-year-old Australian millionaire, has spent a reported $9 million in his effort to win the Cup and take it back to the country down under.

With the crack of dawn, an estimated fleet of 2,500 craft ranging from small motorboats to large commercial ships began pouring out into Rhode Island Sound to take up viewing spots along the race course. Twenty-six Coast Guard vessels cruised the area to keep them off the course.

The start of the first race was scheduled for 12:10 p.m. EDT. The weather experts saw a 20 per cent chance of showers, which would be no bother, and Southwest winds of 10 to 12 knots.

The yachting experts among the thousands of persons jammed into this seaport city for the series gave the edge to Courageous. But the Australians wouldn't buy it. They were confident, cool and unconcerned Monday as they put Southern Cross through a series of drills in Narragansett Bay.

Southern Cross Skipper Jim Hardy, a vintner from Sydney who has won numerous honors in international and olympic sailing events, felt he had the edge in Cup experience over Courageous Skipper Ted Hood. Hardy sailed Gretel II in the last series in 1970 when she lost out to defender Intrepid, 4-1.

Hood has crewed previously on 12-meter yachts seeking to become the defender but never has been in America's Cup competition. But he is a seasoned veteran of the sailing wars and he took over the helm of Courageous in the selection trials with the new aluminum-hulled 12 meter tied 4-4 with Intrepid. In the tie-breaking race he skippered Courageous to a 1-minute, 47-second victory over Intrepid.

In this race, said Bob McCullough, the Courageous manager, "we reached 85 per cent of our potential. We'll be 99 per cent when the Cup races start."

The McCullough statement raised a question — is Courageous still only 99 per cent of potential. Will that be good enough to stave off a determined effort by the Aussie challenger.

Whatever the outcome, this contest is going to be a no-holds-barred slugfest. Hopefully there'll be no low punches, at least not lower than those already swung by the men from down under, such as a watergate-type intrusion in the dark of night boarding the defender arrogant accusations of "racing rules control" leveled against the Americans and other unsportsmanlike "dirty tricks."

Observers say that if this match is not cleanly sailed, completely devoid of groundless challenger-filed protests and appeals such as clouded the 1970 series, there may be no further Cup competition for years to come.

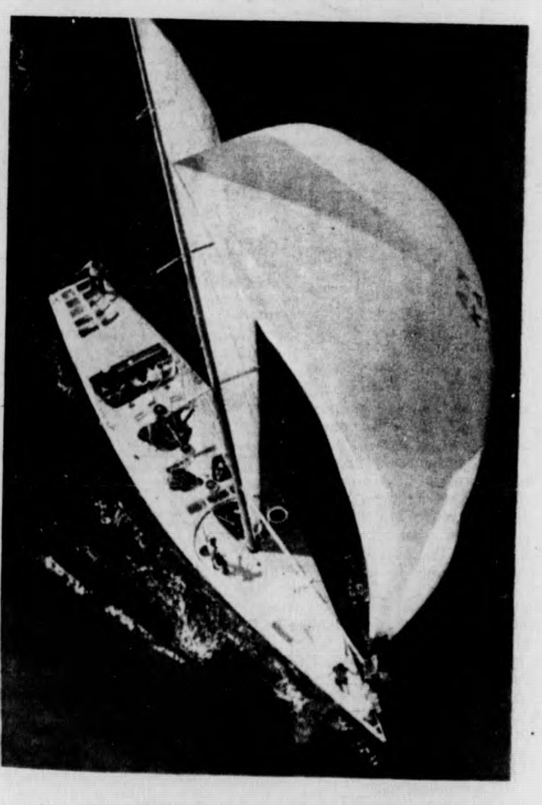
Whatever happens, it is pretty certain these races will be close — a matter of seconds or minutes at the finish. Closest race among the 12 meters was in 1962 when Weatherley defeated Gretel I by 26 seconds. The biggest margin was piled up in 1964 when Constellation blasted Sovereign by 20 minutes and 26 seconds. That's like the New York Yankees defeating the Boston Red Sox 50-0.

The Australian challenger for the America's Cup, "Southern Cross", practices yesterday for the start of the best-of-seven series. "Cross" is skippered by Jim Hardy.

The inside story

JIMMY CONNORS DIDN'T HAVE HIS fiance Chris Evert to compete with in the finals of the U.S. Open at Forest hills, but nevertheless, his victory in the men's singles, along with Billie Jean King's in the women's singles, gave the Americans a dramatic sweep of the tournament. Story — page 19.

LEE TREVINO didn't have his Doctor Pepper bottle to help him in the World Series of Golf, but he didn't need it as he beat Gary Player on the seventh extra hole Story — page 18.



The "Courageous" tunes up in a final preparations for the defense of America's sea-going title. Ted Hood will skipper the 12-meter yacht.

UMass hiring policy abused?

BY DOROTHY L. MULLER
AND MARK VOGLER
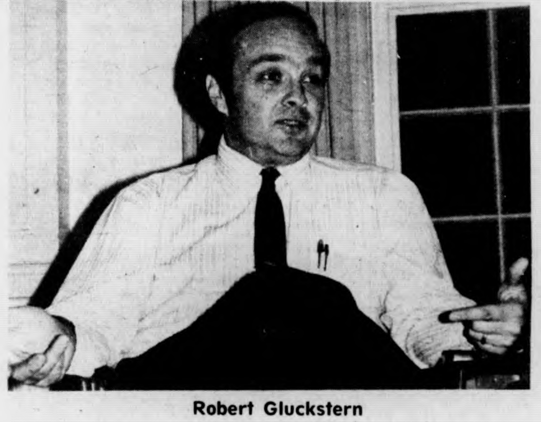
Staff Reporters

What appears on the surface to be an inhouse departmental controversy may develop into abuses of affimative action policy and heavy court litigation for the UMass administration.

The summer appointment of Gideon Ariel to the Physical Education's Department of Exercise Science has raised questions as to whether statndard University hiring procedures were properly followed.

A suit filed by a UMass graduate student is now pending in Boston Federal District Court which charges that an affirmative action search was intentionally aborted in order to place Ariel on the faculty (see page three).



Robert Gluckstern

Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery maintains that an affirmative action search "was properly waived in this instance because it is for a one year contract and that the cost of conducting an affirmative action search under the circumstances would be unreasonable."

However, a close look at the funding of Ariel's appointment reveals that it was not the intention of department head Harry K. Campney to hire the new professor for a year--but rather to beef up the present faculty.

The position was funded in part by a three-year grant and the liquidation of the department's only two graduate assistantships.

Robert L. Gluckstern, vice chancellor for Academic Affairs and Provost, approved the appointment of Ariel with the stipulation that state funds designated for graduate students would not be used to supplement his salary beyond the 1974-75 academic year.

"The use of state funded academic positions for our own doctorates is strongly discouraged," Gluckstern said in a June 7 memorandum to Campney.

"The present circumstances do not seem sufficiently unique to permit a significant modification of this practice in the present case. However, the Department is strongly interested in using Dr. Ariel's abilities to generate outside grant support for the department."

Gideon Ariel

Dr. Campney defended his petition for the affirmative action waiver on the grounds that "there was never a position open in the first place."

He added that there was no need to conduct the affirmative action search which necessitates the publication of faculty vacancies in trade journals, and requires that minority colleges be specifically approached in regard to the opening.

While no faculty position was left unfilled--given Campney's argument--nevertheless two

Sargent, Dukakis win in governor's race

Sheehan, Quinn concede defeat

BOSTON [UPI] — Republican Gov. Francis W. Sargent won renomination in Tuesday's Massachusetts primary and will face liberal Michael S. Dukakis, father of the state's no-fault auto insurance law, in the November election.

Sargent's conservative opponent, Carroll P. Sheehan, and Dukakis' opponent, Atty. Gen. Robert H. Quinn, both conceded shortly before 11 p.m.

Sargent told his supporters, "The votes are still coming in, but we have won it — not just the nomination, but the fight, the big fight. We've won that, the big fight to be Republican who can stand tall and not bow down to party, who keeps his independence, does his job as governor and still be proud of his party."

At about the same time, Dukakis was saying, "I can't think of any better place to celebrate this great victory than in the Athens of America."

Carroll P. Sheehan, the liberal governor's conservative challenger, conceded defeat shortly before 11 p.m. Atty. Gen. Robert H. Quinn, who decided to vacate his office in favor of a run for governor, also conceded defeat with less than 20 per cent of the vote counted.

With 47 of the state's 2142 precincts reporting, or 19 per cent, Sargent had 18,997 votes compared to 10,160 for Sheehan. Dukakis had 59,468 votes with 42,582 for Quinn.

The unofficial returns came from 19 per cent of the precincts.

"The votes are still coming in, but we have won it," Sargent told his supporters.

"I wish him Sargent well in November," Sheehan said.

Dukakis thanked his supporters for, "Your votes and your trust in me to lead this state over the next four years."

Former Lt. Gov. Francis X. Bellotti of Quincy jumped into a potentially commanding lead for the Democratic nomination for attorney general in Tuesday's Massachusetts primary.

With 115 of the 2,142 precincts reporting, Bellotti had 8,187 votes to 4,539 for former Rep. George L. Sacco of Medford.

In the Republican primary for the same office, former Republican State Chairman Josiah A. Spaulding of Manchester led with 3,367 votes to 2,486 for Charles C. Cabot Jr. of Dover, and 1,776 for former Administration Secretary William I. Cowin of Newton.

Thomas P. O'Neill III, son of the U.S. House majority leader, led in the five man Democratic contest for lieutenant governor.

Backers of the military government that took power in a coup in Chile one year ago today allowed tens of thousands of demonstrators to celebrate the anniversary. Criticism of the junta remains vehement, with Amnesty International charging that the junta has executed thousands of civilians since taking power. "Torture is still being practiced," concludes the London-based group that is designed to protect the rights of political prisoners.

Mosakowski loses in Congress bid

Thomas R. Manning of Pittsfield won the democratic nomination for Congress in the First Congressional District over Kenneth R. Mosakowki of Amherst, the UMass library employee.

Manning will face U.S. Rep. Silvio O. Conte, also of Pittsfield.

With 82.1 percent of the precincts reporting at 11:45 p.m., Manning had 15,419, while Mosakowski had 10,086.

In the 5th district, Paul E. Tsongas of Lowell held a small early lead over William C. Madden of Lexington in scattered early returns. The winner will face GOP Rep. Paul W. Cronin of Andover.

In the hotly contested 3rd Worcester district, where Democrat U.S. Rep. Harold D. Donohue is retiring, the six-man Democratic field shaped up three ways as expected.

Joseph D. Early took a slight lead over former city councillor Paul V. Mullaney and school committeeman Gerard D'Amico. All three men are from Worcester.

Trailing them were Democrats John B. Anderson, Ora J. Gatti and Anthony P. Hmura.

On the GOP side, state Rep. David J. Lionett of Worcester beat Thornton D. Wheeler of Worcester.

In Beverly, liberal congressman Michael J. Harrington won renomination in the Democratic primary for the 6th Congressional district. With no Republican opposition he is assured re-election.

Harrington has been a vocal opponent of private power companies and currently is campaigning for the creation of a state power authority.

Hersh calls Nixon pardon a "shrewd move"

By Larry Carpman

Si Hersh, Washington reporter for The New York Times addresses audience of 200 here last night.

Seymour Hersh, reporter for the Washington bureau of the New York Times, called President Ford's pardoning of former president Nixon a "shrewd move" that he did now for political reasons."

"He was going to do it eventually", Hersh said. "I don't think it will be a factor in the elections this year and that is what he wanted."

Hersh, credited for uncovering the unauthorized bombing of North Vietnam and the My Lai Massacre, spoke before 200 students in the Campus Center Auditorium last night as a substitute for Washington Post reporter Carl Bernstein who was forced to cancel his scheduled lecture.

"It seems very clear that presidents get isolated when they're in office," said Hersh. "Ford definitely misread public opinion."

"My version of Watergate is to be skeptical of everyone in power"

Hersh turned to Watergate describing it as a very competitive story for newspapers and a time when standards and principals began to crumble.

"It is a terrific power we reporters have," Hersh said.

"In one story with 500 words we can practically destroy anybody," he said.

Hersh gave the publication of secret Grand Jury testimony as an example of what he called the "degradation of principal."

"I'm troubled about writing things about Grand Juries," Hersh told his audience. He cited instances where Woodward and Bernstein, the two Washington Post reporters working on the Watergate stories, used secret testimony for their articles.

"My version of Watergate, "said Hersh," is to skeptical of everyone in power."

Hersh, at times itching his eye and brushing his blonde hair back, quickly switched to a different subject.

"I still want to know what happened in the oil crisis," he said.

He then cited the oil crisis, the war in Vietnam, and the whole area of multi-national corporations as press failures.

"We (the press) really blew it," he said.

Hersh, in answer to a question from the audience, described Nelson Rockefeller, President Ford's choice for his Vice-President, as having a possible "conflict of interest" because of his close relationship with oil companies. He noted the existence of many pieces of legislation already in Congress dealing with oil related issues as the possible reasons for the conflict of interest.

In recalling the impeachment proceedings that led to former President Nixon's resignation, Hersh asked the audience to "Remember how many people thought Representative Drinan was nuts when he first offered his impeachment bill a long time ago."

"Watergate is a fun story," Hersh said as he loosened his gold tie and looked at the audience for a reaction.

Vatican stresses information, development to curb population

While attending the World Population Conference in Bucharest this summer, UMass doctoral student Duane Dale, filed this report concerning the Vatican. This is the third in a nine-part series:

The Vatican was represented at the United Nations Population Conference, which ended two weeks of sessions (August 30). Bishop Edouard Gagnon, head of the Holy See delegation expressed concern over the problems of population growth but stated that the Roman Catholic Church has no intention of altering its position on birth control or abortion.

The Vatican is represented at U.N. functions because of its status as an independent state. With less than 1000 residents, it is the smallest in the U.N. system.

Bishop Gagnon referred in his press conference to the message Pope Paul delivered last March to Conference President Antonio Carillo-Flores. In it the Pope recognized that population merits worldwide attention because problems of hunger, health, education, housing, and employment become more difficult to resolve when population grows more rapidly than available resources. However, the Pope stated that no pressure would sway the Church toward doctrinal compromises or short-sighted solutions.

The Vatican delegation places stress on programs of information and research, plus measures to promote economic development, in order to bring population problems under control. Support was withheld from those parts of the Conference's World Population Plan of Action which refer to birth control and abortion. According to Father Henri de Riedmatten, also a member of the delegation, the plan's support of universal access to family planning would lead to the indiscriminate use of contraceptives.

The delegation was questioned by the press regarding their failure to represent the growing body of dissent from the Church's position on contraceptives as stated in the proclamation, Humanae Vitae. Bishop Gagnon replied that Humanae Vitae was intended to "situate the discussion of population in the larger context of social and human development, while maintaining the Church's teachings on birth control, contraception, and abortion."

The Center of Concern, a Jesuit group in Washington, D.C., circulated a summary of "dissenting views" on birth control and family planning. National bishops conferences in Canada, Mexico, South Africa, and Indonesia have made official statements which place the question in the context of responsible family life and parenthood.

The Mexican statement reads: "Our intervention is in obedience to our pastoral duty in an emergency situation. The demographic explosion is both real and heartrending for the majority of Mexican families. It is the result, in very many cases, of irresponsible fertility, aggravated by an unjust sociol-economic situation.

"Bearing in mind the guidance that Humanae Vitae provides, spouses should analyze it, as well as data of their concrete situation, to find God's will. The decision they take regarding the means (of limiting family size), following with sincerity the dictates of their conscience, must leave them with peace of mind, since they have no reason to feel they are drifting apart from divine friendship."

The Center of Concern has been active in population issues for several years; their recent work included a statement of recommendations to the United States delegation to the U.N. population Conference.

The Vatican, for its part, placed considerable emphasis on the stress placed on planet earth by lifestyle, as much as by numbers. According to one delegate, "Our problems are created more by the selfishness of the rich than by the fertility of the poor."

Faculty appointment doubtful

Affirmitive action practices questioned graduate student positions were usurped to create a faculty position. It is more customary for professorships to be broken down into several graduate positions.

Campney contends that it is possible to tailor the job to the man. This method of hiring would waive the affirmative action search "in the best interests of the university," he said.

"Such a method involves the creation of job specifications to match the abilities of a particular individual when the activities of that person present the possibility of a major strengthening of a given department."

Dr. Michael Arbib, professor of Computer and Information Science, requested the appointment after he received a three-year National Institute of Health grant starting with $7,600 for the 1974-75 year.

"Dr. Ariel is likely to be of great significance in increasing the impact of my studies on experimentalists," he said.

The impetus of Ariel's appointment appears to come from his ability to secure research funds from outside sources. However, when questioned in this regard, Dr. Arbib doubted this and stated that he had no knowledge to date that Ariel had attracted funds to the department.

Yet, Campney's primary reason for urging the appointment was that "he (Ariel) has an excellent potential for obtaining funds from various businesses on a contract research basis, as well as federal and foundation grants. We are in dire need of funding in this department."

The upshot of this administrative appointment and funding is that Ariel's remuneration will be a $15,200 assistant professorship. This results from the withdrawal of two teaching associateships of $3,800 each plus $7,600 from Dr. Arbib's award.

In a memorandum to Assistant Provost Jean Leppaluoto, Dr. Campney justified the appointment of Ariel without an affirmative action search since "no attempt will be made to reappoint Ariel for the 1975-76 academic year without such a search."

Dr. Benjamin Ricci, one of two department professors who has opposed the appointment, said Chancellor Bromery "and the others are ignorant of what is going on in this department."

"It is well to note that Professor Arbib's NIH award is for three years. Given this mix, it is highly unlikely that another 'more qualified candidate' will be discovered for the 75-76 school year. Thus, granting the waiver is tantamount to a three-year appointment."

A Whitmore source said, "If this type of thing continues to happen at this University, it's quite obvious that graduate students are getting screwed, blued and tattoed."

In a Campney memorandum of March 18, two new courses in the Exercise Science Department were listed: EX. Sci. 390/700 The Logic of Human Movement, and Ex. Sci. 390/700 Computer Applications to Human Performance.

These two positions were tentatively assigned to Ariel prior to his May 3 reaffirmation of position.

Dr. Arbib in discussing these two courses stated "The Logic of Human Movement was specifically designed to take advantage of his special abilities." Yet, he evaded the question twice as to whether these courses might be pertinent to his own research.

University affirmative action policy also requires that the candidate selected for a faculty position must be at least as well qualified as other candidates for the job.

And although no search was undertaken officially by the department, Dr. Ricci presented to Campney in an April 26 memorandum (one week prior to Dr. Ariel's faculty reaffirmation) his challenge to the appointment and a presentation of the names of alternate candidates.

Dr. Ricci maintains that a candidate, whose qualifications he describes for comparative purposes only, is Elizabeth Ebacher who is the graduate student charging the UMass administration with violating affirmative action.

MEMORANDUM

FROM Robert L. Gluckstern DATE June 7, 1974
TO Harry Campney, Department of Exercise Science
SUBJECT Appointment of Gideon Ariel as Assistant Professor

In response to a challenge from Professor Ricci regarding the appointment of Gideon Ariel, a meeting was held on Thursday, May 30 at which Professor Ricci, School Dean David Bischoff, School Personnel Committee Chairman Walter Kroll, Professor Arbib from Computer and Information Sciences and Academic Affirmative Action Officer Jean Leppaluoto and yourself were present. On Wednesday, June 5, Dr. Ariel met with one of my staff members to discuss the challenges raised against his appointment.

Following both discussions, I have reviewed the entire file carefully and have reached the following conclusions and decisions.

1. Most of the questions raised about the appropriateness of the proposed appointment had been surfaced prior to the consideration of the appointment at the Department and School level. These were the proper levels for the consideration of information regarding departmental impact, teaching ability, and professional conduct. I am persuaded that due consideration was given to these questions.
2. The use of state funded academic positions for our own doctorates is strongly discouraged. The present circumstances do not seem sufficiently unique to permit a significant modification of this practice in the present case. However, the Department is strongly interested in using Dr. Ariel's abilities to generate outside grant support for the department. I will approve a one-year appointment as Assistant Professor with the clear understanding that state funds cannot be used to support an academic appointment for Gideon Ariel beyond the 1974-75 academic year.
3. If other arrangements are contemplated for the 1975-76 year and beyond they will have to satisfy all other university requirements, including appropriate affirmative action considerations.

Register your bike in front of library

Due to the tremendous numbers of students coming to the campus police station to register their bicycles, the Department of Public Safety has announced a new location and specific hours for bicycle registration, according to Diana White, Special Assistant to the department.

"The response to our request that students come down and register their bikes has been incredible," White said. "So much so that we've been forced to relocate the registration site."

Students who wish to register their bicycles should bring them to the West entrance of the UMass Library on Monday, Tuesday, Friday or Saturday between 3:30 and 7:30 p.m. A security guard there will engrave the students social security number onto the bike and will take down any pertinent information concerning it.

The advisability of students registering their bicycles was recently shown quite clearly when campus police were able to find very quickly the owners of stolen bicycles that had been recovered. The fact that the owners had previously registered their bikes with the police allowed for swift and unquestionable proof of ownership, White said.

ATTENTION COLLEGIAN STAFFERS

A one hour general staff meeting is scheduled for Thursday at 8 p.m. in Campus Center room 904- 909.

Among items to be considered:

— election of new editor-in-chief. Nominations accepted in writing through Wednesday night. Give to Bill Densmore.
— introduction of Charlie Berube, business advisor; two part-time news advisors — Chuck Kidd and Chris Kertesz.
— The Life-Style section and what you can do for it — by Sherm Boyson.
— Probable night staff reorganization — by Bill Densmore
— Suggestions for time of staff party. We'll all have to contribute money and food if we're going to have it.
— Fall Election coverage
— Possible Graduate Student Membership in Collegian — Mike Kneeland.

Also, Three Proposed Constitutional Changes

— Shall the editorial board election be held in December of each year? Vote yes or no. Simple majority carries.
— Shall Collegian constitutional amendments and editorial board elections be accomplished by either of two methods — secret balloting over a period of several days after due notification of question; or, vote tally of staff members assembled as a body at a particular time. Vote yes or not. Presently we must have a meeting to make changes or have elections.
— Amendment allowing the publishing board to choose a successor to the Editor-in-Chief should he or she resign.

If your name does not appear below and you wish to vote in the election and on the constitution changes, see Bill Densmore soon.

Grad student files suit in response to abuses

An "unannounced" faculty position created and filled last spring in the Physical Education's Department of Exercise Science has triggered a suit against the University administration by a woman who claims she was equally qualified for the job.

Dr. Elizabeth Ebacher, 27, of Amherst, Monday, initiated action in Boston's Federal District Court on the grounds that five UMass officials ignored affirmative action policy in the appointment.

The suit apparently resulted from a dispute in the Exercise Science department over the techniques used during the appointment of Gideon Ariel.

Department heads waived the affirmative action policy with no opposition from Whitmore after stipulating that it would be "economically unfeasible" to follow normal guidelines for a one-year position.

However, Ariel's position borders more on a three-year appointment since half of his salary is provided by $7,600 for the academic year '74-'75 of a three-year National institute of Health grant.

The other half the position's funding came from the liquidation of the department's two graduate teaching assistantships. Ebacher, through her Attorney Harry Miles, requested that Ariel's position be frozen until the case is heard on its merits.

The seven-page brief also stated that:

—the University not have the position without adequate publication of vacancy and appropriate affirmative action search.

—affirmative action waiver was inappropriate in this case.

—defendants failed to initiate proper affirmative action search.

—defendants should be ordered to do so.

—awarding of damages of $15,000 to Ebacher.

—awarding of reasonable attorney's fees and costs of action to Ebacher.

—awarding of any further relief which seems just.

Dr. Ebacher charges that in March a faculty appointment was being considered by Harry Campney, head of the department.

However, in violation of the university's affirmative action policy — which requires publication of the vacant faculty position in various trade magazines and coincident with publication of the same position in University journals — she states that no announcement of the appointment in any written or verbal form was extended.

According to Ebacher, Dr. Campney delayed the formalities of her degree completion until his preselected candidate had been appointed and the affirmative action search waived. She further maintains that Dr. Campney was specifically antagonistic to the prospect of a woman filling the position.

Simon urges energy resource development

WASHINGTON [UPI] – Treasury Secretary William E. Simon yesterday urged a renewed effort to develop the nation's energy resources so that Americans will never again face a crisis such as the Arab oil embargo.

As one step, Simon suggested decontrol of energy prices, especially natural gas.

"It's easy to get action in the midst of a crisis; it's not so easy when the crisis is behind you," Simon told the semi-annual meeting of the National Petroleum Council. "We must not allow the American people to forget. We must develop a realistic, believable program" on energy.

The 134-member council gathered at the Interior Department to present a number of reports on studies on emergency preparedness, manpower and material needs for oil exploration and production, energy conservation, petroleum storage capacity and ocean oil resources.

The council is an advisory organization created by the government to make recommendations to the Interior Department on matters relating to the oil industry.

A council report on emergency preparedness warned that the United States "will likely be more dependent on foreign oil in the future." The council said that if there is greater dependency on imports a future embargo would have more severe and lasting effects on the U. S. economy if there's inadequate preparation.

The emergency preparedness committee made several recommendations designed to increase self-sufficiency in energy. The committee said the government should encourage the petroleum industry, adopt import policies that do not hinder expansion of domestic refining capacity, adopt environmental policies that are in balance with energy needs and deregulate natural gas prices.

Press was barred from Federal push to raise utility rates

WASHINGTON [AP] - Nearly 100 state public utility commissioners will meet in Washington today to hear federal officials argue for higher rates for electrical utilities. The outcome of the meeting and others scheduled in the near future, may be higher electric bills to the consumer.

There was not a general announcement of the meeting until after several consumer groups alleged it was being held in secrecy.

The Treasury Department, which is the chief sponsor of the session, originally planned to bar the press and public from the session, but yesterday said the press would be admitted.

A spokesman also said consumer representatives—who earlier were denied participation—would be given a chance to make their views known.

Federal officials invited to participate include Treasury Secretary William E. Simon, Chairman Arthur Burns of the Federal Reserve Board, executive director L. William Seidman of the Summit Conference on Inflation, director John Sawhill of the Federal Energy Administration and chairman John N. Nassikas of the Federal Power Commission.

A Treasury announcement said the meeting was called to discuss "the financial problems facing the electrical utility industry."

A Treasury source said it is understood that the state commissioners will be encouraged to "expedite the pass-through" of higher utility operating costs into rates charged for electricity.

Garry DeLoss, an attorney for consumer advocate Ralph Nader, said that if state public utility commissions begin to allow automatic pass-through of higher utility operating costs, it will do away with their rate regulating responsibilities.

DeLoss also contended in remarks to a newsman that an automatic pass-through of higher costs would reduce the incentives of electric utilities to avoid waste and seek economies in their operations.

Simon has said that electric utilities are faced with inadequate investment capital to meet future energy needs because their profits are not high enough.

Ford pledges Israel's survival

WASHINGTON [UPI] - President Ford, welcoming Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin on his first official visit to Washington, said yesterday the United States stands with Israel and is committed to Israel's survival and security."

Ford made the statement on a red-carpeted, bunting-draped platform on the south lawn as he welcome his first head of state since becoming president.

Ford said that "over the last few months there has been movement" toward an achievement of a lasting peace in the Middle East and expressed the hope that there would be more progress in the future.

"The first steps have been taken and others will follow," he said.

Rabin gave a strong indication that his talks with Ford, which began immediately after the ceremony, would be heavily focused on Israel's request for more military assistance. At present there is a program for supplying Israel with arms and jet war planes.

Rabin aid "that only a strong Israel which has the capacity to deter aggression and to defend itself" can ensure peace in the Middle East.

At the same time, he said that Israel prepared "to seek peace" with its Arab neighbors and expressed the view that "much depends on what the other governments are prepared to do."

Israel, he added, ready to engage in patient negoitations to solve outstanding issues with the Arab nations.

Rabin said that over his next few days in Washington he hopes to discuss Israel's needs and added that he was confident that he could return to Jerusalem assured of U.S. intentions to support Israel.

Meanwhile, Israel announced yesterday what military sources described as the biggest tank, artillery and support unit maneuvers on the occupied Golan Heights of Syria since the Middle East war of October, 1973.

Both Arabs and Israelis spoke of the danger of renewed fighting.

A high-ranking Israeli army officer warned this week of a new war unless a peace agreement is worked out withhin a few months.

President Anwar Sadat, speaking at Port Said on the first leg of a tour of the Suez Canal, said yesterday Egypt would go back to war if Israel failed to withdraw from occupied Arab terrtories.

Usually jovial, Ford appeared solemn at the Washington reception. He also appeared slightly nevous on the occasion of the ceremonial welcome, marked by pomp and military fanfare.

"The United States has been proud of its association with Israel," he told Rabin, who was standing by his side.

"We shall continue to stand with Israel," he added. "We are committed to Israel's survival and security."

Recalling that Rabin had served as Israel's ambassador to Washington, Ford said, "You are returning as the leader of a great country."

South Viet candidate asks 'reconciliation'

SAIGON [UPI] – Retired Gen. Duong Van "Gig" Minh, a former South Vietnamese presidential candidate, called yesterday for a nationwide movement of reconciliation to restore peace in South Vietnam.

On the battlefield, the Saigon command reported 98 Communists and 52 government soldiers killed in fighting in the 24-hour period ending at 6 a.m. Tuesday. During that period 282 government soldiers were wounded as 121 Communist shellings and ground attacks were reported around the country.

Minh's call came amid reports that President Nguyen Van Thieu had sent Ambassador Dui Diem to Jakarta to seek Indonesia's help in arranging talks with North Vietnam to implement the cease-fire in the Paris agreement of January, 1973.

Indonesia is one of the four members of the International Commission for Control and Supervision of the Vietnamese cease-fire. The others are Hungary, Poland and Iran.

In a statement issued to newsmen, Minh said:

"The present situation calls for a nationwide reconciliation and concord. It is necessary that such a movement take place now in order to restore peace."

The general, nicknamed "Big Minh" because of his height and husky stature. said he supports such a movement which now is being set up by the militant. An Quang Buddhist church and headed by opposition Sen. Vu Van Mau.

Minh opposed Thieu in the presidential election in 1971 but withdrew from the race after charging Thieu had rigged the election apparatus.

He was one of the leaders in the military coup that toppled the late President Ngo Dinh Diem in 1963. Minh was chief of state after the coup for three months before being overthrown by another general.

Portugal frees Guinea—Bissau

By PETER UEBERSAX
United Press International

LISBON – President Antonio de Spinola formally declared the state of Guinea-Bissau independent yesterday and said the government would go ahead with granting power to the black independence movement in Mozambique despite race riots there.

"A government of transition will shortly be set up in Mozambique and the program of action for Angola has already been announced by the junta," Spinola said in a speech after proclaiming Guinea-Bissau independent and formally beginning the process of dismantling Portugal's 350-year-old African colonial empire.

In an apparent gesture to assure protection to white settlers in Angola and Mozambique, Portugal's two remaining colonies, Spinola said he will "not consent that, in the name of liberty and democracy, the Portuguese people will again be enslaved or that, in the name of the same principles, millions of human beings be abandoned to similar risks."

He said he would oppose any movement that tried to gain power in violation fo the democratic rules set down by his armed forces movement.

Spinola, leader of the Portuguese military rebellion April 25, signed a red leather-bound independence proclamation for the former colony of 600,000 persons on Africa's west coast in a somber ceremony without speeches or smiles.

In Guinea-Bissau leaders of the new government said they would celebrate independence on Sept. 24 in the jungle capital of Medina de Boe. A year ago on that date the Guinea freedom movement declared independence on their own.

A Guinea-Bissau government delegation led by Vice President Pedro Pires attended the signing ceremony in Lisbon.

Blacks rule in Mozambique as rioting, looting continues

By FERNANDO FERNANDES
United Press International

LOURENCO MARQUES, Mozambique – A white settler revolt aimed at blocking black majority rule in this Portuguese territory collapsed yesterday, but blacks and whites rioted in the capital, burning and looting stores and killing one another in the streets.

Witnesses estimated dozens of persons were killed or wounded in the rioting. Among the reported fatalities were the parents and infant child of a white family. At nightfall, shooting could be heard in sectors of the capital.

South African radio reports said more than 2,000 black guerrillas of the Frelimo independence movement, which was promised immediate administrative power over Mozambique by Portuguese authorities, were massed only 37 miles from Lourenco Marques, but the report could not be confirmed immediately.

Frelimo sources said hundreds of black guerrillas were stationed 20 miles from the northern city of Beira. This correspondent saw one dead African who had been dragged from his car, shot, and then set on fire by a mob of whites.

Scores of whites and Indian shopowners abandoned their homes with only a few belongings stuffed into their cars.

Militant white supremacists, who four days ago seized key installations in Lourenco Marques in a bid to push through a declaration of unilateral independence, abandoned their headquarters Tuesday at a captured radio station.

"The movement has been temporarily disbanded," a white spokesman said.

Portuguese troops also ousted white rebels, who were backed by commando groups of former soldiers, from the civilian airport.

Military ambulances, their sirens wailing, dashed in and out of the black shantytown district of Canico, where blacks looted and burned shops and stoned cars.

Portuguese and Indian shopkeepers fled their homes and shops. Cars were piled high with the few belongings they could quickly grab. Wives and children wept as they were driven to the still peaceful white areas near the center of the city.

A pall of smoke hung over the black suburb of Xipamanine where rioters set fire to a bus, police said.

At one point several thousand Africans gathered and searched cars for Portuguese flags and arms.

"If you're going down there and you have any weapons, you probably won't come back," a police officer said.

Western diplomats speculated Mrs. Silva Zalmanson was freed as a goodwill gesture designed to influence U.S. Congressional critics blocking favorable trading terms with the Soviets until they ease their emigration policies.

Clark, Askew, Mandel, Samuels win in U.S.

UPI Telephoto

In Boston a busing command post has been set up to deal with problems arising from the recent federal desegregation order.

United Press International

Insurgents Rep. Hugh Carey and former Attorney General Ramsey Clark bucked party leaders last night to win Democratic nominations for governor and senator in New York and Florida's Gov. Reubin Askew, a leader in new South politics, swept the field in his bid for a second term.

Two entrenched congressmen won Republican primaries to succeed veteran New England senators and Maryland Gov. Marvin Mandel, who left his wife to marry a divorcee, ran into unexpectedly strong opposition in his bid for re-election.

Carey, a seven-term veteran of the House from Brooklyn, defeated Howard "Howie the Horse" Samuels, former off-track betting commissioner who had the backing of state party leaders.

Clark, attorney general under President Lyndon B. Johnson, and an outspoken foe of the Vietnam War, defeated party regular Lee Alexander, the mayor of Syracuse.

Askew, frequently mentioned as a possible contender for a spot on the Democrats' national ticket in 1976, crushed three other candidates in Florida's gubernatorial primary.

In Washington, D.C., incumbent appointed Mayor Walter Washington grabbed an early lead Tuesday in the District of Columbia's first city primary in 104 years, but a computer failure threatened to delay the final count until early Wedneday.

Despite the lack of solid returns, Washington said he believed he was "looking good. What's wrong with 54 per cent?" he said. "How sweet it is. How sweet it is. We're going to victory."

At the same time Washington was talking to hundreds of cheering campaign workers, his opponent, Clifford Alexander, a former head of the Equal Opportunities Commission, told supporters: "I think we're going to win this one."

Elections officials said a failure of their primary computer might delay counting of the ballots by two or three hours although about 11 p.m. they said the primary computer system appeared to be coming back into operation.

Primaries around New England

O'Neill Jr. wins

BOSTON [UPI] - First term State Rep. Thomas P. O'Neill III, son of the U.S. House majority leader, grabbed an early lead in a field of six candidates seeking the Democratic nomination for lieutenant governor.

With 5.3 per cent of the vote in, mostly from Western Massachusetts, the 30-year-old Cambridge lawmaker held a 2-1 lead over his closest competitor, Boston City Councillor Christopher A. Ianella.

It was O'Neill's first try for statewide office, coming only two years after he entered the legislature.

Thompson wins N.H.

MANCHESTER, N.H. [AP] - Controversial New Hampshire Gov. Meldrim Thomson maintained a nearly 2 to 1 lead over his moderate challenger, Senate President David L. Nixon, in Tuesday's statewide primary.

With 60 or 2 per cent of the 299 precincts reporting, Thomson had 4,553 votes to Nixon's 2,550 and appeared headed for renomination by state Republicans.

Mallery eyes Aiken seat

MONTPELIER, Vt. [AP] - Vermont's current top-vote getter, U.S. Rep. Richard Mallary, rolled up 61 per cent of the vote last night in the three-way Republican race for the Senate nomination to succeed George D. Aiken.

With 26 per cent of the polling places reporting, Mallary accumulated 3,774 votes to 2,104 for Hinesburg attorney Charles Ross and 260 for retired Rutland banker T. Serse Ambrosini.

Moffett in Conn.

HARTFORD [AP] - Consumer activist Toby Moffett defeated New Britain Mayor Stanley Pac in the 6th District and state Rep. William Ratchford upset endorsed candidate Frank Santaguida in Connecticut Democratic congressional primaries Tuesday.

Moffett, who founded the Connecticut Citizen Action Group in 1971 for consumer advocate Ralph Nader, swept the rural communities in Connecticut's northwestern corner and outpolled Pac 5-3 in industrialized Bristol.

Crane wins treasurer again

Democratic State Treasurer Robert Q. Crane held a lead of less than 2,000 votes over challenger Mark Furcolo, son of former Gov. Foster Furcolo.

With 335 of the state's 2,142 precincts reporting, Guzzi led Davoren 39,726 to 30,995.

Based on the same number of precincts in the treasurer's race, Crane led Furcolo 36,251 to 34,603.

GOP state Sen. John M. Quinlan was unopposed for his party's secretary of state nomination. And Democratic Auditor Thaddeus Buczko has a free ride, with no Republican running.

Erna Ballantine, a former chairman of the Massachusetts Commission Against Discrimination, was seeking to get the GOP nomination for treasurer although she was not on the ballot. She needed 10,000 write-in votes, and conceded it was an uphill battle.

THE PARDONS..

Ford considers more pardons

UPI Telephoto

Dpty. Press Sec. John Hushen announcing to newsmen at the White House yesterday that Ford is "studying" pardons for more Watergate defendants.

WASHINGTON [UPI] - President Ford is studying possible pardons for all the Watergate defendants, unshaken by the public backlash against the Nixon pardon and convinced he acted rightly, White House spokesman John W. Hushen said yesterday.

Early congressional reaction was negative, with both Republicans and Democrats opposing the prospect of more quick Watergate pardons.

Watergate defense lawyers yesterday seized on the pardon offered President Richard Nixon as ammunition to battle for clearing their clients of all criminal cover-up charges for which they are to go on trial Sept. 30.

Attorneys for the six cover-up defendants, all former Nixon aides, are holding a strategy session just a few blocks from the White House at the same time presidential spokesmen said President Ford has "under study" whether he should pardon all Watergate figures just as he has pardoned Nixon.

Unaware of this development, defense counsel reportedly agreed to file motions with U.S. District Judge John J. Sirica contending that the cover-up indictments should be dismissed due to the Nixon pardon—or at the very least, the trial should be delayed because of the massive publicity about it.

"This came as complete but pleasant surprise," said John J. Wilson, attorney for defendant H. R. Haldeman, when told of the atest White House announcement that others may also be pardoned. "I hope it will come to pass."

At the White House, where a spokesman disclosed Ford is studying the matter, presidential counsel Philip Buchen also denied reports Ford had secretly agreed to pardon Richard M. Nixon before Nixon resigned.

"I can assure you the President did not make a deal with Nixon for a pardon," Buchen told newsmen. "I know him that well."

Anticipating questions on the issue of follow-up pardons for those jailed and those major figures still facing trial for Watergate offenses, Ford authorized deputy press spokesman John W. Hushen to tell newsmen: "The entire matter is under study."

Hushen declined to say what had prompted the study, when it was begun or who was conducting it, but he cautioned reporters against drawing conclusions as to how it would turn out.

"Don't try to predict the results of the study," Hushen said.

On Capital Hill, Sen. Sam Ervin, D-N.C., said, "I can't imagine that he would make such a mockery of equal justice under the law by pardoning men who undertook to steal from the American people the right to a free election..."

Sen. Jacob Javits, R-N.Y., said, "I thought it was a mistake about the Nixon pardon and I feel similarly about the others." And another Republican, Sen. Robert Stafford of Vermont, said, "I hope that after serious consideration the President will decide not to do it."

Sens. Alan Cranston, D-Calif., and Warren Magnuson, D-Wash., also said Watergate problems would be premature at this time.

At the suggestion of Special Prosecutor Leon Jaworski, meanwhile, the White House released a prosecution memo showing that criminal investigations possibly involving Nixon in 10 areas other than the Watergate cover-up were under way at the time he was pardoned of any and all crimes.

Those areas ranged from Nixon's taxes to wiretaps to possible conversion of campaign money for his "personal benefit."

Attorneys for Haldeman and the other five cover-up defenants — John N. Mitchell, John D. Ehrlichman, Robert C. Mardian, Gordon C. Strachan and Kenneth W. Parkinson—refused to say publicly what happened at their strategy meeting.

But sources close to the case said they agreed they should seek dismissal of all charges on grounds that punishing those who worked for Nixon while he goes free amounts to "discriminatory prosecution" forbidden by law.

All six stand accused of conspiracy in the plot to hush up the bugging scandal. Several are also charged with obstruction of justice and lying to federal investigators.

Meanwhile, the pardoning of Watergate figures beyond former President Richard M. Nixon could plunge President Ford into deeper trouble with Congress. House Speaker Carl Albert said yesterday.

"I think it would be viewed as an abuse of presidential power," said Albert after a White House spokesman announced that Ford was studying the possibility of granting other pardons

"Where would he stop," said Albert in an interview. "would it mean that all politicians in trouble would be pardoned."

Albert said Ford's pardoning of Nixon already threatened to cause him trouble with the Democratic-controlled Congress.

Fair trial impossible Nixon claimed

WASHINGTON [UPI] - Richard Nixon's attorney recently sent a memo to Special Prosecutor Leon Jaworski arguing that the former president should not be indicted in the Watergate cover-up because he could never receive a fair trial, it was disclosed Tuesday.

A copy of the memo, also received by President Ford's attorneys more than a week ago, was released by the White HOuse along with another memorandum in which Jaworski's office listed 10 alleged general offenses that were being explored in the investigation of Nixon.

The White House announced yesterday mailgrams and telegrams are running 6 to 1 against the Nixon pardon. Shown here are some of 16,000 pieces of mail received.

Criticism mounts

UPI Telephoto

Atty. Gen. William Saxbe told newsmen in Cleveland yesterday that the pardon of former President Nixon came as a surprise to him.

PUBLIC: negative

WASHINGTON [UPI] - The public response has been overwhelmingly opposed to President Ford's decision to grant Richard Nixon an unconditional pardon from any Watergate-related crimes.

Deputy press secretary John Hushen said that as of 11 a.m. yesterday the White House has received more than 16,000 telegrams and "mailgrams" and that they were running about 6 to 1 against the pardon.

Hushen said there was no available statistics yet on the volumn of mail on the subject. He noted, however, that the White House mail handlers said that during other periods of controversial presidential decisions such as the "Saturday Night Massacre," the conviction of Lt. William Calley for the My Lai massacre, the invasion of Cambodia and the Amchitka atomic explosion, the telegrams arrived in much greater volume.

CONGRESS: no more

WASHINGTON [UPI] - Republicans and Democrats in Congress spoke out quickly yesterday against the prospect of presidential pardons for Watergate defendants.

Democrats denounced the idea as "a mockery of equal justice" AND "the cover-up of cover-ups". Republicans dissented in softer terms. But none at first spoke in favor of the idea.

White House spokesmen announced at a noon news briefing that Ford, in a follow-up to his controversial Nixon pardon, had taken "under study" the question of pardons for Watergate defendants.

"I can't imagine that he would make such a mockery of equal justice under the law by pardoning men who undertook to steal from the American people the right of a free election," said Sen. sam Ervin, D-N.C., head of the Senate committee that investigated Watergate in televised hearings a year ago.

"If its a trial balloon, its a bad one," said Sen. Robert Byrd, D-W.Va. "Where do we stop...It merely compounds one cover-up of cover-ups."

Sen. Jacob Javits, R-N.Y., said, "I thought it was a mistake about the Nixon pardon and I feel similarly about the others."

Sen. Robert Stafford, R-Vt., said he hoped Ford "will decide not to do it" and Sen. Robert Taft, R-Ohio, said that while Ford probably had to consider the possibility, "I would not go along."

Like Byrd, Sen. Lowell P. Weicker, R.-Conn., focused on the issue of where, in principle, such extensions of pardon might lead.

"My definition of equal justice is not restricted to those involved in Watergate and Vietnam draft dodgers," Weicker said. "There's no end."

Sen. Daniel K. Inouye, D-Hawaii, reacted similarly: "Are they going to empty out the prisons now?"

Senate Democratic leader Mike Mansfield of Montana declined comment after the White House announcement. But before the news came out, Mansfield had told reporters he thought impending Watergate prosecutions should "go ahead" despite the Nixon pardon and its implications.

Nixon told White House he wouldn't plead guilty

By RICHARD LERNER
United Press International

WASHINGTON — Former President Richard M. Nixon obtained a full pardon - tacitly admitting wrongdoing - after his attorney informed the White House that he would never plead guilty to any Watergate crime, a spokesman for President Ford said yesterday.

The spokesman, White House Counsel Philip Buchen, explained many of the previously undisclosed details of the pardon at a news conference in an apparent effort to counter strong public reaction against it. He said that Ford never demanded a confession from Nixon and denied that the pardon resulted from a pre-arranged deal between Ford and Nixon.

Buchen said Ford decided to act when he realized that Nixon was going "to walk the plank" - meaning that he was going to be indicted in the Watergate cover-up - and after Nixon's attorney, Herbert J. Miller Jr., informed the White House that the former president "would never enter a plea of guilty."

Asked whether Nixon had intended to go through the entire judicial process, including a trial, Buchen replied: "I believe so."

He said he advised Ford that "a pardon could be characterized as implying guilt on the part of a person who had been granted the pardon," but insisted that the question of Nixon's guilt was not a factor in Ford's decision to pardon his predecessor.

Asked if Nixon's acceptance of a pardon implied a tacit admission of guilt, Buchen replied: "You can so read it."

Buchen said that by accepting it, Nixon indicated he felt the "necessity of a pardon." A pardon is unnecessary "unless there is a strong possibility of guilt," he said.

But Buchen rejected speculation that the pardon resulted from a deal that was sealed before Nixon resigned last Aug. 9 after releasing documents revealing his complicity in the cover-up. "I can assure you the President did not make a deal with Nixon for a pardon," he said. "I know him that well."

Campus Comments

With the recent pardon of ex-president Richard Nixon many Americans feel that President Ford will be forced into making a decision on the amnesty issue very soon.

THE QUESTION: How do you feel about amnesty and what do you think the President will do about it?

Peter Phillips, 24, from Woods Hole, Mass., visitor to the campus: Well, first of all with Nixon being unconditionally pardoned it brings out a double standard of justice in the country and the draft resisters should have the same chance that he (Nixon) had.

Francis Powers, Arts and Sciences major, 22, junior from Humrock, Mass.: I think it's a definite possibility now that Nixon has been given pardon so easy. I think that he (Ford) took the issue of amnesty on because he planned to announce Nixon's pardon and wanted a little public support.

Ann Aldrich, Zoology major, 19, Holliston, Mass., sophomore from Melville-South West: Well, the ex-president was pardoned and I think that the people in Canada who have left the country because of the war years ago should be granted amnesty. I feel that Ford is for amnesty but he must be more in favor of it if he wants the public back on his side after the Nixon affair. I don't think that he will speak out in favor of amnesty for a while after that.

Stuart Cudlitz, BDIC major, 21, Amherst residence, junior: Well, I think that what's going to happen is that along with any other relevant community issue that concerns the individual will lose its importance on a national scale, what with the economic situation as it is now. Amnesty isn't going to be a big issue with Ford for a while.

David Williams, 18, CASIAC, freshman, Macnamara, from Marblehead, Mass.: I favor unconditional amnesty but personally I don't think that it will ever come about. Ford will make some kind of arrangement concerning a conditional amnesty. I think he'll have to make his decision real soon but I'm not sure as to exactly what that will be.

Frank DeRose, Economics, 20, junior, Macnamara, from Norwood, Mass.: If Ford says no to unconditional amnesty the people are going to lose all faith in him. He should give full amnesty to everybody. I think that if the press is behind the people they should make a big influence in favor of it.

Turkey—"the sick man"

By KYRIAKOS KAROUTSOS

European statesmen have accurately referred to the nation of Turkey as "The Sick Man" of Europe. Let us not think for a single minute that such a label has not been justly applied to the above-mentioned nation. Believe me, the Turks have done their best to obtain and keep such a colorful and distinct description. Their latest act of course was their invasion of Cyprus.

Le us objectively analyze the reasons behind such an invasion and see whether the Sick Man acted justly or not. The military junta which ruled Greece since 1966 infiltrated the Greek-Cypriote National Guard with Greek officers who soon became an embarassment to the independent Cypriote government of Archbishop Makarios. As the power of these officers grew, so did Makarios' anxiety. His already strained relationship with Athens grew more tense and he finally informed the junta that the Greek officers must leave Cyprus. The result of such a move was a military coup, directed from Athens, and the overthrow of the democratically elected Makarios. A Greek nationalist with a dubious reputation and an avowed supporter of Cyprus' union with Greece, by the name of Sampson was chosen, from Athens of course, to head the new government. The Turkish minority on the island, approximately 18 percent of the total population, became anxious and asked for help from the Sick Man who in turn saw his opportunity to meddle in an independent state's affairs and who promptly sent a large military force to Cyprus.

The arrival of such a force on Cyprus and the possibility of a war between the nation of Greece and the Sick Man, forced the resignation of the junta in Greece and along with it the end of Sampson's ephemeral success.

So far it is evident that the Sick Man's intervention in Cyprus is justified. But such an intervention took the proportions of a full-scale invasion, and justification for such an act is non-existant. The new governments of Greece, headed by Premier Karamanlis, and Cyprus, headed by Acting President Clerides, have made their peaceful intentions known to the Sick Man. Both governments, Greek and Cypriote, have recognized the need for peaceful negotiations and have done their best to conduct such negotiations. Unfortunately, the Sick Man has drunk too much of the wine of success and has preferred to ignore and humiliate the new governments of Greece and Cyprus. It is unequivocally clear that the Geneva peace talks were nothing more than a farce; a farce which came as a result of the Sick Man's refusal to view Greece and Cyprus as equal to himself. According to Turkish opinion, Greece was a defeated nation and Geneva was nothing more than a place where the Sick Man would make outrageous demands, and Greece and cyprus would accept them. Greece finally ended the farce by walking out. Since then, Turkish military attacks have resulted to Turkish control of 40 percent of the island, 200,000 Greek-Cypriote refugees, economic chaos, massacres from both sides, and the unfortunate death of U.S. Ambassador to Cyprus Roger P. Davies.

The Sick Man's Premier, Ecevit, has been hailed in the American press as a "political intellectual" and as a "moderate left winger" (N.Y. Times, August 23, 1974). He is neither. A political intellectual would have the common sense and farsightedness to realize that Turkey will not benefit from her invasion of Cyprus, and will not reap the desired fruit of her adverturism. Although Greece will not declare war, the Greek-Cypriotes are a potent and effective force as guerilla fighters. Just ask the British. The Sick Man is creating his own Viet Nam; A Viet Nam which will be the result of the so-called "intellectualism" of Ecevit.

Ecevit is also called a "moderate left-winger". Isn't such a label rather far-fetched? The Sick Man's experience in popular government is virtually nonexistant. The sultans and the military have ruled the Sick Man for hundreds of years. When such a political oppression exists, the cultivation of politics is impossible. Therefore, a left-winger in Turkey can be nothing more than a right-wing liberal in America. How can a left-winger be elected as a Premier in a country so conservative and backward as Turkey?

Ecevit's decision to invade Cyprus can be understood a little better if we analyze his political position, his greed and warlikeness, and Turkey's wish to redeem herself for her military impotency which was so "brilliantly" displayed during the First and Second World Wars. The last two reasons need no further ellaboration. But the first does. Ecevit's People's Party has been in a very unstable position, since its upset victory, due to the economic chaos which Ecevit has created-but then, the Turks have never had economic stability. Ecevit's future was very dark, and he, being dubiously perceptive, decided to divert the peoples' attention from domestic to international affairs. Such a move has been, so far, very effective. So far. The Sick Man will suffer very much because of his greed and hard-headedness.

Since the Truman Doctrine, the Sick Man has been dressing himself up with luxurious items which were not available to him until the 1950's. Cars, railroads, tanks,and missiles replaced the rags which had made up the Sick Man's wardrobe. Which goes to show you: you can dress them up but you just can't take them anywhere.

How can we civilize those barbarians? Ecevit will appreciate your suggestions.

Waiting waiting waiting waiting

By ROBERT SHEMELIGIAN

Waiting lines are two common irritants on this campus. I've almost lost my cool a few times while slowly shuffling along those endless processions. Yes, waiting is such a hassle and last week I again found the truth of this statement.

Last Wednesday my tennis partner and I visited the Sylvan Courts and wound up sitting on the grass impatiently waiting. We were the third in line and after over an hour's wait we finally got a chance to play a set. Three of the eight courts were occupied by the same groups from the time we arrived to the time we departed (2 hours).

The weather last weekend was beautiful and, as I suspected, we couldn't get near a tennis court on campus (we tried them all).

Any UMie who has ever swung a tennis racket knows about the tremendous shortage of tennis courts on campus. We have some thirty courts servicing our 23,000 students. Tennis has been enjoying a boom in popularity recently and a mere 30 courts is just not enough. Unfortunately, I don't see the University solving this problem in the near future.

Waiting in lines can be very aggravating but most lines in the University will take you to such things as applications waiting to be filled out, some guy who enjoys giving people the run-around, or a dining commons meal. Obviously, the wait is less painful because most people are in no great hurry to reach his/her destination; however, people waiting for a tennis court are usually anxious to play and there is always the lingering chance that a court won't open for hours.

There is one simple answer to the problem: tennis players should limit their playing time to one hour if there are people waiting for a court. So far, this has not been done. Some players volley for hours despite throngs of people waiting behind the fence, other players bring 3 or 4 friends along with a case of Gatorade, and play tennis for the day. Of course, there are many considerate people limit their play in order to give everyone a chance, and it's too bad their good manners don't rub off on everyone.

Tennis court squatters in all their arrogance and infantilism should be stopped. This could be done by the establishment of court attendants, or by the posting of signs stating one-hour limits. These measures; however, should not be needed for the simple reason that people should not have to be told about tennis etiquette. An hour's play for everyone is the only fair way to operate the courts and the students should be able to handle that. Violators of this rule are abusing a privilege and should be told to leave.

We have a chance to eliminate at least one of our waiting lines (something the University never seems to be able to do); let's take it.

Busing—a racial question

Wanted: a person (preferably large, husky male) to drive Boston school bus mornings and afternoons. Route covers from South Boston to the Roxbury section of the city. Person must have patience with children and a thorough knowledge of the arts of self defense in order to deal with rude, screaming immature adults who have childish, violent tendencies.

This past Monday an estimated 4,000 to 10,000 people (depending on whose estimation you prefer) gathered in front of the Kennedy Building in Boston to voice their protest on the busing of their children. That was their right. However, the people were armed with tomatoes and eggs and by the time they reached the plaza they were an ugly, barbaric mob. When Senator Edward Kennedy arrived to explain his position on the issue they confronted him with such slogans as "Why don't you put your one-legged son a bus to Roxbury?" and "You should be shot like your brothers were". They then unplugged his microphone so that he couldn't speak and forced him to take cover in the Kennedy Building from the barrage of fruit and eggs. Women were said to have punched and kicked him as he was led away from the platform. One can only guess on what would have happened if someone had actually brought a gun. The whole scene was really quite disgusting.

Busing is a sensitive issue in Boston. Politically, it has been a Mexican hat over which major officials have been dancing for the past ten years. But with the decision of Judge Arthur Garrity to bus schoolchildren most of the politicians are taken off the hook. Busing was made into a law and every good political official must comply with the law. But elected officials who make the decisions and the speeches aren't directly involved with busing. Their children go to private schools in private cars and buses.

Yes, busing is an issue that belongs to the people and to the children of the city. It belongs to the white Irish and Italians who object to having their children bussed to inferior schools. It belongs too, to the poorer blacks who have been subject for years to second rate educations which result in second rate jobs, second rate housing....

And as a result, contrary to the opinions of Mrs. Hicks and Mr. Kerrigan, busing is a dirty racial problem which has removed the thin veil of Boston "liberalism" to expose the true color of the city--white. It can't be denied. There is definately now a growing tension between whites and blacks of the city. Parents are, by such actions as last Mondays fiasco, instilling deep fears into the minds of children. "Be careful of those niggers son, they carry big knives and will try to rape your sister." What other conclusion could a child come to when his or her mother and father physically assaults a person to prevent what has become law.

Meanwhile there has been a real rape going on in the ghetto schools. The rape of young talented people who, because they are of a certain color or national origin are labeled as not worthy of the same advantages as whites. This color line was officially drawn, in my estimation, on Monday when a predominately white mob was moved to violence to keep their childrenout of black schools and black children out of their white neighborhoods.

If only those same parents who assaulted Ted Kennedy would turn out at their childrens new schools and demonstrate a fraction of the energy they exhibited Monday toward positive educational improvements, then maybe busing really is a solution. And if white kids start coming back from school with a few new words, maybe some eyes will be opened and maybe people will begin to see where the problems really lie.

Boltwood needs you

To the Editor:

Lately we've been hearing alot about revolutions, and there's certainly a wide variety from which to choose. You can get off on anything from American patriotism to the youth counterculture. You can make changes that last for 200 years, or you can carry a placard for a week and boycott meat.

Well, there's a social revolution that's been gathering steam for the past 5 years, and it too is making change. Students, volunteering their time and energy, have insured that Belchertown State School, a residential facility for the mentally retarded, will no longer be an isolated community. Volunteers from the five college area, developing and implementing a wide range of programs for Belchertown ave not only served the School's residents, but are educating area residents as well.

The volunteers are members of the Boltwood-Belchertown Project, a student-run organization currently in the process of recruiting new members. Any student can be a volunteer, regardless of his/ her major or abilities. Informational meetings will be held from September 16-19th on the five college campuses.

Don't join Boltwood because you want to pad your college record. Don't join because you want to feel selfrighteous about "helping those less fortunate". Don't join Boltwood because you expect a personalized "thank you" written across the sky. Think about joining Boltwood because it's a revolution that has already made change and simply wants to change more.

Thanks

To the Editor:

I would like to express the appreciation of the End of the Summer Concert Committee to the Physical Plant for the great job they did in getting the End of the Summer Concert off the ground.

Too many times the efforts of the Physical Plant go unnoticed because they quietly sit in the background and let others take credit for the work they have done. This effort on their part does not only happen when a special event comes along but is constantly being called upon in the daily operation of the University system

It is in order that we all express our sincere gratitude and many thanks to the Physical Plant for a successful Concert and a job well done.

A government of murderers...

To the Editor:

The secret ballot makes a secret government and a secret government is a secret band of robbers and murderers. Thus, the Railroad Strike of 1877, Homestead, the Pullman Strike, Wounded Knee, 1890, The East St. Louis Race Riot, the Crushing of the Kronstadt Rebellion, Bonus March, the Sharpsvill Massacre, My Lai, Attica, Harlan County, on and on. governments have always protected their own interests in contradiction to the interests or liberties of the masses. Do not expect the ruling class to prosecute themselves for crimes against the people.

If Nixon were of the lower strata in our class oriented society, he would be in the dungeons provided by ruling class Fascists like Rockefeller. It is important to understand how the Rockefeller family institutionalized the prison system in this country.

The fact of the matter is that when the organizations we create are structured with hierarchical power avenues, we're building for a class society, whether present or future. Richard Nixon is a living symbolic manifestation of hierarchical power avenues. The only good government is a dead one - Towards a Syndicalist Revolution. . .

Amnesty for one amnesty for all

There was some reservation on our part to advocate full amnesty for imprisoned or expatriated war resisters, but not any longer. If the worst and most criminal politician in our two-hundred year history, Richard Nixon, can be catagorically excused from any judicial action then certainly a person who slipped quietly away to foreign soil instead of killing in the name of justice should be given the same treatment.

The month old promise of President Ford to heal the wounds of Watergate is now defunct. The wounds were not healed by his pardon of Nixon...they were simply bandaged. Private enterprise, the press, will continue to work at healing the wounds. There is only one cure: complete and absolute truth about the matter. It may take years, but the truth will indeed surface.

In the meantime there sits tens of thousands of draft resisters in Canada, Sweden, and American jails...far less harmless to our system than a corrupt former ex-president whose influence still is part of the attitudes of some fifty million Americans who believe he never was guilty of any wrongdoing.

Many of these young men are brothers of college age people now; people who have witnessed the tenets of democracy turned into a shambles and the attitudes of founding fathers into a sick joke. There will be no healing of the wounds of young Americans unless the draft resisters are released and welcomed with the same absence of condition that Richard Nixon was granted.

We will believe in Gerry Ford's healing promises when the resisters are freed, for now we think he is just another in a series of politicians that mouth equal justice under the law nostrums, while practicing blatantly discriminatory policies.

The opinions expressed in this space are those of the majority of the editors.

Pardon granted to Nixon should be given to all

By GILBERT J. SALK

Gilbert J. Salk is a former Collegian editor, who graduated a few years ago. He used to write the column CULTURNATIVES. This column marks the return of CULTURNATIVES on a weekly basis.

There is no way that I can write about anything other than THE PARDON.

culturnatives

My immediate reaction was that Nixon should not have been pardoned--that his behavior was totally reprehensible and indefensible. I felt that Ford had made a major error and, as all the pundits are saying, that "the honeymoon is over." Be that as it may, I think there are some other considerations, and I'd rather devote some space to them than repeat what you've all heard and read many times over, I'm sure.

There is a lesson in Ford's move which I'm positive almost nobody will learn. In one sense, he did the right thing. He tempered justice with mercy, he responded to the fact that Nixon would be under incredible emotional stress during a prolonged wait for trial, and he exhibited concern for Nixon's family. (They're naive and stupid, but we don't punish people for that, usually.)

That is good justification for granting pardon--on the condition that everyone in the same circumstances receives the same treatment.

We should grant the same mercy and concern to poor white, black, and brown brothers and sisters who are left, in jail (which is more owrse than prison, by the way), for months and even years--simply waiting for trial!

When we think about letting Nixon off the hook (please pay attention, those of you who support the pardon), we should think about the Tombs in New York, which is full of men who have been arrested for crimes far less serious than those Nixon is accused of, and who, like Nixon, have not been proved guilty of anything. We should think of men and women who, although "presumed innocent until proved guilty," have been forced to spend several months in cages, with no privacy, with terrible food, with roaches and rats, while they await trial--often to be found innocent or to have charges dropped. And we should think of Richard Nixon suffering as he awaited justice--suffering in a San Clemente estate, surrounded by his family, waited upon by a staff we paid for, playing golf or walking on the beach to forget his problems.

I'm not saying Nixon isn't suffering--I'm sure he is. But his suffering deserves only as much of our attention and compassion as we give to the rest of our brothers and sisters.

THE PARDON was granted because of the burden on Nixon's family. Can't we also show the same concern for the families of other accused criminals? Don't they also suffer because they are worried about the fate of someone they love? Aren't they deprived by the incarceration of a member of their family? The only difference between the two cases is that Nixon gets more attention in the press than a "common" accused criminal. He also gets several hundred thousand dollars and an armed guard to protect him. Most families, especially if they are poor or members of a minority group, losse an important part of the income they need for survival, and the only armed guard they see is the one separating them from the incarcerated member of the family.

Undoubtedly, Nixon's family is suffering, and we should show compassion for them. But we must demonstrate the same compassion for the families of all who are under the same strain.

Mister Ford expressed concern for the fact that it would be months before Nixon could receive a fair trial, and that would be a denial of

Silk wall hangings to be displayed

An exhibition of silk batik wall hangings by Carol Eastes will be presented at the Leverett Craftsmen and Artists in Leverett, Massachusetts, September 15-26. The show, 'Mandalas and Sunsigns', will open with a reception from 2 to 5 on Sunday, September 15. A brief lecture-demonstration will be given during the afternoon.

Batik is a complex wax resist dyeing process. The design is dyed into the fabric by carefully controlled applications of beeswax alternating with successive overdyes. The use of pure silk permits a particularly wide variety of textures and vibrant colors.

Ms. Eastes joined LCA as the resident batikist only a month ago. This is her first one person show in the area. She began to batik seven years ago as an art major at Rockford College in Illinois. While in India on a Fulbright Fellowship she studied local textile arts and executied a series of batiks based on Indian mythological themes. Her mandalas are variations on the ancient Eastern meditation symbol which centers the viewer's awareness through contemplation of a circle.

Ms. Eastes will offer a course in silk batik at LCA on Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday evenings, October 8 through November 14. The course will explore basic techniques, then focus on batik as a means of self-expression. It will be flexible enough to accomodate experienced batikists as well as beginners.

Bookstore here today

The ATID Bookmobile will be visiting the UMass campus today. The Bookmobile is a traveling bookstore of Judaica, with several thousand paperback and hardback books on Jewish philosophy, festivals, prayer and history, as well as fiction, poetry, and children's books. There is also a selection of Hebrew records and posters for sale.

The Bookmobile will be parked at the main entrance of the Student Union from 10:00 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. Many books can be purchased at a 20 per cent student discount.

At 4:30 p.m. in SU 302 Danny Horwitz, the driver-manager of the Bookmobile will tell of his experiences with the Bookmobile at campuses all over the U.S.

The Bookmobile is brought to you by: The United Synagog of America, ATID (its collegiate affiliate), and UMass Hillel.

Would you hire you?

Of course you would.
You work hard. Care about what you do. And you know your job inside and out.
That's what everybody says.
And for most of us, it's true. But it's also true that we could all do better. Whether we're doctors or teachers, lathe operators or telephone operators, legislators or longshoremen, bankers or union officials... every one of us.
And we'll all have more to show for it.
More money, for one thing. Because we'll be giving each other our money's worth for the products, the services and even the government we pay for.
For another thing, we'll be giving America better ammunition to slug it out with our foreign competitors. Not just here. All around the world. That would help bring the lopsided balance of payments back onto our side. And help make your dollar worth more.
Best of all, as we hit our stride, we'll be protecting jobs here at home. For ourselves and the future. And we'll have a deeper sense of pride in the jobs we've got. So maybe we'll find our work as fresh and challenging as it was the first day on the job.
Which brings us back to the original question.
Would you hire you?

America. It only works as well as we do.

THE PARDON is a "moral blot" on the nation

the right to a speedy trial. He's right. Nobody should be forced to wait months with the burden of an upcoming trial hanging over their heads.

But, again, let's examine the case of the average citizen. Take something simple like a speeding ticket. You all probably know someone who's been through that ordeal. You are ordered to appear in court on a certain day. You take the day off from work. Unless you're salaried, you lose 20 per cent of your week's pay. You sit in court for hours waiting for your case to come up. When it finally does, you find out that the arresting officer isn't there. Of course, the judge grants the prosecution a delay. So you have to take another day off, at the loss of another 20 per cent of a week's pay. And for some reason there's another delay and another, and another.

Now go a step further. Let's say you were arrested as a suspect in the robbery of a package store. You go to jail. You have no money for bail which the judge decided to set at, say, $2,000. So you wait. Your trial date is set for two weeks later. You miss work, maybe get fired. Your family has to learn to get along without you, and without your income, and without the food your income provides. Maybe they have to go on Welfare. Your trial date comes, and your court-appointed lawyer is unable to appear (he has a paying case.) So the judge grants a continuance, and you wait another month. A prosecution witness fails to show, and there's another delay. Back to jail you go.

Yes, Richard Nixon should maybe be pardoned because he can't get a speedy trial.

I can easily stomach the kind of reform to the system of "justice" we practice (but in 200 years have failed to perfect) in this country, but I find myself sickened by this example of obscene favoritism.

When pardon becomes the common result of the inability of any citizen to receive a speedy fair trial, I will stand and applaud, but until then, THE PARDON, although constitutionally legal, is a new moral blot on a nation which sorely needs to clean itself up. I don't know if Ford can reverse his pardon, but he should, unless he is willing to extend it to all who are unfairly treated.
Peace.

Finast SUPERMARKETS
GREAT NEWS FROM FINAST!

THERE ARE NEW NAMES ON OUR MEAT PACKAGES!

Same great quality ... same great values but now the guesswork and confusion in buying meats is gone. Meat names, up to now, have been confusing from one store to another. May cause blackouts

Utilities plan to limit growth

NEW YORK [AP] — A growing number of utilities recently have cut back or postponed plans to expand their power-making capabilities, a move that some analysts say could spell blackouts or even an economic slowdown in 3 to 5 years.

Based on estimates by the Edison Electric Institute in New York, a non-profit trade association, as well as studies by other utility observers, 40 or more major utilities this year have put off or eliminated more than $10 billion in planned capital spending deemed essential to meeting the nation's electrical needs in the next 5 years.

Many of these projects are nuclear power plants, which the industry is hoping will eventually cut its fuel costs but cost a lot to build.

During the first week in August alone, at least seven utilities - Detroit Edison Co., Philadelphia Electric Co., Potomac Electric Power Co., New York State Electric & Gas Co., Tampa Electric Co., Dayton Power & Light Co. and Columbus & Southern Ohio Electric Co. - announced they had either deferred or canceled a total of $1.54 billion in capital spending slated for the next three to five years.

Virginia Electric & Power Co., which deferred $281 million in capital plans in late July, said it was conceivable the utility could go out of business if its financial base isn't more secure.

the environment

Many, like Tampa Electric Co., say they have postponed their plans because, ironically, their customers are heeding the call to conserve electricity, thus cutting down the utility's sales and available funds.

In addition, fuel costs for the utility industry have tripled on average this year, and oil and natural gas is in short supply in some areas.

James McCabe, utility analyst for the Wall Street firm of Lehman Brothers says, "The real underlying reason for these spending cutbacks is not lower growth but an inability to finance these projects."

Industry earnings declined 15 per cent in the first quarter of 1974, McCabe estimates, and an additional 1 per cent in the second quarter even with the help of about $1 billion in rate increases during the first half. The average residential electric rate, he says, went up 35 per cent in that period.

Even worse, the utility industry's credit rating has sunk in the eyes of prospective investors ever since Consolidated Edison Co. of New York, Inc. omitted its common stock dividend last April. Since then, the industry's health has been questioned on both the stock and bond markets, which for years has been the primary sources of its capital.

In some cases, even a rate hike hasn't prevented financially strapped utilities from deferring capital spending plans.

U. S. will clean up old nuclear site

WASHINGTON [UPI] — The Defense Nuclear Agency announced Saturday it is seeking ways to clean up Eniwetok Atoll in the Pacific, a nuclear test site from 1948 to 1958, so that its native inhabitants can return.

"The proposed project, the agency said, "is designed to achieve two goals: To remove and dispose of material that could be hazardous to human habitation and to provide that rehabilitation necessary to permit return of the Eniwetok people to the atoll."

Eniwetok is one of the 2,141 Micronesian islands scattered over 3 million square miles of the Pacific. It and Bikini atoll were the scenes of 93 atomic and hydrogen bomb exvlosions.

Thousands of Eniwetok and Bikini natives were evacuated to other islands before what Bikini King Juda then described as "the big boom."

The agency said the Atomic Energy Commission had conducted extensive surveys and analyses of existing radiological and physical conditions on Eniwetok and "has recommended specific radiological cleanup criteria that will permit the safe resettlement of the atoll."

New England may avoid oil shortages if winter is severe

EAST PROVIDENCE, R.I. [AP] — New England could avoid a serious winter oil supply shortage unless this weather is unusually severe, a Federal Energy Administration official said Monday.

"Every indication is if it's a normal winter supply will stretch out and everyone will get through it. The real problem will come if it is a rough winter," Joseph Pecoraro, regional energy resource development director, said here.

He spoke at a meeting of fuel oil dealers from Rhode Island and southeastern Massachusetts.

He said Congress is expected to extend the mandatory allocation program for at least four months to ensure winter supplies. The program is scheduled to expire in December.

Executive Director Charles Burkhardt of the New England Fuel Institute said a recent decision by oil-producing countries to cut production could again create problems for the region.

Effects of pollution on ocean life probed

VANCOUVER [UPI] — The first of six enormous test tubes holding more than 2,000 tons of water Saturday was placed in Saanich Inlet off Vancouver Island as part of a study of the long term effects of pollutants on ocean life.

A spokesman for the University of British Columbia (UBC) said installation of the first tube, made of clear plastic, began early Friday with the flotation of its 30-foot diameter mouth. The shaft will extend 90 feet below the surface.

The five-year, $10 million project is an international, venture involving United States, British and Canadian scientists.

The UBC spokesman said the tubes provide a "quarantined, yet completely natural environment." They will be treated with zinc hydrocarbons and copper, expected to alter the food web inside the containers.

Catalytic converters may cause pollution

RALEIGH, N.C. [AP] — Studies have confirmed that the catalytic converters on many 1975 automobiles will cause an air pollution problem of their own, an Environmental Protection Agency official said Monday.

The converters will be standard equipment on about 70 per cent of the 1975 cars in order to meet federal air pollution standards.

John Moran, director of the EPA's $3.5-million study of auto emission problems, said the study confirmed that the converters will produce emissions of sulfuric acid.

Moran and his colleagues first warned of the sulfuric acid problem in November. Since then, they have been testing prototype vehicles with the new converters.

They have found the converter-equipped cars give off .05 grams of sulfuric acid per mile in a fine mist from the exhaust systems, while cars without converters give off no sulfuric acid, Moran said in an interview.

He said the sulfuric acid emissions could develop into a health hazard in two years. The problem will affect people with existing respiratory ailments who breathe in areas which have many vehicles.

He noted the EPA does not require the converters. It has, however, forced auto manufacturers to build cars that meet air quality standards passed by Congress in 1970.

The converters change carbon monoxide and other hydrocarbons to water and harmless gases. But they apparently also cause sulfur and water in gasoline to combine with oxygen to produce sulfuric acid.

Primaries attract national notice

By The Associated Press

Voters in 13 states and the District of Columbia chose candidates yesterday for 16 governorships, eight Senate seats and a variety of congressional, state and local offices.

In most states, incumbent governors and senators were either unopposed or had only token opposition.

Chief attention was focused on the Democratic battle for governor of New York, in which Rep. Hugh L. Carey of Brooklyn sought to overcome organization support for former off-track betting chief Howard J. Samuels.

The Carey-Samuels winner will run in November against Republican Gov. Malcolm Wilson, unopposed for nomination to the post he took over last December when Nelson A. Rockefeller resigned.

States holding balloting on the last primary election day before the Nov. 5 elections were Arizona, Colorado, Connecticut, Florida, Maryland, Massachusetts, Minnesota, New Hampshire, New York, Rhode Island, Utah, Vermont and Wisconsin.

In eight states, incumbent governors ran in primaries with only Republicans John Vanderhoff of Colorado and Meldrim Thomson of New Hampshire facing serious challenges.

Vanderhoff was opposed by William Daniels, a millionaire Denver businessman while the conservative Thomson was matched against state Senate President David Nixon in a conservative-moderate battle.

Other governors seeking new terms were Republican Francis W. Sargent of Massachusetts and Democrats Marvin Mandel of Maryland, Reubin Askew of Florida, Patrick J. Lucey of Wisconsin, Wendell Anderson of Minnesota and Thomas P. Salmon of Vermont.

In Arizona, five Republicans and four Democrats sought the seat of retiring Republican Gov. Jack Williams.

Of the incumbent senators seeking new terms, only Republican Charles McC. Mathias Jr. of Maryland had primary opposition, from J. Ross Pierpont, a conservative Baltimore physician and perennial candidate.

Democratic gubernatorial race viewed as close

Sargent, a liberal who has held the governor's office for six years, and Sheehan, a conservative, waged the most aggressive intra-party campaigns.

Dukakis and Quinn acknowledged past Democratic bloodbaths which irreparably damaged their party's candidate for governor in the final election and maintained an uneasy truce for most of the primary campaign.

This was the first time in recent history that an incumbent Republican governor was challenged in the primary.

All three challengers spent much of their time attacking the Sargent administration's policies, while the governor invested much of his energy in driving a wedge between himself and the conservative wing of the GOP.

This was the first year that pre-primary nominating conventions were not required by state law.

The Republicans held an informal convention anyway. And although Sargent won the endorsement, he was embarassed by Sheehan's showing-30 per cent of the delegate vote.

Sargent then embarked on a strategy of identifying his challenger with partisan conservative politics and attacking the conservative wing of the GOP.

Sargent's concern was that a low voter turnout could result in an upset. His strategy was to attract interest in the slow-starting campaign and appeal to independent voters who could cast ballots in either the Republican or the Democratic primary.

Dukakis, 41, served eight years in the Massachusetts House before losing a bid for lieutenant governor in 1970.

Quinn, 46, is a former speaker of the House who was appointed attorney general by the legislature in 1969 to fill a vacancy. He won election in 1970.

Sargent, 59, was elected lieutenant governor in 1966 and became acting governor when John A. Volpe vacated the office to join the Nixon administration in 1969. Sargent won the job in the 1970 election, defeating the Democratic ticket headed by Boston Mayor Kevin H. White which included Dukakis in the second spot.

CHILE
One Year After The Coup

By MIGUEL RIVERA
News Opinion

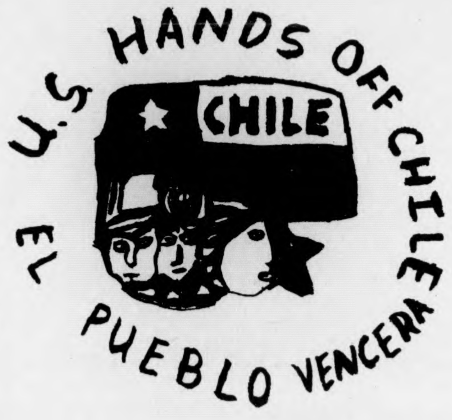
The Chilean Junta must fall. Of all the modern fascist structures in the world, the Chilean Junta is the most fearful. Nobody really knows how many human beings have been killed, mutilated, psychologically destroyed, imprisoned or persecuted. When the religious leaders of the country protest, it means things must be out of proportion.

For a year, the Chilean people have undergone the misfortune of fascism. Since the first day of the coup, the most aware countries in the world have been protesting the assault. It meant not only a violation of the Chileans' right to a freely elected government, but also a violation of Latinq American political sensibility.

In its first meeting of this year, AHORA, the Latin students organization on campus, approved a motion expressing sympathy for the cause of the fallen in Chile under the dictatorship of La Junta Militar. The IN MEMORIAM solidarity expression came up as a product of the Latin students preoccupation with the life and happiness of the Chilean people, especially workers and students.

Another motion was also presented and approved unanimously condemning the recent police brutality exerted against Third World companeros in Newark, N.J. With such motions, AHORA ties itself closely with the community issues that, directly or indirectly, affect the life of UMass Latin students.

That is how we write the first page of this history. My people and America will write the rest.
Salvador Allende



Asi se escribe la primera pagina de esta historia. Mi pueblo y America escribiran el resto.

News Analysis

The days of September 4-11 have been designated as the week of international solidarity with the people of Chile.

The fascist military coup in Chile last September 11 was the ultimate weapon used by reactionary forces within Chile to destroy the program of the "Unidad Popular" government of Salvador Allende. This campaign began as soon as Allende was elected on September 4, 1970.

Although the U.S. government denied any complicity in the internal affairs of Chile, it has recently been released through the New York Times that over eight million dollars was allocated through the CIA to disrupt the Popular Unity government from its inception; bribery of Chilean Senators to refuse to confirm Allendes election.

When this failed, new attempts were made by those who feared the power and program of the Popular Unity government, including economic sabotage, the hoarding of goods, induced shortages, black-marketing, owner-initiated strikes and lock-outs. There were assasinations of Socialists, Communists, and moderates, as well as members of the military committed to protecting the constitution.

The Chilean right-wing tried to regain political power, but were defeated again in the election of March 1973 when the Unidad Popular received more support than it had received in 1970.

Frustrated by the defeat of all their activities, the reactionaries decided to change the rules of the game and resort to military terror. However, the first attempted coup of June 1973 was crushed. The assassination attempt on President Allende failed as well.

Finally on September eleventh the united forces of the Chilean military took political power by force in an attempt to wipe out all the gains made by the Popular Unity government in Chile.

President Salvador Allende was murdered while defending the Moneda Palace in Santiago from Bazooka, tank, and air attack. Then the mass murdering of staunch U.P. supporters took place throughout the working-class districts of all the cities. Thousands were rounded up, put in prisons and the National Stadium in Santiago to be murdered, tortured or put in concentration camps. The trade unions and the press were abolished. The universities were taken over by the generals, and massive book burnings and destruction of art followed.

Allende's Last Message to Chile

Alocution del presidente Salvador Allende transmititda por Radio Magallanes el 11 de septiembre de 1973:

Trabajodores de mi patria!: Quiero agradecerles la lealtad que siempre tuvieron, la confianza que depositaron en un hombre que solo fue interprete de grandes anhelos de justicia, que empeno su palabra en que respetaria la constitucion y la ley, y asi lo hizo. Es este momento definitivo, el ultimo en que yo pueda dirigirme a ustedes. Pero que aprovechen la laccion. El capital foraneo, el imperialismo, unido a la reaccion, creo el clima para que las Fuerzas Armadas rompieran su tradicion: la que les senalo Schneider y que reafirmara el comandante Araya, victima del mismo sector social que hoy estara en sus casas esperando con mano ajena conquistar el poder para sequir defendiendo sus granjerias y sus privilegios. Me dirijo, sobre todo, a la modesta mujer de nuestra tierra: a la campesina que creyo en nosotros; a la obrera que trabajo mas, a la madre que supo de su preocupacion por los ninos. Me dirijo a los profesionales de la patria, a los profesionales patriotas, a los que hace dias estan trabajando contra la sedicion auspiciada por los colegios profesionales, colegios de clase para defender tambien las ventaias de una sociedad capitalista.

Me dirijo a la juventud, a aquellos que cantaron y entregaron su alegria y su espiritu de lucha; me dirijo al hombre di Chile, al obrero, al campesino, al intelectual, a aquellos que seran perseguidos, porque en nuestro paid el fascismo ya estuvo hace muchas horas presente en los atentados terroristas, volando los puentes, cortando las vias ferreás, destruyendo los oleoductos y los gasoductos, frente al silencio de los que tenian la obligacion de proceder...(Interrupcion)...la historia los juzgara.

POEM: They Receive Instructions Against Chile

By
Pablo
Neruda

But we have to see behind all them, there is something behind the traitors and the gnawing rats, an empire which sets the table,
and serves up the nourishment and the bullets.
They want to repeat in you their great success in Greece.
Greek playboys at the banquet, and bullets for the people in the mountains: we'll have to hang, kill, lose men, sink the murderous knife held to us from New York, we'll have to use fire to break the spirit of the man who was emerging in all countries as if born from the earth that had been splashed with blood
We have to arm Chiang and the vicious Videla, give them money for prisons, wings
so they can bomb their own populations, give them a handout, a few dollars, and they do the rest, they lie, bribe, dance on the dead bodies and their first ladies wear the most expensive minks.
The suffering of the people does not matter: copper executives need this sacrifice: facts are facts:
the generals retire from the army and serve as vice-presidents of the Chuquicamata Copper Firm, and in the nitrate works the "Chilean" general decides with his trailingsword how much the natives may mention when they ask for a raise in wages.
In this way they decide from above, from the roll of dollars, in this way the dwarf traitor receives his instructions,
and the generals act as the police force,
and the trunk of the country rots.

Many state congressioal contests were unopposed

Eight incumbents were unopposed for renomination. In addition to Conte and Cronin, they were U.S. Reps. Edward P. Boland, a Springfield Democrat in the 2nd District; Robert F. Drinan, a Newton Democrat in the 4th District; Torbert H. Macdenald, [illegible] Democrat in the 7th District; Thomas P. O'Neill Jr., Cambridge Democrat and House majority leader in the 8th District; John Joseph Moakley, Boston Democrat in the 9th District; Margaret M. Heckler, Wellesley Republican in the 10th District; and Gerry E. Studds, Cohasset Democrat in the 12th District.

Unopposed challengers in the Congressional primaries were Democrat Barry F. Monahan of Fall River, a criminal justice planner, in the 10th; former Republican RVEP. Laurence Curtis of Brookline in the 4th; and Republican J. Alan MacKay of Hingham, a lawyer and former national director of Young Americans for Freedom, in the 12th District.

In the 3rd District, there was no clear favorite.

Anderson is a Holy Cross College teacher; D'Amico is a Worcester school committeeman; Early is a state representative and vice chairman of the House Ways and Means Committee; Miss Gatti is a Worcester public school official; Mullaney is a 'former mayor of Worcester; Hmura is a sign painter; and Miss O'Neil is an Auburn selectman.

On the GOP side, Lionett is a state representative and Wheeler a painting contractor.

In the 1st District, Conte's opposition included Manning, a lawyer; and Mosakowski, a library assistant at the University of Massachusetts.

Harrington's opponent Kowalski is a Boston State College teacher who lost to the incumbent two years ago in the 6th District.

Burke's opponent, Tierney, is a Boston city counciler who sought the Democratic nomination in the 11th District.

In the 5th District, seeking to oppose Cronin, was Tsongas, a county commissioner and former Lowell city councilor; and Madden, an attorney and former state senator.

The state's present Congressional delegation includes nine Democrats, including Donohue, who is retiring, and three Republicans.

Lilith plays benefit

Lilith is playing a benefit dance-concert tonight for the Employment Work Group of the Valley Women's Union. The work group has been primarily active in supporting area waitresses' organizing struggles, though they are also concerned with the unionizing efforts of Hampshire College clerical workers.

Tonight's proceeds will benefit several groups: the work group's June conference on waitressing and organizing; the waitresses' union at Joe's Cafe which was on strike for 7 weeks last spring and is still involved in litigation; the Boston Women's Law Collective for advice on labor law; and the Independent Restaurant Workers' Union for their assistance and advice.

The dance, sponsored by the Southwest Women's Center, is tonight, 8-11 p.m. in Hampden Dining Commons. A donation of $1.50 will be requested at the door. Anyone wishing further information on the Valley Women's Union can call 585-2011.

Success to kill medical clinic

AURORA, Ill. [UPI] — Aurora's free medical clinic for the poor may be forced out of business because its too successful.

The clinic is the brainchild of Dr. Eugene R. Balthazar who wanted to do something for this town 40 miles west of Chicago where he has lived and prospered for so many years.

But Dr. Balthazar, 72, did not expect the tremendous need for free medical care in the community. His funds are running out and he may have to take his gift back and close the clinic.

For almost three years Balthazar has run and financed the clinic, accepting free, medical supplies and services, adamantly refusing any contributions from the public. He pays the salary of the clinic's nurse and receptionist.

"We turned it (the contributions) all down. We sent it all back," Balthazar said. "I wanted it that way. I owe the community a lot. They've been generous to me."

The elderly physician said his motives were not entirely altruistic: "I enjoy it. Also you know maybe I would like to dispose of my money where I want it. You don't take it with you."

Balthazar said he expected to see about 25 to 35 patients a day. Up to 175 persons have used the clinic in one day.

"The cost of medical care has skyrocketed like anything else," he said. "We are in a time of inflation. This is for poor people. They cannot afford medical care. They have to cut corners wherever they can."

Balthazar could appeal to the public, but he refuses to do so, believing an appeal would contradict what started out as a gift to the community.

He also refuses to seek government funds.

Know the benefits that VA provides

EDITOR'S NOTE: Veterans and their families are asking thousands of questions concerning the benefits their Government provides for them through the Veterans Administration. Below are some representative queries. Additional information may be obtained at any VA office.

Q — What is VA's attitude toward charges that the Vietnam veteran is not getting a fair shake?

A — Vietnam era veterans make up 24.2 per cent of the U.S. veteran population, and 30.3 per cent of VA's $13 billion plus annual budget is spent in their behalf. While small bands of veterans claim wholesale alienation for the young veteran population, nearly five million of these veterans are now at work in the civilian labor force and millions more are in training. In fact, 2.6 million Vietnam veterans have trained at college level under the GI Bill - topping the 12 year record of the World War II program.

Q — How many veterans and servicemen have received education benefits under the three GI Bills?

A — Nearly 15 million have trained, beginning with the enactment of the World War II original GI Bill. The cost of all three GI Bills through April 1974 was $29.6 billion.

Q — What state pays the highest bonus to its Vietnam era veterans?

A — According to information available to the Veterans Administration, North Dakota's, $1,600 is the highest maximum bonus paid in 16 states and Guam.

Natural Foods
Co-op

"LOWEST PRICES"

35 N. Pleasant St., (in the Alley)

The Yellow Sun Natural Foods co-op formed in 1971 from a need to provide natural foods to the people of Amherst and vicinity at the lowest prices possible.

The Yellow Sun Co-operative is owned by almost 1,000 of your neighbors and makes no profit except that the member-owners pay lower prices in the store for their food.

Every product in the store has two prices, for example, 61-73 lb. Members pay only the lower price. What keeps costs down is that members work 1 hour per person per month.

So if you'd like to become a member come talk to us at 23 N. Pleasant St. (in the Alley) behind the Equinox Natural Foods Cafe. We'll take the time to show you around.

Remember — co-ops are owned and operated by the customers.

Symposium on nuclear plants announced

A coalition of independent "Five-College" groups announced plans for a multi-media program of speakers, workshops and films, to be held in Amherst September 18th through 19th. The symposium is designed to provide concerned citizens with additional information relative to nuclear power plants, such as the one proposed to be built in Montague.

Plans for the program presently include: an address by John W. Gofman, co-author of Poisoned Power: The Case Against Nuclear Power Plants, and former Associate Director of the Lawrence Radiation Laboratory. Dr. Gofman will discuss the proper relationship between morality and technology in the context of deciding whether to build additional nuclear power plants.

Howard Zinn, Professor of Political Science at Boston University, and well-known anti-war critic will discuss nuclear power plants as they relate to individual responsibility, environmental preservation and the future.

Dr. Gofman will speak on Wednesday, September 18 and Professor Zinn will speak on Thursday, September 19, 1974, each at 8:00 p.m. in the Mahar Auditorium here.

In addition to the principal lectures, a day-long series of workshops will take place in Room 163 Campus Center at UMass-Amherst on Thursday, September 19. Sessions will be held on the technical, economic and social implications of nuclear power plants. Late in the afternoon, various citizen groups concerned about nuclear power plants, including the Alternative Energy Coalition (AEC), the Massachusetts Public Interest Research Group (Mass PIRG), the Montague Nuclear Concerns Group (MNCG), the New England Coalition on Nuclear Pollution, and the Nuclear Information Commune of Montague (NIC'M) will lead workshops directed toward explaining different options open to citizens who wish to take action in opposition to the further construction of nuclear plants.

Henry Doyle, President of the UMass Coalition for Environmental Quality, noted: "It is unfortunate that the questions surrounding nuclear power plants often exceed the available answers. The individuals participating in our forum should do much to redress this balance, and so provide concerned citizens with useful information."

The entire program is sponsored by the following groups:

Coalition for Environmental Quality (UMass)
Institute for Man and His Environment (UMass)
Five College Science and Society Coordinating Committee
Mass PIRG (UMass-Amherst)
Student Government, UMass-Amherst

Pardon bars further prosecution of Nixon

WASHINGTON [UPI] — By the stroke of one President's pen, possible criminal prosecution against another has been barred forever and the scope of any case against Richard M. Nixon may never be known.

But tucked away in file drawers and rolled on reels of tape is a host of evidence-damning or exculpatory, depending on how it is interpreted-that details the myriad crimes known as Watergate and how Nixon figured in it.

As long as six months ago, the Watergate grand jury concluded 19-0 that the evidence justified naming Nixon as a conspirator in the plot to hush up the bugging scandal. The jurors did not indict him because the Constitution apparently forecloses prosecuting a President while in office.

Instead, they named him an unindicted co-conspirator.

With President Ford's decision Sunday to pardon Nixon for all crimes "he has committed or may have committed or taken part in" during his presidency, Special Prosecutor Leon Jaworski no longer has the option of seeking Nixon's indictment as a private citizen.

Legal sources said he may have the option of issuing a report summarizing the evidence against the former President, though that was unclear and there was no indication Jaworski would take such a tack.

The evidence that led the grand jury to conclude that Nixon was involved in the conspiracy is still secret, locked away by law that demands the work of grand juries and prosecutors be hidden from public view unless used in court to prosecute those accused of criminal wrong-doing.

Since then, Jaworski has amassed even more material-primarily White House tapes wrested from Nixon by Supreme Court order-and Nixon's own Aug. 5 admission that he had withheld for more than two years evidence indicating his complicity in the cover-up.

Despite the secrecy surrounding Jaworski's investigation, the House Judiciary Committee dug up enough "clear and convincing" evidence of its own to conclude Nixon should be removed from office.

It concluded Nixon had "deliberately contrived to deceive the courts, the Department of Justice and the American people" and had condoned cover-up acts by his, aides that included "perjury, destruction of evidence, and obstruction of justice."

The committee also concluded that Nixon "repeatedly used his power as President to violate the Constitution and laws of the land" by misuse of such agencies as the Internal Revenue Service to harass his political enemies.

It did not deal with a host of other issues-all under investigation by Jaworski-such as the Ellsberg break-in, ITT, possible tax fraud, improper campaign funding, bribery and misuse of political funds.

From what is on the public record, it appears a Watergate case against Nixon might have included these elements:

—As early as June 20, 1972, just three days after the Watergate bugging arrests, Nixon held a long discussion with chief aide H.R. Haldeman. The resulting tape is marred by an 18¼ minute gap although Nixon has said the tape was under his "sole personal control."

—On June 23, 1972, Nixon ordered Haldeman to have the CIA block the FBI's Watergate probe.

—In July, 1972, and again in January, 1973, Nixon discussed the possibility of executive clemency for the Watergate burglars with aide Charles W. Colson; in April, 1973, he directed that assurances of clemency be extended to three key White House and campaign aides.

—In March, 1973, Nixon named his deputy campaign director, Jeb Stuart Magruder, to a high government job after Magruder had perjured himself at the Watergate trial and before the grand jury at a time Magruder was beginning to waver on the cover-up.

—On March 21, 1973, Nixon endorsed payment of additional "hush money" to Watergate burglar E. Howard Hunt Jr. saying that "should buy time."

After the coup, Chile attempts to survive

With Junta leader Augosto Pinochet declaring "we need to wipe the Marxists off the map of this continent", the promise of the generals was to restore economic stability to Chile.

They began by accepting $363 million worth of foreign credit from the U.S. and the international loan companies it controls. The U.S. government recognized the junta days after the takeover. Five hundred companies nationalized by the Popular Unity government have been returned to their former owners. There were special guarantees of compensation for the Kennocott, Annaconda and Cerro copper mines.

Due to price increases of over 900 per cent since 1973, the real income of Chilean workers has plummeted 45 per cent. Over 500,000 workers (20 per cent of the Chilean workforce) are unemployed. This leaves two million people (one fifth of the population) with no means of support. All price controls have been lifted the result being 1,200 to 1,300 per cent increases in the price of oil, sugar, and kerosene.

The widow of martyred President Allende, Mrs. Hortensia Busse de Allende addressed the U.N. on February 25, 1974 stating, "There is voluminous documentary evidence which shows clearly that in my country today life is not valued. Summary executions, real or staged executions (for the purpose of terrifying the victim), executions of prisoners allegedly 'attempting to escape', slow death through lack of medical attention, victims tortured to death, are the order of the day under the generals. Genocide is being practiced. "Over 50,000 people have been murdered.

Yet the resistance to the fascist coup is growing within Chile. The united forces have begun to publish newspapers, "Unidad Anti-Fascista" (Anti-Fascist Unity) and "Liberacion" (Liberation). Work stoppages, street mobilizations and mass leafleting continue.

The eleventh day of each month (commemerating the date of the coup) is observed as "a day of hostility towards the fascist regime". Each month on the eleventh a majority of Chileans boycott shops, banks, and public services. Eyewitnesses in the port city of Valparaiso said that on August 11th 1974 their city resembled a desert.

A stronger wave of terror on the part of the junta has developed to put down the resistance. According to Orlando Mills, an anti-fascist leader and political refugee from Chile, the new terror campaign of the last six weeks indicates the insecurity of the junta. In this time period over 21,000 people have been arrested and imprisoned-six thousand last week. General Ernesto Baez, chief of the Fascists security police, has announced that the arrests will continue.

An awareness of the courageous activity of the people of Chile in their fight against fascism compels worldwide response. We in the U.S. have a special responsibility to act, to learn the full extent of U.S. involvement in Chile, and to half U.S. support of the Chilean junta.

The National Chile Solidarity Conference, held in Chicago on March 30-31, 1974 outlines a basic program of support for the Chilean people:

1. FREE ALL CHILEAN POLITICAL PRISONERS

As of January 1974, 18,000 people remained in the juntas prisons. Many are held without charges. They include some of the top leaders of the U.P. government, trade unionists, teachers, students, and soldiers who were loyal to the constitutional government. Their lives are in danger. The Chicago Commission of inquiry confirms, "the use of torture continues".

2. ENDS U.S. ECONOMIC AND MILITARY AID TO THE JUNTA

While the Allende government was economically sabotaged by the cut-off of credits and aid from the U.S., the U.S. has given over $363 million to Chile since the coup. $11 million dollars is earmarked for the military, $10 million for equipment, and $1 million for officer training. The repayment of Chilean national debt has been rescheduled and generously worked out for the junta.

3. OPEN U.S. BORDERS TO ALL CHILEAN REFUGEES WHO SEEK POLITICAL ASYLUM

The U.S. State Department has refused to grant visas to Chilean refugees who request them. It has been also demanded that Chileans already within the U.S. return to the U.S. embassy in Chile to apply for visas, endangering their lives.

4. WITHDRAW U.S. RECOGNITION OF THE JUNTA, AND INVESTIGATE U.S. GOVERNMENT AND CORPORATE COMPLICITY IN THE COUP

Since the release of information by Seymore Hirsch of the N.Y. Times about funds appropriated by the CIA for use in Chile, to sabotage the U.P. government, it becomes clear that the U.S. was no "innocent by-stander" to the coup in Chile. Anaconda Copper and ITT corporations played a specific role in preparing the takeover so as to regain their economic control of Chilean natural resources and industry.

Con Ed sponsors day care

Continuing Education for Women at the University of Massachusetts is sponsoring a community day care service center this year on Saturdays.

The center will be open to children from ages 2.9 to 8 years every Saturday from 8:30 to 4:30 p.m. Sessions will begin Sept. 5 at the University Day School at Bowditch Lodge near the stadium. The day care service will be run on a drop-in basis, allowing parents maximum flexibility.

This is the second year that a Saturday day care service is being made available to area residents. The increasing popularity of Saturday classes, and the fact that many area jobs entail working on Saturdays, make Saturday day care an important service for many parents.

Anyone interested in further information and registration may call 659-3053, 549-3328, 665-4223 or on Saturdays call the University Day School 545-2466.

With Ford's tacit support

OAS to try to end Cuba embargo

WASHINGTON [UPI] — The Organization of American States, with the tacit support of the Ford administration, will begin a diplomatic process this week which could lead to the lifting of 10-year old economic sanctions against Cuba within the next six months.

The Fidel Castro government is not interested in rejoining the OAS nor is that matter at issue. What is at issue is the potential lifting of the sanctions and Cuba's re-integration into the Western Hemisphere community.

The first step will be to decide whether the OAS-imposed diplomatic and economic sanctions should be lifted. The OAS council, acting on a proposal by Costa Rica, Colombia and Venezuela, meets here this week to discuss it.

The prime mover behind this collective approach toward normalization with Cuba — costa Rica's foreign minister, Gonzalo Facio — will be in Washington Wednesday to address an OAS council meeting scheduled tentatively for Thursday.

Facio, whose active lobbying against the sanctions over the past few weeks seems to be gaining support, will stop in Mexico City to meet with Mexican Foreign Secretary Emilio O. Rabasa.

The Mexican official conferred here last week with President Ford and Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger, and returned to Mexico early Saturday after asking the administration to support the movement toward lifting sanctions and agree to Cuba's presence at the third "new dialogue" foreign ministers conference in Buenos Aires next March.

Rabasa was merely promised by the White House and State Department that Washington would "study very carefully'" the whole range of issues. But the tone and wording used by Ford in reaffirming an often stated Cuban policy — as well as a flurry of reports, rumors and speculations which flooded Washington last week — indicated that the U.S. attitude toward Castro may be softening.

The Ford administration may, in fact, be ready to open the door to Cuba, closed when Washington and Havana broke diplomatic relations Jan. 31, 1961.

On Sunday, White House spokesman J. F. terHorst announced that Ford would meet with Mexican President Luis Echeverria on the U.S.-Mexican border sometime this fall, and probably would discuss the Cuban issue at that time.

It will take the support of at least 16 of the OAS' 23 member states to lift the 1964 sanctions. Twelve of those votes seemed assured as of today and the possible support of the United States could carry with it more than enough votes to end the 10-year embargo, one of the major irritants in Western Hemisphere diplomacy.

Seven certain votes in favor of lifting the sanctions are by the governments that have relations with Cuba — Mexico, Argentina, Peru, Panama, Barbados, Jamaica and Trinidad-Tobago. Three more are Costa Rica, Colombia and Venezuela, who are spearheading the anti-sanctions movement. The probable support of Honduras and Ecuador can be added to these 10.

The OAS council, in deciding how to go about tackling this thorny problem, might either go the long way by appointing a study cut by agreeing to a reported proposal of Costa Rica, Colombia and Venezuela that a foreign ministers' meeting be called by November.

The November date seems to confirm the current impression among Latin American diplomats here that the Ford administration prefers to await the result of the November elections here before committing itself to any change on Cuba.

March protests Nixon's pardon

SALT LAKE CITY [UPI] — Carrying lit candles to signify mourning, a group of about 60 persons marched to the Utah state capital Monday night to protest President Ford's pardon of former President Nixon.

"We are here to mourn the death of justice in the United States," said a member of the group.

"The pardon shows we are not a nation of laws. We are a nation of powerful men oppressing those who have no power," said Ethel Hale.

Arraigned in court

Maine charges 94 with drug violationss

WATERVILLE, Maine [UPI] — Some of the 94 persons charged with drug violations in six counties were arraigned at different courts in the state yesterday. Other arraignments are yet to be scheduled.

Capt. Charles Bruton, director of the state police's Division of Special Investigations here, said the 124 arrest warrants were the result of "extensive undercover investigations conducted by full-time municipal, state and county police officers on special assignment to the DSI.

"This was the result of extensive investigations which have been going on for several months," he said.

Bruton said the police did not conduct any raids and said there were no drugs seized.

"These were just plain arrests," he said. Some of those charged were indicted by grand juries while others were named in complaints, he said.

The warrants were issued in Knox, Penobscot, Hancock, Waldo, Washington and Piscataquis counties.

Capt. Bruton said most of the arrests were connected with bad drug sales.

"It was a coordinated effort to identify the drug pushers," he said.

The arrests, he said, were the first "to occur in the state as a result of efforts coordinated and controlled through the division's field units located in Portland, Lewiston, Bangor and Houlton."

The new statewide drug enforcement division became operational last April, and is funded by the state and federal Law Enforcement Assistance Agency.

"This first result is only the initial demonstration of what can and will be accomplished through mutual police cooperation at all levels," he said.

Maine has had an increase in drug trafficking, he said, but probably no more than any other state.

Our Incredibly-low price... $59.95

The Chafitz Equipment Company of Rockville, Maryland — one of the world's leading specialists in electronic calculators — proudly introduces an incredibly-versatile pocket scientific... at a price lower than you'd expect to pay for a machine without these vital scientific features. Making the Calcumatic the perfect tool for all engineers, scientists, statisticians, and businessmen...while also being the first truly affordable unit that students won't outgrow!

Friends.

In both high school and college, the Calcumatic is an immense aid in mastering such courses as algebra, geometry, trigonometry, calculus, economics, statistics, pre-med, physics, chemistry, and many others. And without the 870 (or other scientific), students are sure to be at a decided disadvantage to their classmates who do have one.

Thorough product knowledge is one of the cornerstones of our success. So when you buy your calculator from us, we make sure you know how to use it. And since we obviously can't meet our many mail order patrons, we've had our professional Calculator Counselors™ compile a comprehensive instruction booklet, tailored to the questions and types of problems we experience daily from our retail customers. Included are a full range of applications: monthly payment on a loan, present and future value, standard deviation, variance, metric conversions, raising to integer powers, add-ons, discounts, and many others.

When reviewing the 870's impressive list of features, you may find our price a little hard to believe. So we'd like to go on record as stating that this definitely is no rip-off. Because the Calcumatic 870 is a quality-engineered product, utilizing advanced Rockwell circuitry, and guaranteed for a full year: parts and labor.

Order at No Risk.

If ordering something by mail isn't your usual style, we offer this additional assurance of your complete satisfaction: If you're not satisfied with your new Calcumatic — simply return the unit within ten days, and we'll send you a prompt refund of the purchase price.

Our unique warehousing system enables us to ship most orders on the same day they're received. So order one — or more — today. (Great gift idea!)

Complete with carry case, 4 AA batteries, guarantee, instructions. Optional AC adapter is $4.50.

Scientists discover element106

By AL ROSSITER JR.

ATLANTIC CITY, N.J. [UPI] — Two American scientists say they have discovered a new man-made element of the tungsten family, and they question similar Russian claims made earlier.

It was reported to the American Chemical Society convening here, that the new element, No. 106 in the periodic table, was identified by a team of scientists led by Drs. Glenn Seaborg and Albert Ghiorso of the Lawrence Berkeley Laboratory, Berkeley, Calif. It was the first element discovered since the same lab found Hahnium in 1970.

Ghiorso said Soviet scientists from the Joint Committee for Nuclear Research at Dubna reported last month they had found the element first. But he said they were unable to provide proof while the American experiments positively identified the new element.

"There is some question whether they have. They may or may not be right, Ghiorso said.

"We think there's a possibility they're right. We as a matter of fact hope they're right because this means there is a new way of making heavier elements. But the probability in my mind is perhaps small. We'll find out in a matter of months."

Seaborg, a former chairman of the Atomic Energy Commission, said the new element was manufactured with the heavy ion accelerator known as the Superhilac by bombarding Californium-249 with Oxygen-18 ions.

Uranium, No. 92 in the periodic table, is the last natural element. Fourteen other elements have been made in the laboratory and Seaborg said the Berkeley lab now will begin efforts to produce No. 107.

The importance of the new discovery, he said, is to add more basic knowledge of the nuclear structure of elements.

"As you add one piece to that jigsaw puzzle, you contribute to the whole," he said.

Black center concert Friday

On Friday, September 13th at 8:00 p.m. in Bowker Auditorium, the Black Cultural Center will present its first concert of the 1974-75 semester featuring Gil Scott-Heron and Midnight.

A novelist, poet, student in the John Hopkins writing seminars, songwriter and musician, Scott-Heron's best known album to date is "Pieces of a Man", which includes his famous single "The Revolution Will Not Be Televised".

Advance tickets on sale at the New Africa House Room 115. Donation is $1.50.

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

By Stella Wilder

VIRGO: (Aug. 23-Sept. 7) — Business arrangements can be made well ahead of time. Keep to your own method of operation at this time; another's can wait its turn. (Sept. 8-Sept. 22) — Stick to a schedule that has proven feasible in the past. To try new ways and means at this time could mean to introduce a definite sour note.

LIBRA: (Sept. 23-Oct. 7) — Keep appointments even though you may have to put yourself out considerably to do so. There is no point turning another against you. (Oct. 8-Oct. 22) — Concentrate on those activities which require you to use your mental capacities to the utmost. Don't be persuaded into taking the easy way out.

SCORPIO: (Oct. 23-Nov. 7) — If your are wise, you will meet whatever events occur when they occur. To put off your responsibilities is to forfeit success. (Nov. 8-Nov. 21) Although problems on the home front may not have financial gain as an incentive to their solution, they must not be neglected. Tackle them at once!

SAGITTARIUS: (Nov. 22-Dec. 7) — This is not the "take it easy" week you may have expected. Do what you can to adjust to situations and circumstances that arise. (Dec. 8-Dec. 21) — Make no mistakes as to what issues are involved in your success this week. There is very little margin for error built into present events.

CAPRICORN: (Dec. 22-Jan. 5) — Conserve your energies. Make an effort to remain calm, to swim easily and laxily with the prevailing current. Fight against nothing. (Jan. 6-Jan. 19) — Although you have imagination and creativity, you would do well to keep both under absolute control this week. Remain calm.

AQUARIUS: (Jan. 20-Feb. 3) — Problems of employment may make it difficult for you to meet another's demand this week. Do what you can and then don't worry! (Feb. 4-Feb. 18) — You would do well to hold your enthusiasms in check all through the week. Approach your work affirmatively, but don't go overboard with eagerness.

PISCES: (Feb. 19-March 5) — If you would undertake a conciliatory course of action, make sure that those with whom relations are strained and are ready and willing. (March 6-March 20) — You could make an error of identification early in the week that would cause you regrets for many weeks to come.

ARIES: (March 21-April 4) — The future success or failure of this week's activities depends upon your willingness to adapt to present circumstances. Bend with the wind. (April 5-April 19) — Personal contacts will not be as helpful this week as you had hoped. Trust, instead, to your ability to help yourself progress.

TAURUS: (April 20-May 5) —. You should be able to get a clear picture of your immediate future this week. Take care not to underestimate your ability to adapt to ills. (May 6-May 20) — A business association may cause you considerable trouble this week. Don't be alarmed if you are unable to change things to suit yourself.

GEMINI: (May 21-June 6) — Make decisions wisely, but don't expect everything you decide on to turn out your way. Develop old plans into new methods of operation. (June 7-June 20) — Make all plans in accordance with what you know from past experience you are capable of accomplishing.

CANCER: (June 21-July 7) — A new professional project could prove more than you expected where hours and labor are concerned. Find relief through the attainment of new knowledge. (July 8-July 22) Depend upon your own knowledge and your own ability to act. If you depend upon others, you may be in for genuine disappointment.

LEO: (July 23-Aug. 7) — Keep financial issues from boiling over at this time. You would do well to ask for professional help early in the week.

Foreman is on his way

SAN FRANCISCO [UPI] — World Heavyweight Champion George Foreman, enroute to Zaire for his title defense against Muhammed Ali Sept. 24, left for Africa Tuesday by way of Chicago and Paris.

Foreman, along with a 35-member entourage including trainers, handlers and sparring partners, wore a light blue outfit with an open collar shirt and a matching short billed cap as he boarded an American Airlines Flight.

The Foreman group planned a one-hour stopover in Chicago before departing for Paris on an Air France flight. From Paris, Foreman will go to Zaire Wednesday night.

The title defense will be the third for Foreman since winning the crown from Joe Frazier. He knocked out Joe Roman in one round in Tokyo and Ken Norton in two tounds in Caracas, Venezuela.

...so is Ali

PARIS [UPI] — Muhammad Ali hit Paris Tuesday, advised Frenchmen not to miss "The Greatest Event in the History of the World," then took off for Africa and the event — his Sept. 25 World Title Fight against Heavyweight Champ George Foreman.

"Go to the cinema early," Ali told reporters at an Orly Airport news conference. "It might be like my second fight against Sonny Liston (in 1965).

"I might get angry and finish the fight in one round."

After a couple of hours of picture-taking at the airport, Ali and his party took off aboard a regular Air Z[illegible] DC10 [illegible] Kinshasa, Zaire, site of [illegible] been calling the "Rumble in the Jungle."

The plane left from Orly instead of Charles de Gaulle Airport, as regularly scheduled, as a convenience for Ali.

Ali said he would resume training Thursday in Kinshasa. "Mostly running, but they have built a gymnasium for me, also," he said. "I'm in the best shape of my life."

Ali looked tired after his all-night flight from Boston and recited no poems. But he did boast that since the bout "is the greatest event in the history of the world, I have trained very seriously for four months."

The ex-champion, dressed in a black shirt and black slacks, said, "I have three big fighters (sparring partners) with me — Roy Williams, Larry Holmes and Eddy Jones.

"Everyone is bigger than Foreman," Ali said in a slow, simple English so French reporters could understand. "I will beat three men every day, then it will be easy to beat Foreman."

...and Pats make three

FOXBORO, Mass [AP] — The New England Patriots of the National Football League traded future draft choices for defensive line help Tuesday, picking up end Tony McGee from the Chicago Bears.

For McGee, a 6-foot-4, 25-pound veteran of three seasons, the Patriots said they gave up two undisclosed draft picks.

McGee, who came to Chicago from Bishop College in Dallas, Texas, started for the Bears all three seasons either at defensive end or tackle.

The Patriots continued to prepare Tuesday for their NFL regular season opener against the Super Bowl champion Miami Dolphins Sunday afternoon at Schaefer Stadium.

NFL Veterans fall victim to the axe

Several familiar names fell by the National Football League wayside in favor of rookies and free agents Tuesday as teams chopped their rosters in preparation for Sunday's opening games.

At the same time, the NFL announced that teams would be allowed to carry 47 active players this season, signaling the end, for at least a year, of taxi squads.

Among the casualties in Tuesday's cuts to 47 players were veteran center Ken Bowman of the Green Bay Packers, the team's player representative and a vocal leader during the NFL Players Association strike.

Bowman was placed on the injured reserve list because of a back injury, which means he will sit out the entire season. He was unavailable for comment, but earlier he had insisted he was healthy and ready to play football.

Also placed on the Packers' injured reserve list was punter Ron Widby, a seven-year pro. Bowman's job goes to second-year man Larry McCarren, with rookie Randy Walker inheriting Widby's assignment.

The Packers also traded quarterback Jim Del Gaize to the New York Giants and acquired another passer, Dean Carlson, from Kansas City.

Carlson was one of two quarterbacks cut by Kansas City. The other was 10-year pro Pete Beathard, who immediately signed with the Portland Storm of the World Football League. Beathard was displaced with the Chiefs by rookie David Jaynes.

The New York Jets dropped 11 players, including veteran punter Julian Fagan who was beaten out of his job by rookie Greg Gantt. The Jets also cut two other veterans, defensive tackle Joe Jackson and linebacker Rob Spicer, and placed veteran wide receiver Margene Adkins on the injured reserve list. Eleven rookies survived the last cut, three more than the number that made the team last year.

Veterans comprised almost the entire New York Giants roster trimming, with quarterback Randy Johnson and running backs Rocky Thompson and Charlie Evans, the club's player representative, heading the list of players dropped.

Johnson, who has signed with the World Football League's Hawaii club for next season, lost his job to Del Gaize and rookie Carl Summerell as part of a wholesale housecleaning by new Coach Bill Arnsparger. Twenty-four players on the club's roster for its final 1973 game are gone, and the Giants have 18 rookies on the squad.

Miami's Super Bowl champions placed veteran wide receivers Ron Sellers and Bo Rather on waivers, with rookies Nat Moore and Melvin Baker claiming their spots on the Dolphin roster. Seven other rookies also made the team.

Coach Don Shula said that the players' association strike that forced veterans such as Sellers and Rather to report late, had little to do with Tuesday's decision.

Woodstock or Cape Kennedy? Actually it is the site of Evel Knievel's multi-million flop last Sunday.

Courageous swamps Southern Cross

NEWPORT, R.I. [UPI] — The U.S. Yacht Courageous scored a resounding victory Tuesday over Australia's Southern Cross in the first race of the Best-of-Seven Series for the America's Cup, International Yachting's most important trophy.

The American boat got away from the starting line two seconds ahead of the Australian Challenger and from there on kept piling up its advantage, coasting over the finish line of the 24.3-mile cup course in Rhode Island Sound four minutes and 54 seconds ahead.

Courageous, skippered by the wily Ted Hood, the Marblehead, Mass., sailmaker and boat designer, ran a perfect race, as far as tactics and sail handling were concerned, and never was in trouble as the two 12-meters launched the 23rd challenge for the cup, which the United States won from England 123 years ago and never has lost.

At the first mark, after four miles, Hood had Courageous ahead by 34 seconds. He extended this to one minute, 22 seconds at the second mark, to 1:33 at the third mark, bulged it to 3:01 at the fourth mark, and to 4:05 as he rounded the fifth mark for the final leg on the cup course some seven miles off this seaport city.

The first race of the cup series, scheduled to start at 12:10 p.m. EDT, was delayed for two hours because of hazy weather and fickle winds which varied from two or three knots to eight and finally steadied at about seven when the committee boat raised the starting flag.

As it turned out, this was the kind of weather in which Courageous performs best — light winds. The story may be different Wednesday when they head out for the second race of the series with winds of up to 20 knots in the offing. The experts give Southern Cross the edge in the heavier going.

Sixto Lezcano tops Birdos

MILWAUKEE [UPI] — Sixto Lezcano, playing in his first major league game, singled in John Briggs with the winning run with one out in the bottom of the 10th inning Tuesday night to give the Milwaukee Brewers a 6-5 win over the Baltimore Orioles and a split of their two game series.

The loss, only the Orioles' second in their 13 games, dropped them into a second place tie with Boston, two games behind the American League East leading New York Yankees.

The score was tied 5-5 when Briggs led off the 10th with a walk off Grant Jackson. Pinch-hitter Bob Coluccio sacrificed Briggs to second and Lezcano singled to center to score Briggs with the winning run.

Brewer relief ace Tom Murphy, now 8-7, picked up the win after pitching the final three innings. Jackson, who relieved starter Dave McNally in the eighth, took his fourth loss against one win.

Enos Cabell's home run with one out in the third scored the first Baltimore run. Paul Blair sparked a four-run outburst in the fourth when he led off with his 15th homer.

Simmons NL star of week

SAN FRANCISCO [UPI] — Catcher Ted Simmons, who hit .455 last week at the St. Louis Cardinals began making a drive in the National League East, Tuesday was named ML Player of the week.

With Simmons leading the way, the Cardinals won five of six games as they continued their pursuit of the division-leading Pittsburgh Pirates.

During the week, Simmons went 10 for 22 with five runs batted in. Five of his hits were doubles.

Tragedy, injury in football world

Kassulke hangs in

NEW YORK [UPI] — "Wheels" is a word football players have for legs. For one player, that word has become all too real. After a motorcycle accident last summer left him with a broken back and his lower body paralyzed, Karl Kassulie's legs have been real wheels.

One of pro football's most free spirits just one year ago is now confined to a wheel chair, probably for the rest of his life.

Last summer, the day before the Minnesota Vikings' training camp opened, Karl Kassulke, their strong-safety and inspirational leader, ended his athletic career by doing one of the things that typifies his way of life. The man who played football, as a local broadcaster quipped, by "throwing abandon to the winds," was doing just that off the field as well. He was out cruising his motorcycle on Minnesota's open roads when someone stopped short in front of him, and the resulting crash cut short his football career.

But not his life. Karl Kassulke keeps moving, sustained by the same zest for life, the same concern for others that gave him a reputation as a team player and leader for the Vikings.

It is not only tragic but ironic that Kassulke finds himself trapped in a wheel chair. Throughout his ten years in the NFL he has been a tireless worker for various charities dealing with physical handicaps.

"He probably did more for charities like the March of Dimes and hospital visits than any other player," says teammate Milt Sunde.

Now, more than a year later, as his former teammates and still closest friends, the Minnesota Vikings, begin their second season without him, Kassulke's attitude is uncompromisingly realistic.

"It's a hassle, to say I'm content would be pushing it," he said in a statement released through workers for the March of Dimes. Kassulke is serving as State Co-Chairman for the Mod Drive in Minnesota.

At 33, he has a lot of life left to live. And the one-time all-pro is not about to take a back seat to anyone, not even if the seat comes equipped with wheels.

One man is working it out by continuing, essentially, to live as he has. He sustains his body by a joint interest with several former teammates in a swinging singles bar in Minneapolis, and sustains his spirit through his constant volunteer efforts in behalf of such causes as the March of Dimes.

"You can throw in the towel and vegetate or you can decide what you can and can't do," he says.

Leaks could play against Boston Coll

AUSTIN, Tex. [UPI] — Roosevelt Leaks, who since a knee injury last spring has been listed as a probable non-player for the Texas Longhorns this season, could play after all if he passes a physical examination Wednesday.

Longhorn coach Darrell Royal said Tuesday that even if Leaks should pass the physical on his knee, he would not start or play against Boston College in the opening game of the season Saturday.

"We will start (freshman) Earl Campbell," said Royal. "There is no question of that. If Roosevelt is given the go-ahead, we still don't know how he will react to contact."

"Fortunately, we haven't needed to worry about getting Leaks ready with Campbell in the lineup."

Leaks, who finished third last year in the Heisman trophy balloting and who set a single-season rushing record in the southwest conference as a junior, suffered a badly damaged right knee last spring during workouts.

It was announced at that time Leaks would be out for the 1974 season, but during the summer Royal said Leaks was ahead of his rehabilitation schedule.

Royal said Leaks would take part in a scrimmage before he would be allowed to play in a game.

Death inquiry

BOULDER, Colo. [UPI] — Researchers at the University of Colorado Tuesday said football player Polie Poitier, who collapsed at practice Aug. 23 and died the next day, may have been killed by kidney or liver failure and not by sickle-cell anemia as originally thought.

Four members of the Colorado University Medical Center's Sickle-Cell Unit, a Boulder Pathologist and the team physician concluded that Poitier's death may have been, but was not necessarily, a result of the disease.

"The autopsy findings suggest that a combination of factors may have been involved, including kidney failure and impaired liver function resulting in severe acidosis," the report said. "The presence of marked sickling in the kidney may have contributed to the kidney failure."

Yanks sweep, win 2-1 in 12th

BOSTON [UPI] — Alex Johnson, making his first appearance as a Yankee since being acquired on waivers from Texas, rifled a 12th inning home run Tuesday night to give the first place New York Yankees a bitterly contested 2-1 win over the Boston Red Sox.

Pat Dobson, who was tagged for an unearned run in the first, gave up just four hits in 11 innings in earning his 16th win against 14 defeats. Sparky Lyle mopped up for the Yanks in the 12th and earned his 14th save.

Johnson jumped on a 1-1 pitch from reliever Diego Segui, now 6-3, to lead off the 12th. The ball carried 400 feet to the back of the Boston Bullpen in right center field.

Second baseman Sandy Alomar had saved the game an inning earlier when he made a diving stop of a Cecil Cooper grounder with runners on first and second and two outs. Alomar scrambled to his knees and flipped to first baseman Bill Sudakis, who made a spectacular stretch for the putout.

The Red Sox scored an unearned run in the first inning when Juan Beniquez reached on a fielder's choice, stole second, continued to third on catcher Thurman Munson's errant throw and scored on Dwight Evans' slow grounder to second.

Starter Luis Tiant, recipient of his first run in four games, held the Yankees off for 8 1-3 innings before Lou Piniella walked and Chris Chambliss doubled him home.

A controversy erupted on the play after home plate umpire Don Denkinger ruled that a fan had touched Chambliss' shot to the right field wall. Pinch-runner Larry Murray, who was running for Piniella, was allowed to score on the play when Denkinger ruled that Murray, who was running on the pitch, would have scored even without the fan interference.

Segui came on to pitch the 10th inning.

Brock: 104 and 105

ST. LOUIS [UPI] — Lou Brock of the St. Louis Cardinals tied the modern day single season stolen base record of 104 and set a new National League career record of 739 in the first inning Tuesday night when he stole second off Dick Ruthven of the Philadelphia Phillies.

Brock's theft, in the Cardinals 142nd game, tied the record set by Maury Wills of the Los Angeles Dodgers and broke the career mark of 738 set by Max Carey.

The crowd of about 25,000 gave Brock a standing ovation and ushers fanned out across the field to prevent fans from coming out of the stands.

Brock was awarded the second base bag as a memento of his achievement.

The 35-year-old outfielder led off the Cards' first inning with a single to left and took off when the count was 0-1 to batter Ron Hunt. The throw from catcher Bob Boone went into centerfield and Brock took third, scoring later on a double by Reggie Smith.

Brock's first steal of the night gave him 739 for his career and broke Max Carey's National League record. Wills set his record for the Los Angeles Dodgers in 1964.

Brock's second theft was almost identical to the first. He reached base by cracking a single to left then stole on an 0-1 count to Ron Hunt. The throw from catcher Bob Boone on the first steal was bad and went into centerfield, but the second throw was more accurate, with Brock's straight-in slide beating the ball to the base.

After Brock broke the record the crowd of more than 30,000 erupted in a staccato cheer of "Lou, Lou, Lou," and the entire Cardinal team poured out of the dugout and the bullpen to mob the new base-stealing king at second.

The game was stopped while the Cardinals presented Brock with the base he had just stolen, then brought him to a microphone to say a few words to the fans.

Newly-inducted hall of famer James "Cool Papa" Bell of St. Louis, a speed demon in the old negro leagues, congratulated Brock on his accomplishment.

Then Lou stepped to the microphone and first brought out Ted Sizemore, whom Brock called his "Partner in Crime". Sizemore has batted behind Brock most of the season but was out of the lineup Tuesday night with a strained ankle.

Brock also brought out Cardinal trainer Gene Gieselmann and his outfield partners Reggie Smith and Bake McBride.

Brock then thanked all the fans for their support especially those in the leftfield bleachers whom he said had been behind him all the way.

To conclude the 11-minute ceremony and ovation, Brock said, "Now let's get back there and try and score some runs to catch up with these Philadelphia Phillies who are beating our brains out."

The Phillies led at the time 6-2.

Hockey and Detente

It was two years ago that the most significant athletic event in the history of sport took place. Over a space of three weeks the two best hockey teams in the world met in what became known as the Battle of the Century: the Canada-Russia hockey series.

On a blisteringly hot September night in Montreal with 18,000 screaming Canadians in the stands, Phil Esposito and Alexander Yakushev faced off in the first game of what many thought would be a walkaway for Team Canada. "We'll skate 'em off the ice," and "nous allons l'ecraser," ("we're going to wipe them out",) were frequent expressions from both English and French Canadiens.

But how mistaken they all were. The Russians exhibiting the conditioning and strength of supermen made the Canadian professionals look like the all-stars of the Mexico City Midget League. You had to wonder what on earth was happening when the Russian cyclone, 150 lb. Valery Kharlamov sent Don Awrey reeling with bodychecks. Then the heretics were stunned by the blasphemy of "the best goalie in hockey", Ken Dryden of Montreal being beaten by screaming slapshots from the sticks of Russian players who supposedly couldn't shoot hard from more than ten feet out. And to rub salt into an already infected wound, the Russian goaltender, a twenty year-old instructor in physical culture from Novosbirsk, Vladimir Tretiak, brushed away drives from the Cournoyers and the Perraults, as easily as if he was knocking away butterflies on the steppes.

The Russians left Canada with a record of two wins, a loss and a tie, and only the most patriotic or ignorant fans-and it is estimated that 16 out of Canada's twenty million people were glued to their televisions during the series-gave Canada a chance to win the series. When Canada lost the first game in Moscow by 4-3 after blowing leads of 3-0, and 4-1, the patriotic and ignorant were reduced to a handful.

But the Russians, their KGB and wee hour waking-up of Canada's players couldn't stop the inspirational performance of Phil Esposito and "sudden death" Paul Henderson from leading Canada to an incredible come - from - behind fictory in the series.

Now, two years later, a new Team Canada has been formed. Whereas the first Team Canada was composed solely of National Hockey League Team Canada '74 is made up exclusively by players from the World Hockey Association-Gary Davidson's Reject League.

If the Russians came within minutes of overcoming Team Canada in 1972, one wonders how the WHA players will have even a wisp of a chance against a Russian team, which if anything, is improved since the days of Team Canada.

With a starting lineup made up of 5 defensemen, of which only one, J.C. Tremblay had any business being in the NHL to begin with-and he was a borderline case-it would be a safe bet that come September 27 at the Quebec City Coliseum the goal lamps will be suffering from a case of acute hypertension coupled with a dash of comatose exhaustion.

Sure, the WHA'ers have Frank Mahovlich, Bobby Hull and Gordie Howe, but those three former superstars are now little more than skating antiques.

It's doubtful that winning or losing this series will make any difference in terms of which philosophy of hockey is superior, for the key effects of the series will be felt right here in North America. If by some slight chance the WHA edition of Team Canada makes a better account of themselves than the NHL'ers of 1972, fans and sportswriters will let out a resounding cry for a merger or some sort of arrangement between the two pro leagues.

Thus you can say that the future of the WHA will depend on a series of games with a country ten thousand miles away. So, Henry Kissinger and Gary Davidson do have something in common--they'll both live or die by detente.

Who says crime doesn't pay?

Student budget freeze on L.S.O. thawed

By SUE ADLEY
Staff Reporter

Rick Savini, president of the Undergraduate Student Senate, says there is no longer a partial freeze on the Graduate and Undergraduate Senate budgets.

Two weeks ago, Vice Chancellor for Student Affairs Dr. Robert Gage and Dr. Verre Chappel, Dean of the Graduate School, froze the sections of the Undergraduate and Graduate Senate budgets, respectively, in relation to the newly-formed Legal Services Office (LSO). The freeze came about, according to Gage, because "the students were not being open enough about what the LSO was going to do."

After the decision to "fire" Student Attorney Richard Howland last semester, the Undergraduate Senate in cooperation with the Graduate Senate sought a new, more efficient way of providing legal services for UMass students. Jim Lindsey, president of the Graduate Senate said "the search process began in April for new attorneys."

"In June," he said, "we had preliminary discussions with the Undergraduate Senate and decided to merge to form the LSO - a joint membership."

Savini said the original idea for the LSO was built "around the premise of having three lawyers, four to five para-legal assistants, and office help made up mainly of students, perhaps on work-study. Negotiations for the plan finally led to a contract around the first or

Gluckstern, Bromery overlooked code

By DORTHY L. MULLER
and

Staff Reporters

Unethical conduct and violations of personnel practices were charges "considered" but overlooked by UMass administrators in a faculty appointment to the Physical Education's Department of Exercise Science.

Amid controversy that Dr. Gideon Ariel was hired through the flexing of the University's affirmative action policy and the liquidation of two graduate assistantships, the Collegian has obtained information which seems to raise other questions:

—Did Dr. Ariel illegally endorse a commercial product — contrary to University policy?

—Did he misrepresent himself and the University with fraudulant credentials in the publication of commercial brochures?

—Did he go against the ethics of scholarly practice by dual publication?

—Should his appointment be upheld if any of these allegations brought by two professors opposing the administration's decision are true?

While a court suit initiated by a graduate student is pending in Boston's Federal District Court over alleged discrimination and abuses of affirmative action policy, Dr. Ariel stands accused by professors Benjamin Ricci and Stanley Plagenhoef of committing "gross, unethical acts which should have prohibited his appointment."

Both Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery and Vice Chancellor for Academic Affairs Robert L. Gluckstern considered the opposition's arguments — but quickly approved the appointment.

It's now apparent that no consideration was given to the charge of illegally endorsing a commercial product which violates the personnel practices of UMass staff and faculty.

On—campus bank? maybe

By DONALD WILHELM
Staff Reporter

A great deal of controversy surrounds the proposal of an on-campus bank which would serve both students and University employees, according to Mike Curran, chairperson of the Campus Center-Student Union Governing Board.

Dr. Robert Gage, Vice Chancellor of Student Affairs, stated that the idea for a bank came from the Board of Governors, which is appointed by the student government. However, there is evidence that in April of 1973, the Associate Treasurer of the University, in Whitmore, suggested the idea of an on-campus bank, and mentioned that many area banks were very interested in locating on-campus, well before the Board started to deal with the proposal.

A highly-placed member of The Board said "I'm surprised that Dr. Gage would say something like that. He has been present at many of the meetings - concerning the bank proposal, and he ought to know that we didn't originate the idea."

The particular bank that is selected to locate on ampus, most likely in the Campus Center-Student Union Complex, would be chosen by a bidding procedure.

Mike Curran, Chairperson of the Board, said "The bank would be chosen by competitive bidding. The bank with the highest bid would get the contract."

However, Dr. Gage said "The bank would be chosen by a combination of which bank had the highest bid and which would also offer the most services to patrons."

"The bank would be of great service to the students", Curran said. "It would save the students and University quite a bit of money as well."

Construction costs of the Campus Center are currently paid for by the Campus Center fee that appears on student's semester bills. A bank would save the Campus Center as much as $50,000 a year in rent, and the elimination of the present money-losing check facilities could save the University another $50,000 a year, and all of this would help lower the Campus Center fee," Curran said.

"Although the bank would be of service to students" Curran said, "most of its patronage would be from staff and faculty, and the Campus Center would do most of its financial transactions through it. Likewise, the University would channel some of its business through the bank."

Curran mentioned that the bank would not be able to offer substantial amounts of loans to students and student groups, as this activity lowers the profitability of the bank and hence lowers the amount of money the bank is able to pay as a rental fee. However,

Food stamps: do you qualify?

The first week of the drive to sign up UMass students for the food stamp program has been a "qualified success," according to organizer John Fisher.

While more than 700 applications were handed out during the first two days of the program, there have also been a number of delays and much confusion as to who can qualify for the stamps.

The primary bottleneck was the state Welfare Department, said Fisher. When the original arrangements were made to do food stamp intake on campus, welfare officials expected to send in a team of five food stamp qualifiers.

Five of their staff, however, were let go during the interval between the time of the arrangements and the first day of the UMass program. While these cutbacks are not expected to be permanent, they mean that only one state official has been able to be on campus this week, Fisher said.

He expects this will delay actual processing of the applications by about a month.

A second roadblock, he said, has been the lack of application forms. Originally, the Welfare Department printed only 5000 applications for the entire western portion of the state. Since it is estimated that approximately 10,000 UMass students alone are eligible for food stamps, this probably represented something of an underestimation, Fisher said.

To offset the shortage, the groups working to bring food stamps on campus (Commuter Assembly, the Commuter Affairs office, the Student Organizing Project, and the Student Senate)-have been printing applications for student use. There has been trouble with the printing press and applications have run out at times. Nevertheless, says Fisher, more applications are being printed and will be available shortly.

To qualify for food stamps, students need to meet the following criteria: They must be making less than a specified amount of money each month. After deducting rent, tuition, and certain other expenses, a single student making less than $194 per month qualifies if he or she satisfies the requirements below. Similar rates apply to students living in a collective situation sharing purchasing and cooking facilities. For example, four students living in a collective situation can make up to $500 per month.

They must have less than $1500 equity. If a student has a bank account in excess of $1500, a second car worth more than this amount, or certain other properties, he or she should check to see if this will block qualification.

They can't have a credit card in someone else's name. Students who have a credit card that belongs to someone else are automatically disqualified. Students with one should get rid of it, Fisher says.

They must have cooking facilities. This can be something as simple as a hot plate in a dorm.

Food stamps are not presently applicable to the UMass meal plans.

They must be able to document income and expenses. Documentation can be many things: a receipted rent check, a pay stub, a letter from an employer or parent stating income for the last five weeks, etc. Fisher says it's important to remember that the Welfare Department is only interested in the last five weeks. Students who earned large incomes at the end of the summer, but who are now earning substantially less, might do well, he advises, to wait for a few weeks until the time that the application will represent their present income.

Students who think they qualify should stop by Campus Center, room 911 for an application.

UMass dames get together

By Judy Boucher
Staff Reporter

Contrary to public opinion the UMass Dames Club is not the hottest sexist organization on campus created by and for women. The club is a RSO social organization for married women. It opened its first meeting Wednesday night with a wine tasting party.

The Dames Club attempts to introduce married women to each other by sponsoring monthly get togethers, card clubs, coffee hours and pot luck dinners. Gail Clerke, senior Chemical Engineering major, said, "I don't know very many other married women and married women have other interest than single women do."

Also, auctions will be held to raise money to buy craft kits to donate to nursing homes. "We want to do something worthwhile for the community and not just for ourselves" said Liz Bykowski, Secretary of the club.

Although there was much publicity on the iniation meeting only about 20 women attended. The general consensus was that the name was anachronistic and discouraged women from joining the club. President of the club, Isabel Coraror said "Interest died down due to the name and changing the name is a definate possibility."

However, "Most clubs defined as male or female are falling apart" she said.

The UMass Dames Club organized in 1954 is a local affliate of the National University Dames Club. Member of the club have diversified interest while a new member, Heike Wenig, is from Germany.

Ahora holds meeting

By MANUEL MEDINA

Ahora held the first meeting of the last semester Monday night in the Campus Center. More than 50 students and professors were discussing different issues concerning education and other affairs of the Spanish Speaking community on campus.

Benjamin Rodriguez, director of the newly formed Bicultural Collegiate Program, spoke about the services that this program offers to students.

Membership in Ahora for the new freshman students, including undergraduate as well as graduate students was also discussed.

The need for a Third World lawyer on campus was another item of discussion.

U.N. official warns of nuclear commitment and consequences

By DUANE DALE
Special Correspondent

UMass Doctoral Student Duane Dale attended the World Population Conference in Bucharest this summer and filed this report concerning nuclear energy. This is the fourth in a nine-part series:

A United Nations official has warned that "we're sliding into a commitment to nuclear energy, the consequences of which we haven't begun to fully evaluate."

Maurice Strong, formerly chairman of a nuclear energy company, is now director of the U.N. Environment Program. In 1972 he served as secretary-general of the U.N. Environment Conference in Stockholm. His remarks followed an Aug. 21 speech before the World Population Conference.

"I'm not anti-nuclear energy," Strong said. "I'm just appalled at the degree of public complacency with the fantastically changed situation resulting from our escalating commitment to nuclear energy."

Mr. Strong referred to the large number of nuclear plants in operation, under construction, and on the drawing boards. He indicated general approval of the safety standards which have been set for these plants, but doubted whether these standards could reasonably be enforced in every case.

Safety problems near a nuclear plant include the storage of spent fuel and the release of radioactive materials into the atmosphere. Many scientists are concerned that a failure of the cooling system and the emergency back-up system could cause a "core meltdown" and release large amounts of radioactive fallout, killing people as far as 50 miles away. This is unlikely, but the emergency cooling system is difficult to test.

Strong asked: "Is the commitment to nuclear energy going to be the most disastrous thing that we have done? This is a very real possibility. I'm not answering the question, but I think the question needs to be answered."

Officials of the International Atomic Energy Agency in Vienna are more optimistic about the safety of nuclear plants. They admit, however, that rural sites are preferred because fewer people would be endangered if an accident occurred.

was his opinion that Ariel had endorsed a particular commercial product.

Ariel, who does consultance work for Universal Resilate of Hampstead, L.I., had a 29-page publication entitled "Understanding the Scientific Bases behind our Universal Centurion," distributed at the American College of Sports Medicine Meeting in Knoxville, Tennessee last May.

It was Myers view that the booklet and several brochures were endorsing Universal products.

Ariel and William Farrell, president of Universal Resilate's Eastern office denied grounds for endorsement. Farrell warned that he would take legal action against anyone suggesting so.

Other questions raised by the brochure advertisements were the authenticity of some of Ariel's credentials.

In a brochure prepared for a March 26 conference in Atlantic City, N.Y. he was listed as a Ph.D. in Computer Science at UMass and the World's leading authority on computer bio-mechanics — both apparently erroneous — according to Graduate Research records.

Another identified Ariel as heading national grants for the Institute of Health and the Veterans Administration in the areas of Bio-Mechanics of Human Movements and the development of new prosthetic hips.

Washington and New York officials for both agencies said they could not verify Ariel's research or affiliation. A source from the graduate research center said he was not presently involved with the grants.

Ariel was also acknowledged for lecturing at the International Congress of Motion Biology in Budapest, Hungary — something he was unable to attend after having been "kicked out" of that country a year ago for unknown reasons.

He said yesterday that some of the information given in the brochures was inaccurate, but declined to elaborate.

Farrell maintained that "all these articles were done at the same time and in a hurry."

"It's not Gideon's fault, I was merely pressed for time, so I suppose I'll have to accept the responsibility in this instance."

If in fact Ariel endorsed a Universal product — as Myers conceeds — another legal question arises as to whether he is also vulnerable for false credentials appearing in the brochures.

Myers was unavailable to comment on that angle last night.

Atty. Beryl Cohen of Boston said that regardless of whether Ariel actually had endorsed a Universal product, "it would seem that at minimum he and Universal attempted to circumvent the policy of the University.

"It appears to me to be purposely deceptive of the University's practices."

Ricci, Ariels doctoral advisor for Exercise Science, has cited two instances of dual publication of Ariel's scientific articles.

Ariel submitted the identical article for publication to the Journal of Applied Physiology and Science and Medicine of Sport. The editor of the Journal of Applied Physiology which is a Yale University publication brought this to the attention of Dr. Ricci. Ariel stated at the time that he was unaware of the situation.

However, Ricci notes that several of his faculty members informed him of the existance of another dual publication. This time identical articles appeared in Mechanics and Sport and Research Quarterly.

When questioned directly concerning Ariel's misrepresentation of credentials and endorsements, Dr. Arbib stated: "We hope that Gideon has learned from his youthful mistakes."

Dr. Arbib, who was present at some of the faculty meetings when Ariel's appointment was discussed said that despite the charges of misrepresentation and defiance of University policy, "there was not enough evidence presented to us sufficient to block the appointment."

Student senates asks Ford to reconsider pardon

By MIKE KNEELAND
MDC Staff

The Student Senate met for the first time this semester last night and unanimously passed a resolution calling for President Gerald Ford to reconsider his pardon of former President Richard Nixon.

The resolution read:

"Due to President Ford's decision to pardon former President Richard Nixon, and since we view this pardon as a disgrace to a system of equal justice, we ask that President Ford reconsider his decision. If this decision is not forthcoming, we ask our state representatives in the U. S. Congress and Senate to move to continue impeachment proceedings against former President Nixon."

In other business, the resignation of former Student Treasurer Paul Hamel was announced. Jack Margossian has been filling in for Hamel, who accepted a position in the Alumni Office this summer. He announced his candidacy for the position. An election for the position will be held Sept. 25.

Although a quorum was present, some senators voiced concern after the meeting that a number of former senators are not returning.

This, they said, could be potentially damaging to the Senate and Student Government Association which have undertaken many new projects.

They said it's imperative more students take an interest in the government and the issues.

They said there will be quite a few positions available in the Oct. 2 and 3 elections.

The senate will meet at 7:00 p.m. Wednesday in room 101 of the Campus Center for their next meeting.

ATTENTION COLLEGIAN STAFFERS

A one hour general staff meeting is scheduled for Thursday at 8 p.m. in Campus Center room 904- 909.

Among items to be considered:

— election of new editor-in-chief. Nominations accepted in writing through Wednesday night. Give to Bill Densmore.
— introduction of Charlie Berube, business advisor; two part-time news advisors — Chuck Kidd and Chris Kertesz
— The Life-Style section and what you can do for it — by Sherm Boyson.
— Probable night staff reorganization — by Bill Densmore
— Suggestions for time of staff party. We'll all have to contribute money and food if we're going to have it.
— Fall Election coverage
— Possible Graduate Student Membership in Collegian — Mike Kneeland.

Also, Three Proposed Constitutional Changes

— Shall the editorial board election be held in December of each year? Vote yes or no. Simple majority carries.
— Shall Collegian constitutional amendments and editorial board elections be accomplished by either of two methods — secret balloting over a period of several days after due notification of question; or, vote tally of staff members assembled as a body at a particular time. Vote yes or not. Presently we must have a meeting to make changes or have elections.
— Amendment allowing the publishing board to choose a successor to the Editor-in-Chief should he or she resign.

If your name does not appear below and you wish to vote in the election and on the constitution changes, see Bill Densmore soon.

Tryouts in Roisters production

The Roister Doisters, the UMass student drama society, (and, incidentally the oldest student drama society in the country) will produce "The Martyrdom of Peter Ohey" by Slawomir Mrozek in October.

Mrozek, the leading dramatist of modern Poland has been called "an undisputed master of the grotesque, a sharp parodist of politics."

Open tryouts for this play will be held in the Campus Center rooms 171 - 173 on Monday and Tuesday nights, Sept. 16 and 17. Also on Wednesday night, Sept. 18 in rooms 174 - 76.

All are welcome to come and tryout. No theatrical experience is necessary.

Strachan seeks dismissal

Haldeman feels pardon hurts fair trials

WASHINGTON [UPI] — H. R. Haldeman charged yesterday that the "extraordinary event" of Richard Nixon's pardon has only added to massive publicity in the Watergate cover-up and further threatens prospects for a fair trial.

The first of the six cover-up defendants to react formally to President Ford's pardon of Nixon, Haldeman filed notions in federal court challenging jury selection procedures and the intention of U.S. District Judge John J. Sirica to sequester jurors throughout the long trial to guard against the influence of publicity.

Sirica meanwhile turned down another plea by Haldeman to delay the trial, scheduled to begin Sept. 30, and rejected a plea from another defendant, Gordan Strachan, that charges against him be dropped because of tainted evidence.

"The tidal wave of prejudicial pretrial publicity that has been cascading down on these veniremen prospective jurors for the past couple of years, and especially during the past two months, has been such that it seems doubtful that any jurors ultimately selected to hear this case could be further affected by the extrajudicial publicity that will flow out of this trial." Haldeman's lawyers said.

"While the debate regarding the propriety of the grant of pardon to President Nixon likely will continue for the indefinite future, the veniremen have already been affected by this news and sequestration will not erase this extraordinary event from their minds."

Haldeman asked —as codefendant John N. Mitchell had even before the Nixon pardon8 that the jurors not be locked up during the trial, due to start Sept. 30.

He also complained about the preliminary screening procedures Sirica has used to select the jury pool from which the cover-up jury will be chosen

Gas-masked South Korean police push back anti-Japanese demonstrators through cloud of tear gas during a protest gathering outside the Japanese Embassy yesterday. The demonstrators were protesting Japan's refusal to accept responsibility for the incident involving the would-be assassination of Korean President Park Chung-Hee. Japanese Foreign Minister Toshio Kinura later issued a statement in which he said that he does not consider South Korea the sole, legitimate government on the Korean peninsula.

Ford considering individual pardons

WASHINGTON [UPI] — President Ford yesterday issued new explanations of the Watergate pardon policy that provoked bitter protest Tuesday, saying he will only consider individual clemency pleas and not blanket pardons for all the defendants.

A presidential aide, who declined to be identified for publication, said "panic" had set in at the White House when Ford's pardon of Richard M. Nixon caused a public outcry and the follow-up promise to study further Watergate pardons "may have been a trial balloon," too hastily floated.

Ford relayed the clarifications through White House aides and Republican congressional leaders in an apparent attempt to cool the controversy stirred by the Nixon pardon and redoubled by Tuesday's announcement that possible pardons for all Watergate defendents were "under study."

"There is no study going on," said Senate Republican Leader Hugh Scott, who read Ford's brief restatement of pardon policy after he and other Republican congressmen had conferred with the President for nearly two hours.

But John W. Hushen, the deputy White House press spokesman, later qualified Scott's remark on the "study" issue. He said Ford is not studying specific Watergate pardons and has so far received no requests for any, but he has directed his staff to conduct several legal studies of his pardoning powers.

CIA faces symposium today on its foreign activities

WASHINGTON [UPI] — With a firestorm of its own raging about alleged interference in Chile, the CIA today faces a two-day broadside on all its covert activities abroad.

Hosted by Sens. Edward Brooke, R-Mass., and Philip Hart, D-Mich., the Center for National Security Studies has gathered a brigade of former CIA, Defense and State Department officials and lawyers, authors, researchers and journalists for "A conference on the Central Intelligence Agency and covert actions."

CIA Director William E. Colby has agreed to enter the arena tomorrow to give his "View from Langley," the sprawling CIA headquarters nestled in the countryside near Langley, Va.

The conference was arranged before press reports disclosed that Colby testified at a top secret hearing congressional hearing that the Nixon adminsitration approved $8 million for covert activities in Chile between 1970 and 1973 to "destabilize" the Marxist government of President Salvador Allende. Allende was overthrown by a military junta Sept. 11, 1973, and he either committed suicide or was killed during the attack on the presidential palace.

The State Department claims it had not intervened in the internal affairs of Chile after Allende's election in 1970 and specifically that it had nothing to do with the coup.

Colby reported last April to a closed session of the House Armed Services subcommittee of Intelligence on CIA activities in Chile. The subcommittee has an "oversight" function on CIA and other intelligence establishments.

Rep. Michael J. Harrington, D-Mass., a member of the subcommittee and a longtime CIA critic, wrote other congressmen about Colby's testimony, the substance of which leaked to the press.

The conference opening tomorrow is taking up covert CIA operations all along the line from legal, constitutional, ethical and practical aspects.

Among the panelists are Victor Marchetti, a former staff officer of CIA, and John Marks, former member of the State Department's Bureau of Intelligence and Research, who co-authored a book on the CIA which the agency succeeded in partially censoring.

Rocky can keep funds

WASHINGTON [UPI] — The Senate Rules Committee has decided that multi-millionaire vice presidential nominee Nelson A. Rockefeller should not be required to put his vast fortune in a blind trust or sell some of his holdings.

The committee voted instead to request that Rockefeller make a complete disclosure of his net worth when his confirmation hearings begin Sept. 23.

Chairman Howard Cannon, D-Nev., said the disclosure instead of a requirement for a blind trust or divesture would allow the public and the press to act as "watchdogs against a possible conflict of interest".

In New York City, Rockefeller's press secretary, Hugh Morrow, said "there is no question he will comply" with the committee's request to disclose his wealth.

The U.S. Gov't. appropriated millions of dollars to overthrow the democratically elected Popular Unity Government of Salvador Allende in Chile last September 11.

The same U.S. Gov't. refuses to allocate funds and resources for urgently needed Social Service Programs for our people. We must act in solidarity with the Chilean people against a common enemy.

Police arrest more than 120 on illegal pep pill violations

WASHINGTON [UPI] — United States, Mexican and Canadian police dealt a killer blow to the illegal pep pill market in this country yesterday with the arrest of more than 120 persons, including several "drug millionaires."

"There is no doubt about it. We have broken the back of the illegal amphetamine operation in this country," said Doug Chandler of the U.S. Drug Enforcement Administration.

Most of the 124 persons arrested were held in the United States, with 25 picked up in Mexico and one Mexican national arrested by Royal Canadian Mounted Police.

Chandler said he expected the total arrests to reach 140 this week.

"We got a couple of people in Mexico who are described as drug millionaires-they are drug rich," he said. "They have also gotten rich from traffic in other drugs."

"The operation has gone smoothly and there have been no injuries reported so far in the arrests."

Amphetamines have been widely used by truck drivers, students trying to stay awake, dieters and youngsters trying to get "high." But Congress has put strict limits on their sale.

The roundup followed an eight-month investigation the neighboring countries and Europe into the smuggling of more than three million "minibennies"-small Benzedrine tablets-into the United States annually from Mexico since 1971.

The DEA said raw materials for the pills came from some of the biggest chemical companies" in Europe and the traffic was worth about $1.6 billion a year in street sales in the United States.

Arrests were made in New York, Los Angeles, Milwaukee, Minneapolis, San Diego, San Francisco, Phoenix, Tucson, Dallas, Pittsburgh and Charleston, W.Va.

The Mexican suspects were picked up in Mexico City, Tijuana and Guadalajara.

Mexican police raided a half dozen pill "factories" yesterday after breaking up operations in four others earlier in the week.

In recent days, agents in Los Angeles, San Diego, Minneapolis and Dallas seized at least 500,000 "mini-bennies," said Stuart Stromfeld of the DEA.

"The raw materials used to manufacture these pills are being imported illegally from Europe," from some of the "biggest chemical companies," said Stromfeld. But he refused to name the countries or the firms.

Mozambique slammed by black-white riots

By United Press International

Portugal flew troop reinforcements to the Mozambique capital of Lourenco Marques yesterday to put down violent race rioting touched off by abortive white attempts to prevent Lisbon from handing administrative power to a black government.

The newspaper Star in Johannesburg, South Africa, quoted a senior official as saying at least 200 persons had been killed or wounded in the widespread racial violence. Lourenco Marques radio said nearly 100 people had been killed.

Hundreds of frightened white settlers fled into South Africa, where army units set up refugee tents near the border.

South African radio quoted refugees as saying the East African colony was near anarchy. A Lisbon government communique said troops were having difficulty in stopping spreading violence.

Witnesses at the South African-Mozambique border said many of the hundreds of Portugese settlers who crossed the frontier abandoned their cars and walked to escape from roaming black gangs and roadblocks.

Portugese living in Johannesburg organized food and transportation convoys to the border to help friends and relatives.

Just before most communications to Lourenco Marques were cut Tuesday night, a police officer told newsmen the riots in the black shantytowns were roaring out of control.

"This is another Vietnam," he said. "We don't know how to stop them."

The violence was touched off Saturday when Lisbon signed an agreement in Lusaka, Zambia.

Plane crash kills 69 in Charlotte

See photo on page 1

CHARLOTTE, N.C. [UPI] — An Eastern Air Lines DC-9 jet approaching Charlotte airport through patches of fog yesterday clipped the treetops, plowed into a ravine and exploded, killing 69 of the 82 persons aboard.

The 13 survivors included the copilot, James Miller Daniels Jr., 36, of Atlanta, and stewardess Judy Collette Watson, also of Atlanta.

The flight was Eastern's 212, bound from Charleston, S.C. to Chicago's O'Hare Field, with an intermediate stop at Charlotte.

Filled to near-capacity with 78 passengers and a crew of four, the plane was making a routine radar approach when it suddenly disappeared from the flight controller's radar screen at 7:33 a.m. EDT.

"Weather was not a problem," Federal Aviation Administration FAA spokesman Jack Barker said in Atlanta.

"Nothing in any conversations with the local controller prior to the mishap... indicated to the mishap... indicated any trouble," Barker said.

Barker pointed out that several flights had landed just ahead of the Eastern plane on the same runway-Runway 36, which runs north and south.

Robert Burnham, one of the survivors of the crash, recalled from his hospital bed:

"We were coming in and the pilot seemed to pick up power. It was real foggy. I felt one wing tip down, then we hit some trees and I felt heat."

"I must have been thrown out of the plane. I got up, looked around and started running toward the woods."

Mrs. John McDowell, owner of the 300-acre farm where the jet crashed, said she was reading the morning newspaper when she heard an "awful boom."

"I thought at first it was someone dynamiting," she said. "We could not see because of the fog. We didn't know what or where it was until this man pulled up and called the police."

Endangered species have friend at bank

There is a direct relationship and interdependence between all forms of life. Throughout the world, the number of rare animals and plants which are being lost forever continues at an ever increasing rate.

The Animal Bank is a critical complement to ordinary conservation efforts. It was formed in September, 1972 and began collecting tissue samples from endangered species of animals for long term storage in liquid nitrogen in December, 1972. Storage facilities have been provided to the U. S. Animal Bank without charge by the G. W. Hooper Foundation, University of California Medical Center in San Francisco, by the Department of Genetics at the University of Washington, Seattle and by the Department of Genetics at the University of California College of Medicine at La Jolla. All samples are available to the public without charge as a valuable resource for all humanity.

The response to the California Divisional Meetings held in June at Stanford University was outstanding. It was agreed that the participation of college groups in organizing the systematic transportation of samples from nearby zoos and aquariums would result in an essential reduction in the costs of obtaining these samples. Much useful discussion resulted from these meetings and it was agreed that a sponsoring college group should be found to oversee a meeting in southern California in the spring.

The basic purpose for saving samples is to preserve the DNA which describes the species from which a sample is taken. Many species of animals which would otherwise become extinct shall survive by saving such samples. Complete healthy animals such as frogs have been generated from such sources since 1968 and it appears that the techniques can be applied to any higher form of life.

For mammals, a host mother animal would be required to bear the young animal. The basic process involved is one called enucleation, in which a nucleus from a rare animal is placed into a donor cell from which the original nucleus has been removed. Such a donor cell is an oocyte or ova and contributes no genetic information to the cell which develops into an embryo. It appears that relatively few types of oocytes would suffice as donor cells for a broad spectrum of species. These "universal donor oocytes", as they might be called, could be routinely obtained from common species. It would appear reasonable that oocytes from some 4 or 5 species of birds for example might provide an adequate spectrum of oocytes for the subsequent generation of any type of bird from stored tissue samples.

Those who wish to directly support the collection of samples from specific endangered animals should request detailed information from the Animal Bank as to those species from which the collection of samples is presently practical. (In March, 1974, for example, diverse samples were obtained from unique and endangered animals on the Galapagos Islands). For more information please write the U. S. Animal Bank, P. O. Box 15426, San Francisco, Ca 94115.

Negotiations settle Senate budget dispute

second week in August. It was eventually presented to Dr. Gage."

The contract gave the lawyers to be hired the power to provide general legal counseling and litigation for the students. According to Savini, the latter is what upset Gage.

"He (Gage) wanted a contract with no litigation," Savini said, "so he froze the LSO portions of our budgets. Before doing it, however, he contacted Verre Chappel about freezing the LSO portion of the Graduate Senate budget also. One couldn't be done without the other because we merged with the Graduate students on the matter. Gage has no control over the Graduate budget. He needed someone connected with the Graduate School to back him up before the freeze could go into effect."

The freeze was lifted a week ago, according to Savini, "because Gage wanted a statement from us stating exactly what the powers of the LSO would be before we could develop the office. He didn't feel that our original statement was clear enough. Lindsey said that his major complaint is that "the administration raised questions too late about the process of developing the LSO."

The Senates were finally given a contract with a lawyer and one para-legal assistant. The lawyer hired by the Undergraduate Senate is William Dorsch. The Graduate Senate is financing the para-legal assistant, Lisa Erdberg.

Gage said that the freeze "had to do with no other element of the budget but the LSO. "The students," he said, "wanted an extension of what Dick Howland was doing, and that's how the LSO came about. I'm fully in support of it. The question of main concern was the extent of the staff and office prerogatives."

"I don't feel the students were being open enough about what the LSO was going to do, and until an understanding came through in the negotiations, we froze the LSO budgets. It was a temporary thing to continue our negotiations in good faith. We became locked into an unfortunate adversarial posture which I feel is quite non-productive," Gage said.

Lisa Erdberg, the hired para-legal assistant who is expected to be admitted into the Massachusetts Bar in December, had no direct comment on the freeze situation.

"I can't really say anything about it now. It was very confusing. One thing it did was hold up the opening of our office. It was supposed to be available to students as soon as they returned to the campus. As a result, we're backed up — mostly with students who are having landlord problems," she said.

Dorsh was not available for comment.

Campus bank considered

to pay as a rental fee. However, both Curran and Dr. Gage felt that a student-run credit union, which would be able to offer more loans to students and student groups, would be able to work well with the bank.

The branch bank has to be approved by both the Federal Government and the UMass Board of Trustees, neither of which have acted on the proposal yet. The proposal and the determination of the chosen bidder have to be approved, by the Board of Governors, Dr. Gage's office, and the University Treasurer.

Clark and Hart victorious in first elective attempts

Ramsey Clark and Gary Hart, two nationally known apostles of new left politics, scored victories in their first campaigns for public office but entrenched veterans triumphed in most of the 13 states which held primaries Tuesday.

Clark, a transplanted Texan and former attorney general under President Lyndon B. Johnson, bucked the party organization to win the Democratic nomination for the Senate in New York.

And Hart, a master of grassroots organizing who led Sen. George S. McGovern to the 1972 Democratic presidential nomination, slipped by two challengers to win the Democratic senatorial nomination in Colorado.

Rep. Hugh Carey, a 14-year House veteran from Brooklyn who, like Clark, was snubbed by party regulars, won New York's Democratic gubernatorial nomination.

There were few upsets, although two incumbent congressmen, Rep. Glenn Davis, R-Wis., and Rep. Robert Tiernan, D-R.I., were ousted. They were the seventh and eighth members of Congress to lose primaries this year.

Davis, a member of the House since 1948, tried to capitalize on his close friendship with President Ford, a move that appeared to have backfired after Ford granted former President Richard M. Nixon a pardon. Davis was beaten by State Sen. Robert Kasten.

Rep. Larry Hogan, seeking the GOP gubernatorial nomination in Maryland, was defeated by national committeewoman Louise Gore and may have been hurt by becoming the first Republican on the House Judiciary Committee to call for President Nixon's impeachment.

Based on the primary results, these are the lineups for the Nov. 5 general election:

New York - Clark will face highly popular Sen. Jacob K. Javits and Carey will meet Gov. Malcolm Wilson who took over early this year when Nelson A. Rockefeller resigned.

Colorado - Hart is matched against incumbent Sen. Peter H. Dominick, who was unopposed. Gov. John D. Vanderhood, an easy primary winner, will be challenged by Richard Lamm. who edged State Rep. Tom Farley to win the Democratic nomination.

Maryland - Gov. Marvin Mandel, a Democrat, survived a highly publicized divorce and remarriage to win the gubernatorial nomination. He will meet Mrs. Gore. Liberal Republican Sen. Charles McC. Mathias won easy renomination and will face firebrand Barbara Mikulski, a member of the Baltimore City Council.

New Hampshire - Republican Gov. Meldrim Thomson won renomination, and will meet lawyer Richard Leonard. Rep. Louis C. Wyman won the GOP nomination by a 5-1 edge to succeed retiring Sen. Norris Cotton. The winner of the Democratic primary was former State Insurance Commissioner John Durkin.

White boycotts planned

Court-ordered busing begins in Boston today

Compiled From Wires

BOSTON — Court-ordered busing to integrate the oldest public school system in America begins today in Boston. City and school officials have urged cooperation, white parents plan a large-scale boycott and police have canceled all court appearances to put officers on the street.

About 18,200 of the city's 94,000 public school pupils will be bused for the first time as part of an integration plan ordered in June by U.S. District Court Judge W. Arthur Garrity. He said the School Committee had "intentionally segregated schools at all levels" and, in effect, ran a dual school system for its 36,000 non-white pupils.

Busing opposition has flourished in the city's close-knit, white neighborhoods, South Boston, Hyde Park and Dorchester. Boycott leaders predict 40 per cent of the school system's pupils will stay out today. School officials will not predict the size of the anticipated boycott.

"I'm going along with the people," said Mary Binda, a South Boston mother who said Wednesday she would keep her three school boys home. "What is a mother supposed to do? Am I supposed to tell my kids they can't go across the street to school?"

Black community leaders said they expect many black youngsters to ride buses to predominantly white schools today, but others would stay home.

"The talk is bad," said Edward King, manager of the city's Little City Hall in South Boston when asked of the possibility of violence.

As a result there are expected to be many empty seats on the 240 buses the city has chartered to take 8,510 white and 9,725 non-white students to 60 different schools.

Continuations have been arranged for all court proceedings at which police officers were scheduled to appear today and Friday, an unprecedented action in Boston. In addition, police officials said men will be brought in on overtime to assist school integration activities.

Despite its Cradle of Liberty nickname and liberal reputation, anti-busing feeling runs strong in Boston's Irish, Italian and other ethnic neighborhoods. Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, long a local here, was booed and splattered with a tomato when he attempted to explain his pro-busing stand at a demonstration Monday.

School Supt. William Leary said yesterday that everything possible had been done in the time allowed to prepare for integration.

"I know there will be problems. I ask the public for patience," said Leary. "I request that parents in this community cooperate to allow students to walk into the schools."

Liberal candidates win big in primary

BOSTON [AP] — The liberals had a field day in the Massachusetts primary elections while voters expressed a very definite anti-incumbency sentiment.

The electorate, in addition, may have some difficulty distinguishing between the Republican gubernatorial nominee, incumbent Francis W. Sargent, and the Democratic nominee, former state Rep. Michael S. Dukakis.

Both carry the liberal label and both seem to stand shoulder to shoulder on most issues.

Paul H. Guzzi, the state representative who unseated State Secretary John F. X. Davoren, is a product of the reform movement which also produced Charles Mark Furcolo's primary challenge to Democratic state Treasurer Robert Q. Crane.

Furcolo lost. But the son of former Gov. Foster Furcolo ran a close race.

The time was ripe for the Guzzi-Furcolo challenge to entrenched incumbents in these traditionally low-visibility offices.

The media and other state officials had begun paying closer attention to the operations run by Davoren and Crane during recent years, and both officials frequently came under fire.

The margin of Dukakis' victory over Atty. Gen. Robert H. Quinn in the Democratic gubernatorial contest was unexpected, although Dukakis held the edge in the pre-primary polls.

Quinn has been regarded as an establishment Democrat, while Dukakis has been known as a maverick.

Sargent, who lashed out against partisan Republican politics in his primary campaign against challenger Carroll P. Sheehan, handily defeated this year's torch bearer for the conservative wing of the state GOP.

The upshot of the gubernatorial primary is that voters will be casting ballots for the same type of political ideology in November, no matter which man they choose.

Both men are oppose- to capital punishment and both support gun control.

And both, incidentally, say they can avoid new state taxes next year.

Environmental backlash hits Vt.

MONTPELIER, Vt. [UPI] — Signs of an environmental backlash in Vermont, the first state in the country to adopt statewide controls on land development, were readily apparent in the results of Tuesday's primary election.

The two leading legislative sponsors of land use control lost their bids for renomination, and a candidate who has promised to fire the state's most prominent environmentalist easily won the Republican gubernatorial nomination.

House Speaker Walter L. Kennedy, an opponent of strong statewide land use controls, defeated two opponents for the Republican nomination. He immediately called on Gov. Thomas P. Salmon, who won renomination over token opposition, to fire the state's environmental conservation secretary, Martin L. Johnson.

Lovejoy's battle

Mourn for Sam Lovejoy. Here is a man who committed an act of civil disobedience in order to bring to light the threat of the Montague Nuclear Power Plant and his platform to present his case has been destroyed. Recently his motions for presentation of evidence regarding the safety of nuclear power were thrown out.

Now Sam will probably be punished for his act. He will hopefully not be quieted. The man has a case against nuclear power and it is a strong one. He should now bring it to the people.

If anyone were to study the question he would find that the claims of the state and Northest Utilities are a sham. There is no safety in the use of Nuclear power.

For many years now Dr. Ernest Sternglass at the University of Pittsburgh has been studying the effects of nuclear plants. He has concluded that they kill people. The Atomic Energy Commission has said that Dr. Sternglass is distorting his figures and overreacting without reasonable foundation with his findings.

Yet, Dr. Sternglass was grilled about his results at Berkley and the defense he offers makes sense to layman and scientist alike.

Drs. John Goffman and Arthur Tamplin were once employed by the Atomic Energy Commission (AEC). They said for many years that they found no evidence to support the idea that any radiation from a nuclear plant might kill people. But when they studied Dr. Sternglass' reports and made some studies themselves they reversed their findings.

The National Cancer Institute has supported the findings of these studies. Even the AEC has admitted that it is possible that any small amount of radiation can cause damage to humans.

The studies point out a correlation between nuclear energy and infant mortality, cancer, respiratory diseases and other harms. Dr. Sternglass has found that the respiratory disease created by nuclear energy is even worse than that created by conventional forms of energy.

Yes, Sam Lovejoy has a point to make. If he is silenced by the events of his court trial someone else had better pick up his fight. It's about time that the public interest was served. The state and Northeast Utilities aren't going to do it. Sam Lovejoy is trying but he certainly could use a hand.

Don't say it doesn't concern you. It does. What happens at Montague can be more ice on the snowball against nuclear power. Ralph Nader sees a day when massive public outcry can bring about safe energy alternatives. But if Montague succeeds than the fight can only take that much longer. The fight is yours. It belongs to you, Montague, the Pioneer Valley, Massachusetts and the Nation.

Paul Goslin is a Collegian Commentator

Cynicism not the right word

By JOHN WARREN

My generation, such as it is, has as its sole notable, albeit notorious characteristic that of cynicism. The current issue of Esquire magazine, in a section devoted to "college kids" prefers the term "sensible" to that of cynical. "No more grasping for the infinite-right kids?" It asks in mocking fashion. As far as us kids go, though, it doesn't really matter which word is used [we're not much for words, anyway]; it amounts to the same mind-deadening thing.

In 1788 the English poet William Blake wrote "the desires and perceptions of man untaught by anything but organis of sense, must be limited by organs of sense." Blake wrote these lines in the context of an argument asserting the primary importance in a man's life of what he called the "Poetic or Prophetic Character," that is, the wise man within that enables a human being to be creative, transcendent of the merely sensible and "natural." The wisdom that Blake knew led to the vision of "the Infinite in all things," as opposed to the purely sensible man who "sees himself only." But Blake was what one at one time, before we so prostituted the term, might be called a wise man; and wisdom, real wisdom as opposed to the plastic platitudes of the marketplace (i.e. the Guru's knowledge, Grateful Dead lyrics, and acid-prophet's sproutings) is the most alien and taboo of topics for your average college student, since it can't be eaten, driven, listened to on one's stereo, or bought and consumed in any other way.

No, young people today are supposed to be "sensible" - translated to mean exclusively concerned with such absolutes as grades, getting into Med School, marriage and such. And yet, paradoxically, one is regularly treated to such spectacles as the swollen ranks of Guru worshippers. And then there's the reverent tones in which all that is supposed to be "natural" is spoken. Can these apparently conflicting images of "my generation" be reconciled?

Yes, unfortunately. What those who feel that the purpose of human life is solely to be a well-adapted animal, and those who pledge allegiance to the latest god-on-earth's salvation insurance plan and those who live but to get all the material goodies that Med School insures have in common is shared narrow-mindedness, a closed view on what man is and what human life means. Such reductionist attitudes toward the meaning of human life are cynical indeed. We're so sadly self-satisfied that we consciously recognize no need for transcendence. Real, self-created spirituality, concern with the questions basic to a life that recognizes the mutual involvement of all men, is as repressed in our collective mind as sex was to some of those before us.

Simple prescriptions - "back to nature" (as opposed to creativity), "back to religion" (as opposed to spirituality), "back to academics" (as opposed to genuine scholarship) reveal in those who embrace them a lack of sincere searching, of real concern with human suffering, a lack of honesty, in fact. The contradictions with which we live are appalling, obscene. We young Americans often speak and judge as if we were innocence personified. We buy our records and swell the profits of intricately corrupt record companies (as a recent C.B.S. Special revealed) - and blithely assume that Nixon had the market cornered on guilt. We aren't searchers, as some were before us. We're consumers, not creators.

My generation might think itself "free", as indeed it is in many superficial ways. But freedom in another perhaps deeper sense is innocence-and innocence is something that every individual has to create for himself. It requires that special gift of wisdom. But my sensible generation is obvious to such considerations. Rather than "grasping for the infinite" we are outselves grasped by our own narrow vision.

Fighting Ford's decision

To the Editor:

It is not a question of decency. It is not a question of how much or how little the man has suffered. It is a question of whether or not this system of justice can rightly shut its eyes this time and continue to expect respect and compliance from the rest of us. The burning issue throughout the nightmare of Watergate has been whether or not any individual, even the President, is above the law. Has this suddenly been forgotten? Has it now become unimportant? Apparently so. President Ford has pardoned Richard Nixon. Why? The answers have been given but the question remains.

Ford has told us he does not believe Nixon could now or in the foreseeable future, get a fair trial. That may be the case, but it is not the point. The Constitution gives the President the power to pardon a convicted felon, but in this case the charges have yet to be specified. To stop the legal machinery now and claim it will not work is not only irresponsible, it is dangerous. What gives any public servant the right or the power to invalidate judicial process?

The President also says he believes that by pardoning Nixon he is "closing the book" on the Watergate problem and ending its divisive effects on the country. What he doesn't say is that he is also sitting on the truth about what Nixon did and who helped him. I know he must testify and cannot take the Fifth, but there are questions that will never be asked if he is not on trial, and answers that will forever elude us. Ford also said he hopes to insure domestic tranquility by this move — in essence, he feels he has done what is best for our people, our country. But what can be better for our country than justice?

The decision to pardon Nixon must be strongly challenged — not because it is unpopular, or untimely, nor because it is unwise — because it is unjust. If Richard Nixon is not prosecuted, if the legal process is not carried out, then there is no justice, there is only privilege. If all men and women are not equal in the eyes of the law, then this system of justice that we hold up to the rest of the world and proclaim as the fairest, is but a cruel lie.

Before being confirmed as the Vice-President, Ford said the American people would not stand for a whitewash. He was damn right. We will not accept the pardon because it is just that. The only thing we will accept is the only thing we ask for - justice. I urge all those who share my anger at this betrayal to pressure their elected representatives and senators to challenge Ford's decision in any way they can. There may be very little we can do to alter what has happened, but there is something we all can do to make a difference — we can fight, we can refuse to be silent, and we can hope that maybe this time, someone will hear us.

The weighted scales of justice

To the Editor:

Kenneth Fonda's letter to the editor in the Sept. 10 Collegian was the most amazing letter I've ever read. He is really sick. God may have us forgive one another an grant Nixon afull pardon, but what about those men who went to Canada to avoid the draft? Shouldn't we, as God I am sure has, forgive them and grant them full pardons? Or is it that they weren't important enough, so they cannot be forgiven.

These men made a very big decision about their lives when they went to Canada. Chances were that they would never be able to return. Fonda cannot tell me that these men have not suffered. Perhaps their anguish and mental suffering is far greater than Nixon's ever was. They left their homes and many left families with the prospect of never returning to the U.S.; without being a social outcast and spending time in jail.

What gives Nixon the right to be completely pardoned and not these men. Nixon screwed the people of the U.S.; these men did not believe in the war in Vietnam. So they avoided it and wrecked their lives. However, most of these men were just ordinary people and many want to persecute them. I say if Nixon is absolved of everything, then these men have a far greater right to be absolved of their so called crime.

Back from the real world

To the Editor:

Joyce Kosofsky must be going through the same identity crisis I've been going through for most of my life too. It really is funny. The only reason I came to UMieland was because my guidance counselor in high school told me it would be a good idea to apply here. It was the only school to which I was accepted. So, I majored in English [no teaching or journalism — just English] because it was fun. I started to feel irresponsible and lost. "This isn't real", I thought; but I was having a lot of fun on my parents' money. About a month into the first semester of my junior year I stopped going to classes, and didn't feel responsible enough to withdraw until a few davs before Christmas. What I did with those last two months is still a mystery to me.

Then I decided that it was time to go out into the "real world", so I lived with my parents and got a job in a restaurant for $1.60 an hour. I bought a new stereo. Life was good, but I didn't feel I had enough freedom to pursue my college days' extra-curricular activities.

And so, just one short year ago, I moved to Pittsburgh to live happily ever after with my "true love". To begin with, we lived below poverty level, so I had to work as a waitress for 99 cents an hour. Then it slowly became clear to me that I had all the disadvantages of being married with none of the benefits. Life became a hassle, so I moved into my very own $60-a-month furnished room in the bad part of town.

It was there that I suddenly became responsible. By now I had worked my way up to $1.10 an hour. I found that there are men and women in Pittsburgh who truly believe that women have nothing more to offer the world than slave labor. I began to wish I had a "cute ass". My money ran out, and I got sores on my mouth from a vitamin deficiency because I couldn't afford to eat anything but the free hot dogs my employer gave me. Finally I got up the $35 for the short 17-hour bus ride home.

There are some things you can't even learn in the street, so I have come back to UMieland with the intention of fighting [Yes fighting because I'm in competiton with about 20,000 other students for the same courses, and eventually with 10,000 other qualified graduates in my chosen field for the same jobs.] for my degree and for whatever knowledge I can get. I am responsible for the cynicism I feel after OSCAR arbitrarily drops me from three courses that I need and paid for.

In her essay Ms. Kosofsky asks what she should be responsible for. For my part, I strive to be responsible for my future and to myself.

Dean Tucker

The year that ex-president Nixon ripped off the election from George McGovern, 1972, there were some 8,000 detainees in federal prisons for non-violent or victimless crimes, ranging from violations of the drug laws to crimes more ganster-oriented such as "Escape, Flight or Harboring" a fugitive. No doubt a similar number of people are still held in jails for crimes commited against society in a non-violent but nonetheless offensive nature.

It is unnecessary at this time to disclose that a disproportionate number of prisoners are poor, and black; there is no question any more than American minority groups have suffered the short end of the stick in terms of justice...even when such a thought as "equal justice under the law for all" prevailed.

Reviving the thought that all men are equal under the law at this point requires some very radical thinking. First of all the eight thousand prisoners being held for victimless non-violent crimes must be given a full and absolute pardon for their wrongdoings. They have suffered enough and will continue to suffer after their pardon.

Richard Nixon will sit the remainder of his days in a house paid for with funds of dubious origin surrounded by a staff paid for with taxpayers money, plus get a pension of $60,000 per year...which is probably more money than many of the embezzlers, forgers or counterfeiters got to spend of their efforts.

Not only has Nixon disgraced the United States in the eyes of the world, he has struck deeply at the modicum of patriotism left in Americans after the last twenty years of collapse from within.

Secondly unlike the commoners who are imprisoned for violating the law, Richard Nixon will never have to feel the door slam in his face as he searches employment. He will be too busy writing his memoirs to sell and add still further insult to the Watergate injury by capitalizing on his crimes in an autobiography.

Richard Nixon is a lucky man. If Gerald Ford had the slightest sense of justice in him there would be no double standard for Nixon and the draft evaders who have been offered a crumb, conditional amnesty, while Nixon continues to dine in regal splendor from a table he robbed.

Perhaps a condition for Nixon's pardon would have been for he and his marionette wife and insipid children to live in a working class neighborhood of poor blacks and whites. Maybe it would cross his mind what a terrible state of psyche and morale the country is in as we slouch on towards depression. One day in line for food stamps, or a welfare line would perhaps teach Richard Nixon that America is made up of human beings not precincts, counties, states, and regions Perhaps he would have to understand that we are all in this together, and that the packaging and marketing of a personality is not the real sense of America, just his sick distorted and destructive perception.

Where can we go from here to bring justice to those who have committed a crime but not had the elitist connection to be let off like the brat child of a influential man is in kindergarten? Every person who is presently in jail for a non-violent crime should be released today...not twenty dollars and a suit of clothes, but with a job waiting for them wherever the go. They should further be given a place to live, and assistance in organizing their personal lives after incarceration, including educational and medical benefits similar to those given veterans.

They should also be given full voting and citizenship rights free of harassment...the victims of intolerable environments that turn to crime should not be punished any more nor rewarded any less upon release than politicians such as Richard Nixon who in their saddening and maddening way create those environments.

"THE HONEYMOON IS OVER!"

The bouncing Booker

Though it is not the usual policy of this paper to applaud the accomplishment ot students as they pass through the University, once and while there is an exception. It is inspiring to watch a person rise through all the offices and channels of student government and finally leave it all in pursuit of greater achievement. That is why we are passing our congratulations to David Booker, that well-trimmed son of the bureaucracy, who none could help but notice when dealing with the Student Senate over the past few years.

David began his career in student service as a senator. He then quickly rose to be Chairperson of the Government Affairs Committee and the Commuter Assembly Executive Committee. Last year Dave was Student Senate Speaker and, one might add, he masterfully fit the role. His latest work has been done as a member of the Campus Center Board of Governors, a post he is leaving due to a conflict of interest with his new job.

Fortunately David will still be around the campus as he embarks on his new paying job. We will even be able to observe him often as he works. Dave Booker will soon be beginning his career as a bouncer in the Blue Wall.

They all look alike

By CHILLY WILLIAMS

On August 22, 1974, the First National Bank on Triangle Street was robbed by three men. The Amherst and UMass Police Departments were notified by a silent alarm that a robbery was in progress and in turn caught one of the burglars. The other two got away.

The description the police got from the bank teller was male, black, tall with an afro. Now I ask you, what kind of description is that? Evidently the police thought it was enough to go by, because for the next few hours the Amherst and UMass Police stopped and questioned every brother in 20-20 vision range. Unfortunately I happened to be one of the many brothers the idiots stopped, and brought down to the bank for the teller to identify. This is not the first time an incident like this has happened to me. I am tired of being stopped and questioned every time a brother commits a crime. Maybe brothers do look alike to some white people (the bank teller knew the difference), but I know for a fact that I don't look like Harry, Pete, or Johnny.

A lot of people may not believe what I'm saying but when it happens to you don't be alarmed or surprised. After all this country is only two hundred years old, Hitler was only in power thirty years ago, the civil rights movement and riots of the sixties are only a few years old... the plumbers are now doing their time, and Richard "Mighty Mite" Nixon is pardoned. 1984 is approaching slowly, don't be alarmed or surprised... be ready to deal with the man.

Children's book artists in Leverett

Leverett Craftsmen and Artists, Inc. will be the scene of an exhibition, reception and autographing party a week from Saturday when it plays host to a panel of five professional illustrators in the field of children's literature.

Illustrators Robert McClung, Eric Carle, Aldren Watson, Bette J. Davis and Julia Noonan will speak out about their experiences as artists and writers in the children's book industry, in a discussion to be moderated by Hatfield children's writer Jane Yolen.

The panel presentation is being offered by LCA in conjunction with the Society of Children's Book Writers and with the aid of the Massachusetts Council on the Arts and Humanities.

Beginning at noon that Saturday, books illustrated by the five artists will be on sale at the LCA salesroom. At 7:30 p.m., when the panel discussion will begin, LCA's gallery will feature a special exhibition of illustrator originals. Two visual demonstrations of the process by which a children's book is put together will invite investigation into the limits and possibilities of the medium, as well as give testimony to the levels of skill involved in an unusual and imaginative profession.

The "Children's Book Illustrators Speak Out" is the first event of the LCA Lecture-Workshop Series, a series of 6-8 lectures and workshops to be presented by LCA during the next ten months under a $3,500 matching grant from the Massachusetts Council on the Arts and Humanities.

Wine Paradise Of The Valley

Poet, musisian Gil Scott—Heron here Friday

By VALERIE WILMER
Black News Service

Black poet, musician and recording artist Gil Scott Heron will perform in Bowker Auditorium here this Friday night.

Born in Chicago and raised in Tennessee, the poet, who records on the Flying Dutchmen record label, has lived in New Yok since he was 13.

He has published a novel, The Vulture, and has released several LP albums, including "Pieces of Man," and "Small Talk at 125th and Lenox."

He and his conga combo have been critically acclaimed by artists like Richie Havens, Jose Feliciano, Jimm Reed and the late Otis Redding.

"Whatever he does is in unconvention," said Jimmy Reed. "I appreciate that. I appreciate things that are unique unto themselves because it takes heart to get out and express yourself."

It was Heron's "The Revolution Will Not be Televised" track on one of his albums received heavy airplay on underground rock FM stations around the country, including WLIP in New York.

"You will not be able to stay home, brother," the monologue cries, "You will not be able to plug in, turn on and cop out, You will not be able to lose yourself on scag and skip out for beer during commercials."

His poems have been printed by Time magazine. Among those printed was "Whitey on the Moon" which contrasts line by line the irony of life in the ghetto with the ludicrous.

The performance at Bowker Auditorium this Friday is sponsored by New Africa House in the Central Area, the Black Cultural Center.

Paid job available with children

North Village Children's Center (N.V.C.C.), J-16 North Village, Amherst, has a part-time afternoon paid position available to a UMass graduate assistant.

Student-volunteers are also being recruited as part-time help for either mornings or afternoons, several days a week. Credit can be arranged for their work.

N.V.C.C. has two sessions: a morning session from 8:30 to 12:30, for children between the ages of three and five, and an afternoon session, from 2:00 to 4:30, for children ages 2-3½. The fees are $130 per semester for the a.m. session, and $100 per semester for the p.m. session.

Both sessions meet Monday through Friday and follow the UMass semester schedule. The Center has openings for eight children in the p.m. session. Children of UMass students are given top priority. Children of UMass non-professional staff, professional staff and faculty are next given priority in that order.

Started in January, 1973, N.V.C.C. began its fourth semester on Monday, September 9. It was originally a parent cooperative working under the umbrella of the University Day School.

When the budget of the Day School was cut back in early 1974, it was doubtful whether the Center could continue.

In August, N.V.C.C. ceased being a cooperative and became funded through the office of Non-Resident Student Affairs at the University.

The Center offers a wide variety of learning experiences, ranging from art and music to field trips and yoga. Mainly, it's a place where children make friends, learn from and about other children and their environment, under the guidance of a full-time professional director-teacher and qualified assistants.

Pan-African Congress subject of talk tonight

By Black News Service

Dr. Walter Rodney, former Associate Professor of History at the University of Dar-es-Salaam, Tanzania, will speak tonight on "Pan-Africanism and the Sixth Pan-African Congress."

Dr. Rodney was a participant in this historic conference, which was held this summer in Dar-es-Salaam to bring together Black people from all over the world to discuss and implement Pan-African unity. This was the first meeting since 1945 when the Fifth Pan-African Congress was convened by Kwame Nkrumah and George Padmore, with Dr. W.E.B.DuBois serving as honorary chairman.

The talk will be held at Fayerweather Hall, Room 204, Amherst College, at 7:30 p.m. It is sponsored by the Black Studies Department of Amherst College in cooperation with the Five College Black Studies Executive Committee. There will be an informal reception with refreshments after the talk. The five college community is invited to attend.

Rodney was born in Guyana where he completed his pre-university schooling in 1960. In 1963 he was graduated with honors in History from the University of the West Indies, jamaica, and then went on to the School of Oriental and African Studies at the University of London, where he earned his Ph.D. in 1966. His doctoral dissertation: A HISTORY OF THE UPPER GUINEA COAST: 1540-1800, was later published by Oxford University Press and has been acclaimed as the definitive work on that region of West Africa.

New chairperson for Asian Studies

The Asian Studies Program announces the appointment of Professor Ching-mao Cheng, Associate Professor of Chinese, as its new Chairman. He will succeed the retiring chairman, Professor William E. Naff, Associate Professor of Japanese.

Cheng received his Ph.D. from Princeton University and taught Chinese language and literature at the University of California at Berkeley before coming to UMass one year ago. He has done extensive research in both Chinese and Japanese and is recognized as one of the leading scholars in the field of Sino-Japanese literary relations. This fall Cheng will teach third year Chinese, and in the spring he will continue with third year Chinese and begin a new course on "Masterpieces of Classical Chinese Poetry."

Under the chairmanship of Naff, the Asian Studies Program has grown to seven faculty members (four in Chinese and three in Japanese) and has developed a substantial range of courses leading to B.A. degrees in Chinese (Mandarin), and three years of Japanese, and two years of classical Chinese as well as a variety of courses on Chinese and Japanese linguistics. In addition, there is a growing list of English language lecture courses on the literatures (in translation) and cultures of China and Japan. The lecture courses are open to all students since knowledge of an oriental language is not necessary.

This fall a new lecture class will be offered, Chinese 290A (238), "Chinese Folk Religion." It will be a survey of the eclectic beliefs, practices, and institutions that are intertwined with folklore, customs, work, play, family, community, as well as religious and ethical thought. Prerequisite is junior standing, or a semester of Chinese history.

Community Chest seeks $60,000

Fifteen organizations and social service agencies meeting the varied needs of Amherst residents of all ages will benefit from the 1974 Amherst Community Chest Campaign.

The month-long campaign will open on October 1, with a $60,000 goal. Selection of the organizations and agencies followed a series of meetings among representatives of the groups and members of the Community Chest Budget Committee.

Relative to previous local Chest campaigns, a greater variety of organizations and agencies will benefit from the 1974 campaign. Mrs. Helen Field of 20 Hills Road, president of the Amherst Community Association, indicated that the budget committee held a series of meetings with representatives of 22 organizations and agencies. Fifteen groups were selected; further budget committee meetings determined the degree to which the campaign could meet their financial needs.

The theme for the campaign will be a quotation from a poem by Emily Dickinson, "Hope is the thing with feathers that perches in the soul."

'Dele Ojo' to do his thing here this month

The Emperor Dele Ojo and His Africana Internationals will launch the 1974-75 University of Massachusetts Arts Council Series a week from Monday, at 8 p.m. in the Student Union Ballroom. The event will also be the first in a series of Third World Cultural offerings the Council is sponsoring this season.

A truly authentic African group, inaugurated in Ibadan, the capital city of the western state of Nigeria, the Emperor and the Internationals will be presented in an evening of cabaret and dance in their first New England appearance.

Well known in England, where they have completed two resoundingly successful tours, Emperor Dele Ojo and His Africana Internationals also played an active role in entertaining the troops during the Nigerian Civil War. In constant demand in the West African countries, they have appeared in concert in Dahomey, Loma, the Republic of Togo and French West Africa.

They were among the featured artists performing at the cultural festival in Dakar in 1969. The Emperor and his group first arrived in the United States in August of 1972, performing for a select audience at the State Department in Washington. Since that time, they have played to acclaiming audiences in Virginia, North Carolina, Tennessee, Chicago, Dayton, Ohio and New York City.

For their visit to the Amherst campus the Emperor Dele Ojo and His Africana Internationals will perform native cultural dances and will play a lively variety of music for dancing, including indigenious African selections. Tickets for the Cabaret-Dance may be obtained from the UMass Arts Council Box Office, 125 Herter Hall, Amherst, 01002 and are priced at $2 for UMass students, $4 for the general public.

Continuing Ed gets $1,000 for women

A $1000 grant has been awarded to the Division of Continuing Education at the University of Massachusetts-Amherst through the Clairol Loving Care Scholarship Program, part of a $50,000 nationwide fund designed to encourage women over 35 to continue undergraduate degree programs previously interrupted by other responsibilities.

Recipients will be chosen by the Division of Continuing Education on the basis of need and merit. Women must be 35 or older and enrolled in either a full or part-time degree program through the Division. Applicant's general financial position will be taken into consideration.

Applications are due by Sept. 20, and may be obtained from the Division of Continuing Education, 545-0905, 205 Hills North, UMass, Amherst.

Continuing Education was selected on the basis of significant undergraduate programs specifically designed for women who face special counseling, scheduling, and financial problems.

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

By Stella Wilder

VIRGO: (Aug. 23-Sept. 7) — Business arrangements can be made well ahead of time. Keep to your own method of operation at this time; another's can wait its turn. (Sept. 8-Sept. 22) — Stick to a schedule that has proven feasible in the past. To try new ways and means at this time could mean to introduce a definite sour note.

LIBRA: (Sept. 23-Oct. 7) — Keep appointments even though you may have to put yourself out considerably to do so. There is no point turning another against you. (Oct. 8-Oct. 22) — Concentrate on those activities which require you to use your mental capacities to the utmost. Don't be persuaded into taking the easy way out.

SCORPIO: (Oct. 23-Nov. 7) — If your are wise, you will meet whatever events occur when they occur. To put off your responsibilities is to forfeit success. (Nov. 8-Nov. 21) Although problems on the home front may not have financial gain as an incentive to their solution, they must not be neglected. Tackle them at once!

SAGITTARIUS: (Nov. 22-Dec. 7) — This is not the "take it easy" week you may have expected. Do what you can to adjust to situations and circumstances that arise. (Dec. 8-Dec. 21) — Make no mistakes as to what issues are involved in your success this week. There is very little margin for error built into present events.

CAPRICORN: (Dec. 22-Jan. 5) — Conserve your energies. Make an effort to remain calm, to swim easily and laxily with the prevailing current. Fight against nothing. (Jan. 6-Jan. 19) — Although you have imagination and creativity, you would do well to keep both under absolute control this week. Remain calm.

AQUARIUS: (Jan. 20-Feb. 3) — Problems of employment may make it difficult for you to meet another's demand this week. Do what you can and then don't worry! (Feb. 4-Feb. 18) — You would do well to hold your enthusiasms in check all through the week. Approach your work affirmatively, but don't go overboard with eagerness.

PISCES: (Feb. 19-March 5) — If you would undertake a conciliatory course of action, make sure that those with whom relations are strained and are ready and willing. (March 6-March 20) — You could make an error of identification early in the week that would cause you regrets for many weeks to come.

ARIES: (March 21-April 4) — The future success or failure of this week's activities depends upon your willingness to adapt to present circumstances. Bend with the wind. (April 5-April 19) — Personal contacts will not be as helpful this week as you had hoped. Trust, instead, to your ability to help yourself progress.

TAURUS: (April 20-May 5) — You should be able to get a clear picture of your immediate future this week. Take care not to underestimate your ability to adapt to ills. (May 6-May 20) — A business association may cause you considerable trouble this week. Don't be alarmed if you are unable to change things to suit yourself.

GEMINI: (May 21-June 6) — Make decisions wisely, but don't expect everything you decide on to turn out your way. Develop old plans into new methods of operation. (June 7-June 20) — Make all plans in accordance with what you know from past experience you are capable of.

CANCER: (June 21-July 7) — A new professional project could prove more than you expected where hours and labor are concerned. Find relief through the attainment of new knowledge. (July 8-July 22) Depend upon your own knowledge and your own ability to act. If you depend upon others, you may be in for genuine disappointment.

LEO: (July 23-Aug. 7) — Keep financial issues from boiling over at this time. You would do well to ask for professional help early in the week.

We invited a few friends for dinner and they helped clean up the Genesee River.

With the aid of a few thousand pounds of microorganisms, we're helping to solve the water pollution problem in Rochester. Maybe the solution can help others.

What we did was to combine two processes in a way that gives us one of the most efficient water-purifying systems private industry has ever developed.

One process is called "activated sludge," developed by man to accelerate nature's microorganism adsorption. What this means is that for the majority of wastes man can produce, there is an organism waiting somewhere that will happily assimilate it. And thrive on it.

The breakthrough came when Kodak scientists found a way to combine the activated sludge process with a trickling filter process and optimized the combination.

We tested our system in a pilot plant for five years. (At Kodak, we were working on environmental improvement long before it made headlines.) And the pilot project worked so well, we built a ten-million-dollar plant that can purify 36-million gallons of water a day.

Governor Rockefeller called this "the biggest voluntary project undertaken by private industry in support of New York State's pure-water program."

Why did we do it? Partly because we're in business to make a profit—and clean water is vital to our business. But in furthering our own needs, we have helped further society's. And our business depends on society.

We hope our efforts to cope with water pollution will inspire others to do the same. And, we'd be happy to share our water-purifying information with them. We all need clean water. So we all have to work together.

Lee raps Johnson, 'double standard'

MANCHESTER, N.H. [AP] — Boston Red Sox pitcher Bill Lee has accused manager Darrell Johnson of "dumb managing" and said Johnson treats his pitchers unfairly.

He said Johnson "doesn't like me" and that he expects to be traded after this season.

Lee's remarks before the Manchester Exchange Club were quoted in the Manchester Union Leader Wednesday.

He called Johnson's treatment of Luis Tiant a "double standard." and said Tiant did not have to run with the other pitchers. He said Johnson "told me something about Tiant being around for a long time and knowing what to do."

Johnson had no comment on the remarks. A Red Sox spokesman said they were "typical" of a pitcher's comments during a slump.

"If you look at Tiant's record, you will see that Johnson has handled him properly," the spokesman said.

Lee had several specific criticisms of Johnson's work as manager. He said Rick Wise's arm problems were caused when Johnson had him pitch nine innings in a "blizzard."

Johnson "gave up" on Tommy Harper early in the season, and used poor judgement in not having Juan Beniquez bunt with runners at first and second and no outs in a recent Minnesota Twins game, Lee said.

The Union Leader quoted Lee as saying "But don't get me wrong. Johnson's a winning coach, but I think it may take time."

Lee said he thought the Red Sox could finish first, but that Cleveland is "the team we'll have to beat."

"We're still battling, but we just can't win every day," Lee said.

The UMass field hockey team, coached by Ms. Carol Albert, will begin its new season Saturday, Sept. 28 when they will host twelve area colleges at the North P.E. building. The girls will play ten regular season games including matches against some of the best competition in New England.

Last year the squad lost only one game and this season, they hope to do even better. Miss Albert is pleased with the tryouts stating, "The team looks good and strong." Although the final team remains to be chosen, thirteen representatives from the UMass squad attended a field hockey weekend in Maine recently where against some of the strongest teams in the northeast they finished 4-2. The final squad of thirty girls will be selected by the end of next week.

National Hang Glider meeting this weekend

All hang-glider pilots are welcome to attend the fly-in and competition at the National fly-in and hang-glider competition to be held this Saturday and Sunday, September 14 and 15, at Magic Mountain Ski Area, Londonderry, Vermont. The two-day event is being sponsored jointly by the New England Hang Gliding Association and the Windward Kite and Glider Club of New England.

Competition events will include spot landing, duration, and "over-the-line" (speed). Trophies and ribbons will be awarded. The mountain is a great one to fly just for the fun. Flights will be made from the top (1600 ft.), and the midstation, and a slope will be set aside for beginners. The mountain faces NNW.

To reach Magic Mountain, take Route 91 to 103, then turn left onto Route 11. Magic Mountain is in Londonderry, Vermont.

There are numerous hotels at the foot of the mountain, and camping will be permitted at the site.

Saturday's schedule will consist of registration and flying from 8:00-10:00, and competition events and fun flying from 10:00 until dusk. Sunday's schedule will consist of competition flying from 8:00-12:00 and demonstration flying from 12:00-dusk. Further information about the competition can be obtained from Tom Milkie (617-772-3561) or Walt Niemi (617-345-7337).

Muhammad Ali poses for photographers prior to his departure for Zaire, where he will fight George Foreman. Ali says he is "going back home" to whip Foreman who is rumored out of shape.

Foreman rumored overweight

LONDON [UPI] — A British sportswriter said Wednesday that World Heavyweight Champion George Foreman, who defends his title against Muhammad Ali in just two weeks in Zaire, is so overweight that even his aides are embarrassed.

Barry Newcombe of the London Evening Standard, reporting from Foreman's stopover news conference in Paris, said the champion "shuffled and wriggled and weaved and dived — but could not hide the fleshy fact that two weeks before his mighty showdown with Muhammad Ali, he is alarmingly overweight."

"Embarrassed George, his huge stomach straining against the blue denim of his embroidered boiler-suit, brought equally embarrassed stares to the eyes of some of his camp followers," Newcombe said.

Newcombe quoted a Foreman aide as saying, "that bread basket is too big. It wasn't so bad when he stood up because he's a big guy, but when he sat down it was appalling. His dog looks in better shape."

Ex-Cards investigated by Kuhn

ST. LOUIS [UPI] — A representative of baseball commissioner Bowie Kuhn Wednesday investigated court records showing that a former boxing promoter, who pleaded guilty to income tax evasion, lent more than $155,000 to three former St. Louis Cardinals players and the team's announcer.

Henry Fitzgibbon of Kuhn's office arrived Tuesday, one day after Eddie Yawitz, who managed boxer Virgil Akins when he won the welterweight championship in 1958, pleaded guilty to the charge.

Records show Yawitz loaned the money to Dal Maxvill, Joe Hoerner and Larry Jaster and announcer Jack Buck. The records is U. S. District Court also showed Yawitz invested $30,000 in a firm known as Jack Buck Enterprises, Inc., and bought stock in the names of Buck and Jaster.

Buck and the former Cardinals have declined to comment on the matter. Hoerner, who pitches for the Kansas City Royals, is the only one of three still active in the major leagues.

Yawitz pleaded guilty to the charge of income tax evasion that came on evidence developed by the organized crime strike force. He will be sentenced Sept. 20 by U. S. District Judge John K. Reagan and faces a maximum penalty of 13 years in prison and fines of $25,000. He now operates a drug store.

SMU prays for stricken Frosh player

DALLAS [UPI] — Swaine Staten, a Southern Methodist University Freshman football player, was unconscious and listed in critical condition Wednesday with Meningocioccal Meningitis and doctors immediately took precautions to prevent the rest of the team from infection.

Team physician Cash Birdwell said he did not believe anyone had contracted the disease from Staten.

"Dwaine is an extremely fine young man," said SMU head coach Dave Smith, whose squad opens the season Saturday night against North Texas State. "It's a difficult time for us all now.

Schubert survives Pats' cut

FOXBORO, Mass. [UPI] — The New England Patriots Wednesday waived 15 players, including defensive veterans Ron Acks, Rick Cash and George Noey, and placed 10 players on the injured reserve list in bringing the roster to the 47-player limit.

Other veterans released included linebackers Edgar Chandler and Bill Peterson, running back Wayne Patrick, defensive end Nate Dorsey, former NFL punting champ David Lewis, Guard Willie Banks and recently purchased tight end Craig Cotton.

First-year players waived were running back Skip Lyman, defensive tackle Phil Engle, defensive end Ron Fernandes, tight end Ed McCartney and linebacker Larry Cameron.

Lighting Lou

Lou Brock steals for a living. In 1967 he stole the World Series from the Boston Red Sox. In 1968 he tried to steal the World Series from the Detroit Tigers but failed and the Tigers ended up stealing the series from the Cardinals, winning the last three games after being down 3-1. In both series Brock stole seven bases, breaking the previous series record. Two nights ago he stole the thing that he had been trying to steal for quite awhile, that being the all-time season record which was held by former Los Angeles Dodger Maury Wills.

When Lou stole his 104 and 105th bases of the season against the Phillies the other night he also moved into the fourth all time position for stolen bases, one up on old-time Pittsburgh Pirate Max Carey. He now is the all time leader of the National League in the base-swiping department.

At the ripe old age of 35 Brock appears to be in his prime. At a time when most other major league players are contemplating retirement or becoming designated pinch hitters, he is batting a a brisk .314 pace and is 21 games ahead of Wills' stealing schedule of 1962.

Brock sees stealing as an art and as a discipline. He studies his opposing pitchers before every game to check their motion. He tooks for distinguishing movements that might give away where the pitcher is going with the ball. What most teams have found is that the best way to stop Lou from stealing is not letting him get on in the first place. Because once he reaches first base Brock gives everyone fits. This season when he has reached base even in Cardinal away games, the fans immediately start chanting a mixture of, "Lou, Lou, Lou," and "go, go, go," which in itself is distracting enough to the opposing team. Lou by this time is usually teasing the pitcher with a five step lead that he has almost no trouble of recovering from if the hurler should fall prey to his wishes and try to pick him off. Four times this year Brock has stolen on the first pitch he has ever seen a certain pitcher throw in a game.. Also four times has he stolen on consecutive pitches. When Brock gets the jump it is safe to say that he will get the base. He has made 5 out of every 6 attempts successfully this season. At his age he would really be killing his legs if it were not for short, quick, straight on slide that he uses. He goes into the base and is up from the slide in a matter of a split second.

Ted Sizemore, whom Brock calls his partner in crime, is the man who bats behind Lou. Sizemore is often ducking away from pitches that go astray because of Lou's antics on the base paths. Lou has told Ted before that he wishes Sizemore would not swing for some of the pitches that he does just because Lou is going on that pitch. Together they have pulled off more heists than Bonnie and Clyde.

Brock says that he will keep on running until he is not happy with his performance any more. When one reporter once asked Lou earlier in the season for a general feeling on the game today, Lou answered that, "I hate first base." When someone else asked the logical, "why?", Lou answered, "that is obvious sir, because you can't steal it."

Birds win 3-2, in 17

BALTIMORE [UPI] — Boog Powell singled across Paul Blair with the winning run with one out in the bottom of the 17th inning off reliever Cecil Upshaw to propel the Baltimore Orioles to within one game of the American League East lead in a 3-2 marathon victory in the first game of a Wednesday twi-night doubleheader.

Powell, who was batting for designated hitter Curt Motton, lined a hit to left center field after Upshaw, 1-6, had issued one out walks to Blair and Bob Grich. Grant Jackson, 2-4, gained the triumph in relief of Bob Reynolds with 2 1-3 innings of shutout ball.

Orioles' starter Ross Grimsley pitched 14 innings before giving way to Reynolds. Yankees' starting pitcher Rudy May worked 9 1-3 innings with Sparky Lyle coming on for 6 2-3 superb innings of two-hit relief prior to Upshaw's appearance to open the 17th.

It was the longest game of the season for both clubs and it was the fourth straight extra-inning contest for Baltimore and third for New York.

New York grabbed a 2-0 lead in the second inning. Alex Johnson smacked a lead off double to right field, advanced to third on Thurman Munson's ground ball to the pitcher and scored on Graig Nettles' sacrifice fly. Consecutive singles by Chris Chambliss, hitting safely in his ninth straight game, Sandy Alomar and Jim Mason scored the second run.

Etchebarren, a .197 hitter, clouted a one-out solo homer in the fifth inning to tie the game 2-2. The homer was Etchebarren's first of the season and 11th RBI in 52 games.

The Orioles loaded the bases on May in the seventh inning with no outs on a Cabell single, a walk to Etchebarren and a bunt single by Mark Belanger. Blair, the next batter, grounded to third baseman Nettles, who collided with Cabell, running from third to home, and a double play was ruled when Cabell was called for interference. Baltimore manager Earl Weaver was ejected by first base umpire Ron Luciano for arguing with place umpire Art Franz.

The Orioles threatened in the 10th when they loaded the bases with one out but Lyle got Earl Williams to pop up and Don Baylor to fly out and end the inning.

The game, which started at 5:30 p.m., lasted four hours and 12 minutes. The Orioles waived their normal midnight curfew for the second game so the teams can play until the 1 a.m. American League curfew.

Perry tops Sox, 3-1

CLEVELAND [UPI] — Gaylord Perry tossed a five-hitter in picking up his 19th victory of the season and 10th straight career victory over Boston Wednesday night to pace the Cleveland Indians to their fourth straight victory in a 3-1 decision over the slumping Red Sox.

Perry, who had a 3-9 mark after winning 15 straight games, struck out four, walked four and lost his shutout in the fourth when Carl Yastrzemski walked and scored on Rico Petrocelli's double.

Ed Crosby, subbing at third for Buddy Bell, singled, took second on Frank Duffy's sacrifice and snapped a 1-1 tie by scoring on George Hendrick's two-out double in the fifth. Crosby also doubled home Tom McCraw from second with an insurance run in the sixth.

The Indians grabbed a 1-0 lead in the first against Dick Drago. John Lowenstein led off with a single, stole second and scored on Charlie Spikes' two-out, broken bat single to left.

Perry, who is now 12-1 against Boston, suffered his only loss to the Red Sox on August 9, 1972 when he dropped a 5-2 decision to Sonny Siebert.

The Red Sox, who led the Eastern Division by seven games on August 23, have now lost three straight, 11 of their last 13 and 14 of their last 18 games.

Grid Club Luncheon held

By Rich Sevieri

"If we lose this year, we'll lose them my way," said head football coach, Dick Mac Pherson, at the innaugral Gridiron Club luncheon at Newman Center yesterday.

"The questioning of the coaches caused us to be 6-5 last year," continued MacPherson."This year the team has listened, and done what we have asked of them"

Sharing the head table with MacPherson were co-captains Ed Mc Aleny and Dennis Kiernan, along with assistant coach, Bob Harris. Harris just returned from scouting Villanova's opener last week at Richmond.

"Villanova controlled the whole game, then fell apart in the final minutes and lost with 20 seconds left," said Harris. "They're a big team with average speed, with a young and inexperienced offense."

Harris also related the trials and tribulations of scouting UMass opponents, the glamour of flying Allegheny and Mohawk props around the circuit, and the exotic weekends in Kingston and Orono.

Co-captains Kiernan and Mc Aleny reluctantly modeled the new travelling sweaters and shirts that the players paid for themselves. Both are looking forward to a successful season.

"For three weeks we've been pointing toward Saturday and Villanova," said Kiernan. "When we meet here next week we'll have alot of good things to talk about."

"We're looking forward to having fun on Saturday and the coach says the way to have fun is to win," said Mc Aleny. This Saturday I think we'll be sending a nice postcard back from Philly."

The Gridiron Club was initiated last Spring, and will replace the now defunct Varsity M. Luncheons will be held each Wednesday at Newman Center. Game films with analysis by the coaches, and the pretty faces of cheerleaders and twirlers will be featured.

A moment of silence was observed for the late Monsignor Powers, the founder of Newman Center, and an avid fan and supporter of Umass football, who passed away in August.

Glenn Foster

Where are they now?

Steve Schubert has survived the final cut of the New England Patriots! After graduating from these hallowed halls in 1973, Schubert signed as a free agent with the San Diego Chargers. He was subsequently cut. Then he hooked up with the New England Colonials of the Atlantic Coast League, became all-pro in that circuit, helping lead a semi-pro team to the league's championship.

What about other former UMass athletes? Where are they now?

Continuing with football players, there are still the two veterans of NFL wars, Milt Morin and Greg Landry. Morin, for those of you who don't know, is the fine tight end of the Cleveland Browns and Landry quarterbacks the Detroit Lions. Incidentally, Landry is still hurting from an injury sustained last year so Bill Munson will open at QB for the Lions on Sunday.

Other good news has been made from the UMass gridiron. Tim Berra has survived the final cut with the Baltimore Colts (where he will be joined by Amherst College's fine receiver Freddie Scott). And Bill deFlavio is currently performing for the New York Stars of the WFL. Unfortunately, I agree with a little kid who was introduced to WFL founder Gary Davidson. Upon shaking hands with the man who has ruined professional sports, the kid said, "I watch all your games on TV Mr. Davidson, too bad they're not as good as the pros."

Piel Pennington has had nothing but tough luck. He signed with the Detroit Wheels and then was traded to the Chicago Fire for two nobodies. While scrimmaging with the Fire he suffered a disabling injury and was cut from the squad. So Pennington found his way to the Denver Broncos, who had has NFL draft rights. Now he's out for the season. But, for you trivia fans, though I'm not quite sure, it just could be that Pennington is the first player to jump from the WFL to the NFL.

Now the sad news. John Hulecki, former Minuteman tight end, quit after a few days of training camp with the Patriots. Paul Metallo went to camp with the Kansas City Chiefs last year, was cut and also ended up in the Atlantic Coast League. He played with a team called the Western Massachusetts Pioneers whose home was in Holyoke. And the other day, Paul Metallo was cut by the Green Bay Packers.

From the baseball team, Bob Hansen of East Boston is currently employed by the Milwaukee Brewers, pinch hitting about once a week. Of more recent fame Ed McMahon, who was named to the Sporting News All-America team in '73, is having trouble. He was drafted by the Minnesota Twins and assigned to Tacoma. That was last year. This season he slipped two notches to Lynchburg, Virginia.

Pitcher Mike Flanagan was leading Florida State League hurlers in strikeouts at mid-season when the Baltimore Orioles decided to promote him to their team in Asheville, North Carolina. (He had been with Miami.) Steve Newell is Montreal property as a member of the Quebec City Carnivals in the Eastern League. Last, but not least Ron Beaurivage was drafted this past June by the Oakland A's who shipped him to the Lewiston (Oreg.) Broncs.

From the hockey team, goalie Chick Rheault will go to training camp with the New Yrok Islanders next week. With one of that team's goalies, Gerry Desjardins, jumping to the WHA - Rheault could move up the organization ladder pretty fast.

You know what Julius Erving has done. He IS the American Basketball Association, a member of a championship team, led league in scoring, MVP). Al Skinner will also join the New York Nets at their rookie camp starting Sept. 17. According to Coach Jack Leaman, Skinner "never even got in touch with the Celtics."

Other recent hardcourt alumni have gone in interesting directions. Peter Trow will be teaching and playing in Holland. Tom McGlaughlin will be competing in the World International Basketball League in Geneva, Switzerland. Tom Austin is considering joining his ex-teammate there. And finally, Charlie Peters is with the famous accounting firm of Price and Waterhouse. They're the people who count up the votes for both the Academy and Emmy awards.

So, the class of 1975 has its work cut out for them.

Mitchell ask dismissal of charges

WASHINGTON [UPI] — U.S. District Judge John J. Sirica yesterday denied demands by three major Watergate conspiracy defendants for a dismissal of charges on grounds that Richard Nixon's tacit admission of guilt by accepting a pardon had made a fair trial for them impossible.

Sirica also rejected their request that the cover-up trial be postponed indefinitely because the mass of publicity over the Nixon pardon. But he did order a one-day delay, until Oct. 1, to permit calling a fresh batch of nearly 1,000 prospective jurors.

The rulings were issued after a closed 90-minute meeting with lawyers for the six defendants in the cover-up case.

The motions by former Attorney General John M. Mitchell and one-time top Nixon aides H.R. Haldeman and John Ehrlichman for dismissal of their indictments or a lengthy delay of their trial had been filed only hours before.

But Sirica did grant a Haldeman motion to dismiss the 400 prospective jurors who have already survived a preliminary screening process, and to call a fresh pool from which 12 jurors and six alternates will be selected.

The court in early July had sent questionnaires to more than 700 District of Columbia residents asking if they would be able to serve on a sequestered jury for a highly publicized criminal case expected to last three to four months.

Haldeman contended that this tipped off prospective jurors that they might be serving on the Watergate cover-up jury and thus might have been influenced by Nixon's subsequent resignation and pardon.

In a draft of his formal order which will be filed this morning, Sirica said the grounds for Haldeman's request for a new jury pool were "insubstantial," but that he would grant the plea, "out of an abundance of caution."

He said the new jury pool would be composed of about 175 persons already notified to report for routine jury duty Oct. 1, plus about 800 others.

He said Special Prosecutor Leon Jaworski, who had representatives at the meeting, had no objection. He also said he would decide at the opening of the trial whether the jury would be sequestered.

Mitchell was the first to file for dismissal of all charges yesterday. Motions from Haldeman and Ehrlichman followed within a few hours. The three pinned their motions to the pardon for Nixon and claimed they should not be prosecuted while Nixon goes free.

Court suits in Ariel case

and
MARK VOGLER

Two UMass professors are involved in a court suit by a third Prof. Benjamin Ricci, over the controversial hiring of Gideon Ariel as a Prof. of Exercise Science.

Ricci and Dr. Stanley Plagenhoef — the department's only opposition to the hiring of Dr. Gideon Ariel — now have separate law suits pending against the controversial professor.

Their case was strengthened earlier this week when a woman graduate student filed suit in Boston Federal District Court on the grounds that the University affirmative action policy was intentionally aborted to place Ariel on the faculty.

Ricci, who challenged the appointment of Ariel in an April 24 memorandum, shortly after was the recipient of two anonymous letters accusing him of being "anti-Semitic." After claiming to identify the author as Ariel, he filed a $50,000 libel suit in Hampshire County Superior Court. Ricci's arguments have gone unchallenged.

In fact, in a May 24 memorandum to Vice Chancellor of Academic Affairs Robert L. Gluckstern claimed Ariel's authorship was admitted to Dean David Bischoff.

Before an after the affirmative action waiver was requested by Department head Harry Campney, Ricci asked Chancellor Bromery to initiate investigations into the matter: on May 2 and May 24.

"It goes without saying that anonymous charges of this sort are wholly inconsistent with ethical and intellectual values of this University," the Chancellor wrote Director of Public Safety David L. Johnston in a May 24 memorandum.

He continued, "I do not, of course, know any of the circumstances concerning these two anonymous communications. It does seem to me appropriate, however, that a suitable investigation should be made of the sources and circumstances surrounding these accusatory anonymous documents."

Johnston failed to comply with the Bromery request in behalf of Ricci. The UMass professor conducted his own inquiry and then took court action.

Despite his attempts to bring the issue before those supporting the appointment of Ariel, the matter was not taken seriously by members of the administration. Ricci maintains the letter incident may have an adverse impact on his reputation.

THE DENIAL

...Bromery replies

By KATHY SHEEHAN

Whitmore officials have denied any wrong doing in the hiring of Dr. Gideon Ariel to the Physical Education's Department of Exercise Science.

Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery said in a Collegian interview yesterday, "I dispute anybody inferring I have compromised affirmative action procedures."

Bromery also said he is convinced there was no violation of guideline procedures in the appointment of Dr. Ariel. "I resent anybody inferring that there is."

Bromery refused to comment in detail on the incident since court litigation has been brought by a UMass graduate student charging an affirmative action search was stymied. Instead, he said the controversy seems to be a personal conflict between two department members.

"It is unfortunate that this personal conflict has erupted," he said. "There are things that may be improper, but not illegal." he said referring to charges made by Professor Benjamin Ricci against Dr. Ariel.

Vice Chancellor of Academic Affairs Robert L. Gluckstern also refused to comment on the charges brought by graduate student Elizabeth Ebacher that affirmative action policy was violated. "This is a case between two individuals," Gluckstern said.

Gluckstern said the code was not overlooked in the appointment of Dr. Ariel.

AN INVESTIGATION

...Hearings wanted

Richard Savini said yesterday that University officials "should clear the air right now" regarding the lingering controversy in the Physical Education's Department of Exercise Science.

"It's time for Chancellor Bromery and other UMass administrators to open a full investigation into this matter, once and for all," Savini said.

"A lot of serious allegations are flying which should be answered... the whole thing was completely missed by the University, and I just don't understand why they did it."

Savini said public hearings should be held to determine whether University affirmative action policy was abused in the appointment of Dr. Gideon Ariel.

The SGA president also urged Exercise Science Department heads to review charges that Ariel and other faculty members were guilty of misconduct and gross violations of staff personnel practices.

"I intend to ask Chancellor Bromery to initiate a thorough inquiry into this mess, with a full public report resulting from such hearings," Savini stated.

"Up 'til now it's rather obvious that the University has tried to hush things up under somewhat covert activities. This is a campus issue which should be solved by campus administrators in a community setting--and not by the trustees unless necessary."

As SCA present, Savini is currently a member of the UMass Board of Trustees.

Court suits pending

"Inherent in this anti-Semitism charge is the potential defamation of my character with concurrent damage to my credibility and public image," he said.

"As a person holding positions of trust and leadership — University professor, member of Special Legislative Commission, President of the Belchertown State School Friends Association — I consider the charge to be serious. My future effectiveness as a teacher-advisor-counsellor could be undermined."

The first typed note, reading "Your anti-Semitic comments will not stop this distribution," appeared on the cover page of a research paper by Ricci. The typist, said by Ricci and his attorney Beryl Cohen to be Ariel, indicates that copies were sent to Gov. Francis W. Sargent, UMass President Robert Wood, "faculty" and "all students."

Ariel is Jewish and an Israeli native.

President Wood, although informed of the "smear campaign" alleged by Ricci, said he was powerless to intervene.

"I must point out that according to University Governance, the authority for faculty appointments without tenure is explicitly delegated to the Chancellor of each campus, and it is not subject to review or concurrence by the President," Wood said.

"Therefore, for the President to deny a faculty appointment without tenure would be a serious breach of University policy."

Cohen blamed the Ricci suit and the one filed by Plagenhoef as "the fault of a University Administration that didn't act in time."

"The administration doesn't have the courage to take forthright action, it seems. It turned from University politics into very serious charges," he said.

"And the only place it's going to be resolved now is in the courts. I'm confident that both my clients will prevail."

Plagenhoef, also represented by Cohen, is involved in a counter suit with Ariel.

Two and a half year ago he and Dr. Ariel formed Computer Biochemical Analysis Co. (CBA), an independent computer research companyy. Plagenhoef has charged ARiel with breach of contract.

"As Director of Research I was supposed to have control," says Plagenhoef. But while conducting experiments at Dartmouth, "He (Ariel) had switched down here without my knowing it and started doing consultant work for Universal Resilite", unknown to Plagenhoef.

That was in August. Plagenhoef did not find out about the consulting work until September or October during which time he continued pressing Ariel to finish the work their company had already contracted for.

But it was not until Plagenhoef saw Dr. Ariel's falsified credentials in a 29-page booklet endorsing Universal's exercise machine in Centurion, that he resigned.

The essence of the Universal article written by Dr. Ariel is a technique for bone-on-bone prothesis developed by Graham Wood, another UMass graduate student and printed prior to Wood's thesis publication in New Zealand.

According to Plagenhoef, that portion of Wood's article printed in the Universal publication "is not even a beginning of what they need to do."

Plagenhoef says he was faced with the alternatives of forgetting the situation or asking for a settlement. After having committed two and a half years of working nights, and weekends he asked to be reimbursed for this time according to the contract conditions specified to future salaries.

A former UMass graduate student who did some research for CBA was only partially reimbursed, according to Plagenhoef, this tudent received only $1,500. There is still an outstanding balance of $2,000 still to be paid.

He added that when Ariel was to attend a conference in Hungary $770 dollars was budgeted toward his getting there. "He didn't get anything out of it" said Plagenhoef, but the $700 was never returned. Ariel was asked to leave Hungary by government officials.

Plaegenhoef's comments on the Ariel appointment: "It is simply not the way the position should be filled. It was railroaded in."

Accusation disputed

"We followed existing policies in this case," he said.

He added there were "reasons" for the waiver of the affirmative action search, but refused to disclose details because of the litigation.

UMass Attorney Sidney Myers said from his Whitmore office that Dr. Ariel may have endorsed a Universal exercise machine. He said University policy allows any faculty member the freedom to endorse any product.

However, according to information obtained by the Collegian, staff members "shall not publish either commendatory or derogatory statement regarding any specific commercial product." This regulation is contained in University staff practices established by the Board of Trustees.

Myers refused to comment on the legality of misrepresentation. Dr. Ricci has accused Dr. Ariel of placing false credentials in brochures that have been distributed.

Savini: clear the air

Previously, Savini had said he was disappointed with Trustee Frederick S. Troy's decision not to have the Ariel issue considered by the committee on Faculty and Educational Policy because of "retirement plans." Troy was the chairman of that committee.

In regard to a libel suit pending by Professor Benjamin Ricci in which Ariel allegedly called his colleague anti-semitic, Savini declared it was inappropriate for the matter to be "left hanging by the department."

"Here we have a serious case of two men destroying each other, somebody is bound to be hurt in the end, and yet the administration continually refuses to deal with it."

Wounded Knee 4 acquitted

LINCOLN, Neb. [UPI] — The four defendants in the "second Wounded Knee trial" held here were acquitted yesterday in U.S. District Court.

Charges against Roger Iron Cloud, Beau Little, Wallace Little Jr., and Dale Red Boy were dismissed for lack of evidence.

The four had been accused of impeding a federal officer, using a firearm during commission of a felony and assaulting a federal officer during the 1973 American Indian Movement occupation of Wounded Knee.

An indication the case would be dismissed came Wednesday afternoon when Judge Warren K. Orbom commented on the lack of evidence tying the defendants to the charges.

MEMORANDUM

FROM R. W. Bromery, Chancellor DATE May 24, 1974

TO David Johnston, Director of Public Safety

SUBJECT Anonymous Mail Directed to Professor Benjamin Ricci

On May 2, 1974, Professor Benjamin Ricci sent me a memorandum (with copies to Messrs. Gluckstern, Campney, and Bischoff) requesting an investigation of an anonymous communication charging him with having made "anti-Semitic comments." I am attaching a copy of that anonymous document as appendix "A."

Today, May 24, 1974, Professor Ricci came to this office and had a meeting with several members of my staff. He expressed great concern about a second anonymous communication that charged again that he is anti-Semitic. I am attaching a copy of that anonymous document as appendix "B."

It goes without saying that anonymous charges of this sort are wholly inconsistent with the ethical and intellectual values of this University.

I do not, of course, know any of the circumstances concerning these two anonymous communications. It does seem to me appropriate, however, that a suitable investigation should be made of the sources and circumstances surrounding these accusatory anonymous documents.

Would you please undertake such an investigation and report the results to me?

Sincerely,

Faculty Senate asks equal work, equal pay

By BILL GONET
Staff Reporter

The first session of the Faculty Senate yesterday reviewed UMass President Robert Woods rejection of the Senate's Faculty Increment Policy.

Opening remarks made by Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery and Vice-Chancellor Robert U. Gluckstern presaged that future Senate sessions will be preoccupied with the following issues: maintaining Senate autonomy in setting academic standards in regards to President Robert Wood's administration and proving to the state legislature that the work loads of the UMass at Amherst faculty comply with the legislature's stipulation that state university faculty members spend a minimum of nine clock hours in the classroom weekly.

The question of senate autonomy has emerged as a major issue as a result of Wood's rejection of the Senate's Faculty Increment Policy.

Formulated by the Senate's Personnel Policy Committee as a code to be used by President Wood's administration in determining salary raises for the UMass at Amherst faculty, the Increment Policy was rejected on grounds that since the legislature had prohibited salary raises for the 1975 academic year, there was no need to review this question.

In addition, Wood pointed out that guidelines for salary raises must be uniform for all three UMass campuses and therefore formulation of these guidelines must be undertaken by a campus-wide body coordinated by his office.

In his summary of Wood's rejection of the Salary Increment policy, President Matlack labelled Wood's attitude as "cavalierian". Moreover, Personnel Policy Committee at-large-member Prof. Hugus feels that the Salary Increment Policy was rejected because it differed too much from the guidelines set for the faculty of the UMass at Boston campus.

Elaborating, Senator Hugus said that the main concern of the Senate at Amherst is to guarantee that the rights of the Amherst faculty are met; it's up to Wood to find a mechanism for arriving at a campus-wide set of guidelines.

Moreover Prof. George Sulznen, chairman of the Senate's Rules Committee, remarked that members of his committee viewed the state legislature's classroom hour standard as a precedent dangerous to the autonomy of the faculty vis a vis academic affairs. To the end of showing the state legislature that the work loads of the Amherst faculty already comply with the nine hour minimum, the Rules Committee chairman reported that his committee had already set up a special sub-committee to collect data about faculty work leads.

Along with the rules committee chairman, President Matlack, Secretary Fletcher, and Vice-Chancellor Gluckstern respectively stressed the importance of this sub-committee's job in defining and classifying all faculty activities so that the legislature can see that certain nonclassroom activities like participation in colloquials and graduate advisory functions should be treated as classroom assignments.

Although state legislature had prohibited faculty salary raises for the 1975 fiscal year, Professor John Maki, chairman of the Senate Personnel Committee moved that the Senate accept his committee's statement on Equity in Faculty Compensation so that when the question arises and next year the Senate will be able to present a clearly defined position to President Wood's Office.

The thrust of the statement which was accepted unamended at the end of the session is simply equal pay for equal work.

To insure this principle is respected in future salary adjustment considerations the Equity Statement recommended that each department respectively review the salary and performance records of their respective members to determine who qualifies for a raise and how much of a raise.

After the meeting Senator Hugus said the formulation for this statement arose from Senate dissatisfaction with the way the issue of faculty raises was resolved last year by President Wood's Boston office.

This opening Senate session also witnessed the election of these following new officers: David Booth, secretary; Eric Einhorn, Rules Committee at large member; Roland Chilton, Rules Committee at large member; and Professor Hugus, Rules Committee chairman.

Witches, warlocks and a baker's dozen

By SHARON HUGHES

Has everything gone wrong today? Still can't get a course or place to live? Blame it on the day — Friday the 13th.

Long regarded as bad luck, the superstition arose from the combination of the evil symbols of Friday — the day Christ was crucified and 13 — the number of persons at the Last Supper in the Christian belief.

Yet in other traditions, most notably Judaism, and in the magical religion of witchcraft 13 is regarded as a good omen. And Mohammedans and pagan religions honor Friday as a very lucky day.

The Friday the 13th superstition has persisted with the tenacity that only a myth can. Psychologists even have a word for the most serious holders of the superstition — triskedekaphobia, the morbid fear of the number 13.

Hotel keepers in England rarely keep a it 12 or ship over to 14. Similarily, houses is thought by some scholars to be a reflection numbered 13 are often hard to sell, according to the Encyclopedia of Superstitions by Christina Hole.

"13 freaks" also maintain it is bad luck to start a new entreprise, especially marriage or a journey on that day of the month states the Dictionary of Symbols by Cirlot. Sailors have frequently refused to leave port on a new journey on the 13th of any month, the dictionary says.

Most scholars of superstition literature trace the origin of the ill omen that if 13 people sit together at a dinner table one will die within a year to the biblical Last Supper. In the Dictionary of Mythology, Folklore and Symbols, editor Gertrude Jones, traces the origin to Norse mythology in which Loki (god of discord) intruded upon as a banquet as the 13th guest and Balder (god of peace and good) was slain.

On the other hand, to be born on the 13th is not considered unlucky and in some districts of England that birth date is a good luck charm for anything one begins on the 13th.

Ancient Jewish mysticism equates 13 with unity in a 14th century collection of doctrines dealing with the mystic symbolism of numbers and letters called the Kabbalah, authoritative sources state. The number is traditionally associated with mercy as in the Thirteen Attributes and corresponds to the Hebrew letter mem (which produced understanding).

The favorable connotation 13 in witchcraft is though by some scholars to be a reflection of a power struggle between the Church and the wicca (wise women) for control of the spiritual world. According to this interpretation 13 is actually a good luck symbol for women, or at least within a society run by women.

13 is said to be the number par excellence for witches. During the time period when anthropologists believe matriarchy (society rules by women) existed, all women were revered for possessing the greatest magic of all, the power to give birth, said Christina Hole. In this "woman's world" a goddess for fertility reigned the earth and stone carvings depict women as much larger figures than men to give her importance.

With the assension of Christianity, a clash for control developed. UMass English professor Rayna D. Green says, "The theory is in a lot of dispute but there is no doubt the wicca cult was female...and did not want to give up a system that granted her power."

Giving 13 a good connotation was an "obvious sociological symbol of trying to reverse Christian culture", says UMass English professor Karen L. Baldwin.

As witchcraft went underground to avoid repression, The ABC of Witchcraft says, 13 gained significance as the number of persons composing a coven, or cult group.

Prior to the present calendar year of 12 months, a solar year was composed of 13 lunar months, each celebrated by the witches at the full moon Esbats (monthly meeting).

All sources give significance to the historical fact that the number 13 has assumed magical properties in the cult group composed of 13 persons and a leader, such as Romulus who founded Rome and his 12 shepards, King Arthur of the Round Table and 12 knights, Christ and his disciples, and Odysseus and his companions.

From its association with witchcraft, the number came to be called the devil's dozen or twelve witches presided by Satan, according to author Hole.

Friday as a bad luck symbol derives its strength from the belief that Christ was crucified and the dead will in turn rise for last judgement on that day, according to superstition literature.

Yet Friday is glorified in other religious traditions such as Mohammedism in which Friday is observed as a day for worship. In pagan religions, it is a day frequently dedicated to love or to the mother goddess. To Romans, Friday was the day of honor to Venus, hence very lucky.

Superstitions have a lot more behind them than face value would suggest Professors Green and Baldwin said.

"Whole areas of people's lives are filled with anxiety that is symbolized in beliefs. Some beliefs may lie in historical truths and some "truths" may actually be coincidence, yet the belief serves to reduce anxiety," Green said.

Professor Baldwin said that a bad omen can serve as a warning to society and enable them psychologically to feel they can control bad luck.

She said, "Superstition is developed to somehow allow someone to control that which is actually uncontrollable, the vagaries of nature. It is an attempt to manipulate in a conscious way events that are beyond control."

David Eisenhower says he refused

Ford reportedly sought Nixon's confession

WASHINGTON [UPI] — David Eisenhower said yesterday that emissaries from President Ford sought "some kind of confe..ion" before deciding to pardon former President Richard M. Nixon, but were refused.

"He wasn't willing to concede anything," Nixon's son-in-law said in a telephone interview.

Eisenhower was asked whether Nixon accepted the White House view that guilt was implicit in his acceptance of a pardon, and he replied that the former president "views himself as an innocent man and continues to say so privately."

Ford's spokesmen have said they had no conditions on the pardon, and that Nixon's acceptance statement was welcome but had not been part of any agreement.

David, who is married to Nixon's younger daughter, Julie, had a different view.

"Is a matter of fact, the Ford people wanted a statement. The Ford people wanted some kind of confession from him," he said. "But he wasn't willing to concede anything on the legal issues."

Eisenhower said he thought Nixon had accepted the pardon "because I think he's tired and he wants to try to forget about it." During the weekend before Nixon resigned, when the family had a crisis gathering at Camp David, Eisenhower said:

"A lot of people suggested that Nixon thinks in terms of a pardon. But by that time he was damned if he was to go out of office on those terms."

Eisenhower said there also was some discussion before Nixon resigned about the possibility of pardoning himself and his associates involved in Watergate, but Nixon had rejected the idea.

"That would have been incredible," he said.

The White House said yesterday that Ford has no intention of pardoning any of the coverup defendants before they are tried.

Nevertheless, the Senate went ahead and adopted on a 55-24 vote a resolution urging Ford not to grant any more pardons until the judicial process is completed, and Rep. Peter W. Rodino Jr., of the House Judiciary Committee indicated the House probably would take similar action.

Deputy press secretary John W. Hushen told reporters Ford had denied as "absolutely not true" reports that he had promised a pardon before Nixon resigned.

Hushen was asked whether Ford agreed with Senate Republican Leader Hugh Scott that the Watergate defendants should not be pardoned prior to a trial.

"I believe he does," Hushen replied. "The President feels that way."

Hushen told reporters Wednesday that Ford "never, ever planned to give mass amnesty" and that when he said "the entire matter was under study" he meant Ford's pardoning power, not universal pardons.

Hushen conceded, however, that the study of the President's pardoning power referred only to Watergate defendants.

Hushen said that he had asked the President about the reports that Ford had made a "deal" with Nixon for a pardon after he resigned. He quoted Ford as saying it was "absolutely not true - there was no communication regarding a pardon for Mr. Nixon."

The Senate resolution, which has no force of law, specifically does not deal with Nixon's pardon, and Assistant Senate Democratic Leader Robert C. Byrd emphasized it does not put the Senate on record for or against pardons once the judicial process is completed.

Nixon reported ill and depressed

WASHINGTON [UPI] — Former President Richard Nixon is ill, depressed, unable to relax, and not elated by the pardon granted him by President Ford, son-in-law David Eisenhower told a national television audience yesterday.

Eisenhower said Nixon has suffered a flare-up of the phlebitis which was a health problem in the final weeks of his presidency. Phlebitis is a vein inflamation, and Eisenhower said a resulting blood clot had moved above the knee and swelled the leg to twice its normal size.

Asked about reports that the former President is "deeply depressed," Eisenhower replied that Nixon "has his ups and downs." He added that "some people describe him as sharper than ever in certain meetings and then, at times...yes, he's depressed."

An informed medical source, meanwhile, reported that Nixon's family has urged him to enter the Eisenhower Memorial Hospital in Palm Springs, Calif., for treatment of the phlebitis, but so far he has refused.

He said Nixon currently is not taking medication and refuses to wear the prescribed elastic bandage on his leg. He added that the leg is swollen four inches below the knee.

Dr. Walter Tkach, Nixon's attending physician in the White House, plans to fly to California to see him today, but will return after a few hours, the source said.

"Right at this moment he is not feeling well," Eisenhower said in an appearance on NBC-TV's Today program. "He has his leg elevated because of the phlebitis... The clot has moved above the knee and his one leg is swollen about twice its normal size. His health is not good.

"He's fighting that. He can't play golf, he can't relax, he can't unwind and so I would say his spirits are not great right now. There's no question about that."

Eisenhower, a law student at George Washington University, said he had talked to Nixon Wednesday and then decided to accept NBC's invitation for an interview because "someone should be reacting to the pardon on behalf of the family." He said his father-in-law was "in one sense relieved that the Vietnam amnesty issue had not beed tied directly to his pardon," and explained:

"Had the amnesty issue been tied directly to his pardon he would have had no choice but to stand trial and he would have done so and refused the pardon."

3 main Watergate defendants ask Sirica to dismiss charges of equal justice in this case where, for no legally cognizable reason, one co-conspirator, Richard Nixon, is permitted to go free while other co-conspirators, who were subordinates to Mr. NIxon, and were acting in his interest, on his behalf, and in concert with him are required to stand trial for those actions," Mitchell's brief said.

Echoed Haldeman, once Nixon's chief of staff: "In the mind of the average citizen the pardon presupposes either the fact or the possibility of guilt on the part of Mr. Nixon; and his acceptance remarks, while not expressly admitting guilt, have clearly implied involvement, and as clearly leave the impression that his subordinates...did criminal things which he either tolerated or overlooked."

The legal briefs were filed in federal court just before U.S. District Judge John J. Sirica met privately with all defense lawyers in the cover-up case.

The brief filed on behalf of Ehrlichman followed the same theme as the others-asking that the indictments be dismissed or that the trial be delayed indefinitely.

His lawyers charged that the news media had deliberately poisoned prospective jurors against him to ensure Ehrlichman's conviction in the Ellsberg break-in case earlier this summer, and is now trying to do the same thing in the Watergate coverup.

Mitchell, Haldeman and Ehrlichman all pointed out that Nixon had been named an unindicted co-conspirator in the cover-up. Haldeman and Ehrlichman also noted that White House counsel Philip W. Buchen this week told reporters Nixon's acceptance of pardon could be read as an admission of guilt.

Nixon submits letter to resign from bar

SACRAMENTO, Calif. [UPI] — Former President Richard M. Nixon's formal letter of resignation as a member of the California Bar Association was received yesterday, association officials reported.

The letter arrived at the association's headquarters in San Francisco as the ruling Board of Governors of the bar prepared to consider what action it would take on the resignation.

Newly elected association president Brent Abel of San Francisco and John Malone, executive secretary of the bar, confirmed receipt of the letter but did not disclose its contents.

The Board of Governors indicated it had three options available in dealing with Nixon's resignation: delaying any action until next month, rejecting it or accepting it.

The former President's personal attorney, Dean S. Butler, surprised the annual convention of the California Bar Association Monday with the disclosure that Nixon no longer intended to practice law in California or New York and would resign as a member of the bar in those states.

Association officials said earlier that a resignation from practice was the equivalent of disbarment. The state Supreme Court has the final say over acceptance or rejection of Nixon's resignation.

..Daniel Ellsberg, who leaked the Pentagon Papers, was on hand yesterday at the assembly of a nonofficial panel that is seeking accountability over the Central Intelligence Agency.

Ellsberg, as witness, calls CIA "invisible government"

WASHINGTON [UPI] — The existence of an "invisible government" with sovereign power to conduct world-wide clandestine operations was described yesterday by Daniel Ellsberg, who made public the Pentagon Papers in 1971.

Ellsberg was a surprise panelist at an unofficial conference on covert CIA operations, sponsored by several members of Congress in a Senate office building.

He said a hush-hush "Forty Committee" reports to the President on top-secret policy and intelligence matters, and the President in turn makes decisions without reference to Congress.

"The true meaning of the Forty Committee is that there is , indeed, a covert operation exercising sovereign and domestic powers," he said. "It is, in fact, an invisible government."

Government spokesmen have previously acknowledged existence of the Forty Committee, which is chaired by Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger and includes CIA Director William E. Colby and others.

Several other panelists at the two-day symposium cited it in their opening remarks. Former intelligence agents, former defense and state department officials, plus researchers and journalists converned with the intelligence field are participating.

Ellsberg argued that the top-secret committee should be brought under congressional control, perhaps in the same limited way as the group which maintains a degree of "oversight" over the CIA.

But one panelist, author David Wise, said it and all clandestine intelligence operations should be abolished:

"The fact that other nations may engage in covert political action is not sufficient justification for the United States to do so; for if we adopt the methods of our adversaries we will become indistinguishable from them. In time, covert operations will change the character of the institutions they seek to perserve."

Victor Marchetti, a former staff officer of CIA and author of the controversial "CIA and the Cult of Intelligence" which the secret agency insisted on partially censoring, said the intelligence community comprises intelligence agencies in the Defense Department, the Army, Navy and Air Force, the National Security Council, the FBI, and Atomic Energy and Treasury offices who between them spend an estimated $6 billion a year and employ some 200,000 people.

Haile Selassie deposed by coup after 58-year Ethiopian reign

ADDIS ABABA [UPI] — Haile Selassie was deposed by a military coup yesterday from the throne of Ethiopia after 58 years.

The new military regime asked the emperor's only son to become a figurehead king on the throne that traces its heritage back 3,000 years to the legendary King Solomon and Queen of Sheba.

Strongman Lt. Gen. Aman Michael Andom was named to head the new military regime that siezed power from the diminutive 82-year-old "Conquering Lion of the Tribe of Judah."

"I accept the present change in Ethiopia and acknowledge that such changes are also taking place elsewhere in the world," an army spokesman quoted the emperor as saying. Selassie than was taken to a military base and on to a palace at Debre Zeit, about 19 miles from the capital, for his "personal safety."

Andom, defense minister and military chief of staff under Selassie, became the chairman of the council of ministers, or prime minister, and chairman of the Armed Forces Committee to run the country until a new constitution is drawn up and elections held, according to a government statement.

Although the military said Selassie, who defied the might of Mussolini's armies in 1936, accepted the takeover, a pool dispatch from American correspondents in Addis Ababa described the emperor as "still defiant."

In his place, the armed forces committee invited Selassie's son, Crown Prince Asfa Woosen, 57, to take the throne as a figurehead constitutional monarch. Woosen was implicated in a palace revolt which Selassie easily quelled in 1960.

The emperor left his palace seated in the back of a blue Volkswagen. Officers first whisked him to the headquarters of the 4th Army Division in Addis Ababa, then to Debre Zeit. Other members of the royal family were confined to the palace.

In Washington, the State Department announced that the question of diplomatic recognition of the new Ethiopian government did not arise.

Spokesman John King said, "As we enjoyed good relations with the government of the emperor, we look forward to continuing these good relations with the new government."

The throne-that traces its heritage directly back to the biblical King Solomon and the Queen of Sheba 3,000 years ago-was almost all Selassie had left in Ethiopia. Seven months of unrest and rebellion had chipped away his once-absolute power, his wealth, his palaces, his friends and supporters.

Laos to free U.S. prisoner

VIENTIANE, Laos [UPI] — The Laotian coalition government yesterday ironed out final details of an exchange of war prisoners next Thursday that is expected to include the last known American POW in Indochina.

He is Emmet Kay, 47, of Honolulu, a civilian pilot who was forced down in Communist Pathet Lao territory May 7, 1973.

Other prisoners to be exchanged include about 660 Thai soldiers, recruited and trained by the United States to fight in Laos, and about 180 North Vietnamese held by the rightists.

Cyprus claims Turk invaders executed 179

NICOSIA [UPI] — The Cypriot government said yesterday it has documented evidence that the Turkish invasion force executed a total of 179 Greek Cypriots - including women, children and elderly persons.

The statement, which did not give details of the evidence, said the killings took place between the time of the Turkish invasion of Cyprus July 20 and Aug. 21.

An earlier government statement a week ago said 130 Greek Cypriots had been executed by Turkish forces during the same period. The Turks have said Greek Cypriot National Guardsmen committed mass executions at several villages and towns during the recent fighting.

The government has already barred departure of all Greek Cypriot males over the age of 12 without an exit permit and government sources said the cabinet might impose a similar ban on females.

The Turkish invasion force now controls 40 per cent of the island, captured in fighting after the July invasion and a second offensive in August when the Geneva peace talks collapsed.

Government sources said today's meeting between President Glafkos Clerides and Vice President Rauf Denktash to decide the date and place for releasing sick and wounded prisoners and detainees under 18 years of age could run into difficulties.

They said Denktash, leader of the Turkish Cypriots, has reportedly warned that no releases would take place and there would be no more humanitarian talks unless some 8,000 Turkish Cypriot refugees at the British sovereign base of Episkopi are transferred to Turkey.

Denktash also wants about 40,000 other Turkish Cypriots living in the Greek-Cypriot-controlled southern part of the island to be allowed to move to the Turkish-controlled north.

Clerides, leader of the Greek Cypriot community opposes such movements of the population, fearing they would help Turkey consolidate the military partition of the island.

Wounded Knee trial sent to jury

WASHINGTON [AP] — The government reported yesterday that wholesale prices rose 3.9. per cent in August, the second biggest monthly jump in 28 years and an indication that inflation may be worsening.

Last month's increase pushed wholesale prices 17.8 per cent higher than a year ago and further dimmed the Ford administration's prospects for any significant easing of inflation this year.

Administration economists indicated they are again revising their forecasts.

White House economics counselor Kenneth Rush said recent predictions that inflation might decline to about 8 per cent - from the current 11 per cent for consumer prices-probably will not be realized.

In January, administration economists originally forecast a rate of about 7 per cent by the end of the year.

Surging agriculture prices, resulting in part from the summer drought in the Midwest, and a continuing rapid rise in the price of industrial goods contributed about equally to the over-all increase in wholesale prices last month, the Labor Department said.

For inflation-weary consumers, the news means still higher prices this year, because increases at wholesale usually are quickly passed into retail prices, especially for food.

Wholesale prices have risen at an adjusted annual rate of 37.3 per cent over the past three months.

The August increase of 3.9 per cent, adjusted to account for seasonal influences, works out to a staggering annual rate of 46.8 per cent, if projected over the year. It followed July's increase of 3.7 per cent and was exceeded only by a 6.2 per cent increase in August 1973 after the lifting of the government's 60-day price freeze.

Prices of farm products, processed foods and feeds increased .6 per cent last month, following an advance of 6.4 per cent in July and declines in each of the preceding four months.

Industrial commodities, which are considered the most significant reflection of underlying inflationary trends, jumped 2.5 per cent and were 27.5 per cent higher than a year ago.

Energy prices continued to climb, with coal up 4 per cent for the month and refined petroleum products up 1.9 per cent. Metal, chemical and machinery prices also soared.

Chenault sentenced to die for murder of Mrs. King

Compiled From Wires

ATLANTA, Ga. — Marcus Wayne Chenault was sentenced yesterday to die in the electric chair for the murder of Mrs. Martin Luther King Sr., and a church deacon during services at historic Ebenezer Baptist church last June.

Judge Luther Alverson set Nov. 8 as the execution date for the 23-year-old black college student from Dayton, Ohio.

As the prosecuter read the death sentence to the court, Chenault blew kisses at him. His mother, Mrs. Marcus Chenault, who sat on the front row in the crowded, hushed courtroom, burst into tears.

Standing before Fulton Superior Court Judge Luther Alverson, Chenault smiled as he was sentenced to die Nov. 8 in the electric chair at the State Prison at Reidsville. However, there is an automatic appeal for condemned prisoners and there have been no executions in Georgia in about seven years.

Again as District Attorney Lewis Slaton called for his execution, Chenault turned his thumbs down and shook his head.

Slaton said "this society cannot afford this defendant. Send him to prison for what happened, and he'll find a weapon. Ladies and gentlemen, he has tasted blooc and he'll kill again."

Chenault was given the death sentence for Mrs. King's death, another for Deacon Edward Boykin and 10 years in prison for wounding a member of the church congregation.

The jury found Chenault guilty after little more than an hour of deliberations. It decided on the death sentence in a later afternoon session.

Chenault's attorney said the sentences would be appealed. After the judge pronounced sentence, Chenault addressed the court.

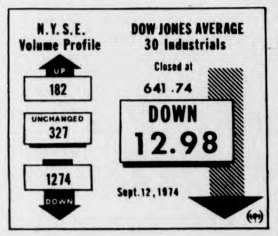
"My name is Servant Jacob. I was ordered here by my God, my father and my master," Chenault said, grinning.

Earlier, when the jury convicted him, Chenault clapped his hands and three kisses as the verdict was read.

Four witnesses testified that Chenault deliberately shot Mrs. King as she played "The Lord's Prayer" at the organ June 30.

Boykin, 69, also was killed and a woman in the congregation was wounded.

The verdict came a day before Mrs. King would have been 71.



Wholesale prices up 3.9% in August

ST. PAUL, Minn. [UPI] — The 8-month-old trial of American Indian Movement leaders Dennis Banks and Russell Means, charged with felonies in last year's 71-day armed occupation of Wounded Knee, went to the jury yesterday.

U. S. District Court Judge Fred Nichol gave the jury 90 minutes of instructions, and the defense attorneys, who discussed the case with actor Marlon Brando during the morning, said they were satisfied with the judge's instructions.

Means also said he was satisfied. He said there was "no racism" in the judge's last words to the jury. "I was astonished at the fair-handed instructions," he said.

Three of four alternate jurors said they would have voted for acquittal if they had been called on to take part in the deliberations. All three were women. One, Mrs. Elaine Grono, said, "The prosecution didn't prove the charges beyond a shadow of a doubt — there just wasn't enough there."

Nichol told the jury not to consider any treaty violations either by the Indians or by the U. S. Government as a defense against alleged crimes by Banks and Means.

"The legal effects of the treaties involved are not for your consideration," the judge said. "Motive, no matter how noble, does not justify criminal acts."

Defense attorneys had contended treaty provisions gave Indians control over the Pine Ridge Indian Reservation in South Dakota, where Wounded Knee is located, and said U. S. marshals had no right to try to enforce laws on the reservation.

AIM leaders took over Wounded Knee by armed force on Feb. 27, 1973, and held off encircling federal forces for 71 days.

The government charged Banks with larceny, assault on two FBI agents and a U. S. marshal, and conspiracy. It charged Means with larceny, assault on two FBI agents and a marshal, and conspiracy.

AIM leaders said the purpose of the occupation was to seek changes to redress the wrongs brought upon Indian people by the U. S. government.

During the takeover, two AIM members or sympathizers were killed and seven wounded. Two federal agents were wounded, one of them paralyzed below the waist.

Nixon money hit in Congress

WASHINGTON [UPI] — An $850,000 request to finance former President Richard M. Nixon's transition to private life ran into bitter opposition yesterday in a House appropriations subcommittee.

Democratic members said the amounts sought from Congress were excessive and one member, Rep. George E. Shipley, D-Ill., said, "I don't think the country will stand for it."

Uneasy peace fills Mozambique as white settlers flee country

LOURENCO MARQUES, Mozambique [UPI] — Portuguese troops and black freedom fighters enforced an uneasy peace in this Portuguese East African territory yesterday following an outburst of racial violence that sent thousands of white settlers fleeing to South Africa.

At least 2,000 white settlers fled their farms, businesses and homes with what possessions they could carry in cars and by train to neighboring South Africa. Many salvaged only the clothes they wore in fleeing mobs of blacks whose anger at the white uprising to stall independence for the colony under black rule finally boiled over into a two-day bloody rampage. Some white dissidents were ordered to get out of Mozambique in 48 hours.

Casualties in the clashes throughout Mozambique were listed as 100 killed and 250 wounded, according to the Lisbon government.

On-the-spot reports said at least 60 blacks and whites died in the capital of Lourenco Marques alone and more bodies were arriving at hospitals.

The racial violence led to postponement in turning over power to the black guerrilla group, Frelimo. The independence pact signed last weekend had provided for transition immediately, but political sources said this step probably would not come until order was fully restored in the next few days.

Portuguese Prime Minister Vasco Goncalves' office described the situation as "clearly improved" after reinforcements were rushed to the capital from the former jungled northern battlefields to counter "numberous acts of violence."

Truckloads of Portuguese troops and Frelimo guerrillas patrolled the deserted city center.

Absenteeism averages 35%

Boycotts and violence mar Boston busing

Compiled from wires

BOSTON — At least 13 persons were injured in sporadic disturbances and classroom boycotts coused 35 per cent absenteeism yesterday as Boston's 200 public schools opened under a court integration order involving the busing of 18,000 students.

Mayor Kevin White, in a late afternoon news conference, said the opening day went smoothly "except in a limited area," and promised to clear the streets of demonstrators Friday in hopes of preventing more injuries and easing tensions.

"I promised the safety of all the children of this city," the mayor said. "We kept that promise in 99 per cent of the cases, but I promised 100 per cent, not 99 per cent and that promise I intend to keep."

The injured included nine black students, one women serving as a bus monitor, one policeman and two new photographers. None was injured seriously.

Six persons were arrested throughout the day during incidents in the white South Boston section of the city.

Absenteeism was highest at South Boston and Roxbury high schools as a result of a boycott called by white parents to protest the forced busing of 18,235 students, about 20 per cent of the total enrollment.

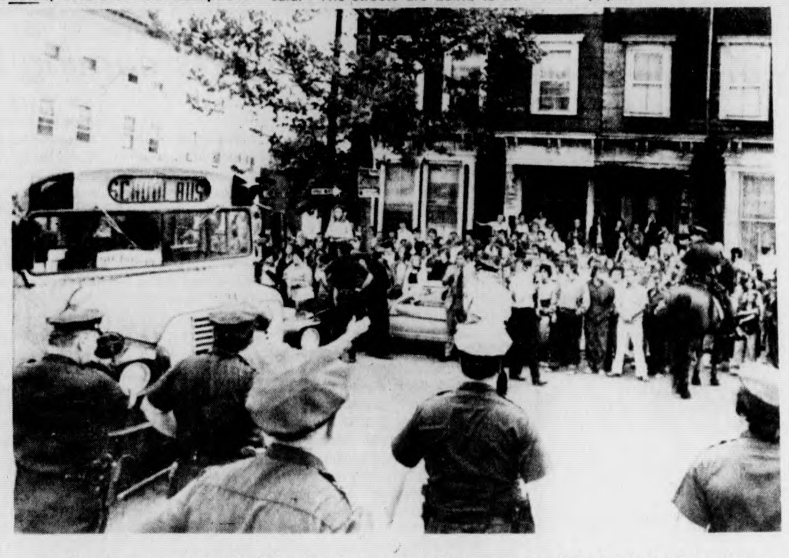
The city hall information center said 65 per cent of the students attended classes throughout the system. But at South Boston and Roxbury high schools, only 5 per cent of the 2,074 white students assigned there went to classes. Attendance among blacks at those schools ran about 35 per cent of the 1,283 assigned.

Mayor Kevin H. White banned gatherings of more than three persons in front of schools and vowed to clear the streets of South Boston, where all the disruptions occurred.

Buses running into South Boston will have police escorts, White said.

"The trouble making element, however small, will not be allowed to continue disruption at any hour, at any time or at any place," White said. "The streets are going to be clear in South Boston. No one will be allowed to disrupt students, buses or traffic."

At the main branch at South Boston High School, a crowd hurled eggs and cans at two buses that pulled away loaded with 56 black pupils.



UPI Telephoto

Police keep crowds of whites back as school bus carrying black students arrives at Boston's South Boston High School yesterday.

The crowd of about 400 teenagers and adults shouted insults at police, some of them on horseback, when they pushed demonstrators away from the front of the school. In the past, the school had been 99 per cent white.

The two photographers were injured at that time.

Later in the day, when police dispersed a crowd of 500 outside the school, officer Joseph Sirignano incurred a chest injury when hit by a thrown bottle.

The four black youths were injured when the buses in which they were riding from South Boston and Gavin School were stoned by groups of whites. Two youths coming from the high school were treated for cuts and then rel3ased by Columbia Point Medical Center. Two 11-year-old girls returning from Gavin school were treated at Boston City Hospital. Deputy Mayor Robert Kiley said they did not appear serious.

While violence was sparodic, there was plenty of verbal abuse thrown at black students arriving by bus at South Boston High. At one point, Police Commissioner Robert J. diGrazia personally escorted black students into the school as the crowd of whites jeered.

Under the busing plan, 45,000 of the city's 94,000 students have been assigned to new schools. Some 18,235 of these — 8,510 white and 9,725 non-white — were scheduled to be bused.

School opened yesterday for about 82,000 of the students. Some 12,000 kindergarten students will not go to school until next week.

Civil rights to be upheld

BOSTON [UPI] — The U.S. Justice Department has assigned an official to Boston to "cut red tape" in any civil rights complaints which may result integration of the city's public school system.

Federal District Judge W. Arthur Garrity Jr., who ordered the schools desegregated, announced the assignment o William L. Gardner, deputy chief of the Justice Department's Civil Rights Division. He will work with Richard E. Bachman, chief of the criminal division in the U.S. attorney's office.

Garrity said Gardner will "expedite the process of handling complaints having to do with violations of civil rights." He said the Justice Department wants all complaints processed quickly.

Monitor says 18 month service would be required for amnesty

BOSTON [AP] — President Ford's amnesty plan for Vietnam war draft evaders and deserters would require an average of 18 months of alternate service for those willing to come home, the Christian Science Monitor reported in today's editions.

The newspaper reported that according to a Justice Department source, the President's plan will tailor alternate work terms to individual cases.

Services will be similar to that served by conscientious objectors during the war — in hospitals, Conservations Corps and VISTA.

The 18-month average is based on the time most draftees were spending in the service at the end of the war.

In some cases, the newspaper's source said, the alternate service could be as little as six months if there is a family hardship.

War deserters would be handled differently. In addition to the alternate service, they would still fall under military jurisdiction if they return home.

They would get an undesirable discharge, would have to reaffirm an oath of allegiance to the United States and would forfeit all future military benefits. They would not, however, face further prosecution.

Their harsher treatment, the newspaper reported, is based on the military's argument that desertion is a worse offense than draft evasion.

The President's plan, however, is somewhat more lenient than first envisioned. An original proposal was for two to three years of alternate service.

This was shortened to a mandatory 18 months, the newspaper reported and was then made more flexible last weekend to permit a schedule of six to 24 months of alternate service.

The newspaper reported that sources predicted between 25 and 50 per cent of the estimated 50,000 war draft dodgers and deserters in Canada and Europe would come home under the plan. This is expected to tax the ability of placement agencies to find jobs for all the men.

At the height of the war, the newspaper reported, only about 2,000 conscientious objectors were placed in similar jobs.

The Monitor reported that a White House press aide would not comment on the amnesty details. But the newspaper's Justice Department source said the plan will be unveiled by the end of the month with soem guidelines that have not yet been set.

The President's amnesty plan was first expected last week, then Tuesday.

Evel Knievel; the six million dollar man. What is the significance of such an existence. The adventurer, the hero, the fool, or the entertainer?

THE QUESTION: Do you feel that Knievel's performance of Sunday the 7th was a "rip off" and what is next?

Lori DeCesare, 20, English major, junior from Easton, Mass. John Quincy Adams-South West; Well I think it was a stupid idea. I'm glad he didn't die or anything like that. I really wasn't interested and I didn't pay much attention to it. I think that people like that have something wrong with them. He'll think of something else, I'm sure.

Patty Saraca, 18, Psychology major, freshman from Norwood, Mass. Coolidge-South West; I think it's fine if he wants to do it and all but it's a great waste of money. Six million dollars for that one thing? I think it's all right to live like that and do those things but why waste the money; buying tickets and all. People pay to be there and be a part of it all.

Christopher Yonge, 19, Classics major, sophomore from Cambridge, Mass. Pierpont-South West; Knievel isn't entirely necessary to our society. I was under the impression that he was going to do it in a motorcycle; maybe I'm out of touch with things. I read that some of his friend-s have referred to him as a big crook and a con man. If he is, he'll think of something else.

Joe Curran, 21 Phys-Ed major, junior from Norwood, Mass. Kappa Sigma. It was a waste of time. It was a big publicity stunt and the build up was pretty ridiculous. It was all built up way too much when they launched him only to have the rocket crash into the walls like that. He leads an interesting life but I see him as useless.

Charlene Schagnon, 21, Wildlife Biology major, senior from Chicopee, Mass. Pierpont-South West; I think he's necessary because he was doing what he really believed in and that's important. Most people don't dare do what they believe in. He looks pretty bad in the eyes of the public and it will be a while before he does anything else. It'll be pretty hard to live with in his mind for some time.

Meditation is coming to UMass

To the Editor:

Every morning over 500 UMass students wake up and close their eyes. Twenty minutes later, they open them again, this time feeling livelier, more alert, energetic. They weren't sleeping. They weren't dreaming. They were practicing Transcendental Meditation—TM.

Recent scientific research on TM has added an exciting new dimension to the understanding process. What has been found is that average brain wave patterns during wakefulness are characterized by incoherence - wave patterns mixed in both frequency and amplitude. In other words, there seems to be a literal, physiological explanation for the term "scatterbrain." However, recent studies show that during TM, brain waves from all parts of the head come into greater synchrony. This more integrated style of functioning of the brain tends to last outside of meditation as well. Coupled with the finding that those who practice Transcendental Meditation show a marked improvement in their grade-point averages, scientists may be well on the way to discovering more about the physiology of learning ability.

TM is a simple, natural mental technique whereby the mind settles down to experience quieter levels of the thinking process, and the body correspondingly receives deep rest. The practical implication of this? With this deep rest, stresses are rooted out of the nervous system, allowing one to think and act in a more creative way.

Personal instruction in TM is conducted by the Students International Meditation Society. The branch of the organization responsible for more advanced intellectual understanding is Maharishi International Academy [MIA]. In Amherst, a course entitled The Science of Creative Intelligence [SCI] will be offered at UMass by MIA this fall, with its introductory meeting on September 16 at 7:30 p.m. in Tobin 204. While TM allows one to enjoy greater creativity in one's life spontaneously, SCI gives systematic understanding of what creative intelligence is, its origin, nature and growth. In fact, Maharishi International University has been established, which teaches all other disciplines in the light of this fundamental understanding of intelligence itself, and on September 1, the former campus of Parsons College in Fairfield, Iowa was purchased to accommodate the hundreds of students attending MIU.

There will be a free introductory lecture about SCI and TM on Tuesday, September 17 in Machmer W26 at 7:30 p.m. For further information, call 545-1540 or 549-6708. SIMS has an office in Student Union room 304, and at 35 Butterfield Terrace.

Savini deplores Nixon pardon

To the Editor:

Once again the American System of Justice has been shown to be the puppet of the rich and powerful. Personally, I am disgusted with the position which President Ford has taken in giving "a free, full and absolute pardon" to ex-president Nixon. The sheer force of this action has been a giant step backwards from the actions which brought about Richard Nixon's resignation. I can not understand how a pardon can be given to this man without having reached a point where every U.S. citizen clearly can see, that Richard M. Nixon was in fact, guilty.

Certainly, there is a great deal of public opinion pressure on the ex-president which is not common in other criminal proceedings but, in taking the office of President of the United States it would seem that Nixon would have understood that a possibility of impeachment and a strenous public trial would exist. In short if the man agreed to take the responsibility of the presidency he also indirectly agreed to take on the burden of public pressure if he was impeached.

To pardon, the remaining persons involved in the Watergate affair, seems to add salt to the wounds of American sensitivity. President Ford is only instilling the idea that Nixonian techniques in public office are the only workable techniques. The President is only inviting further deterioration of our system of justice an- equal rights and possibly the time may have come for that deterioration to be necessary. I for one though, am not comfortable with dealing in a system of continuous deceit.

Rick Savini, SGA President

Everybody complains about the weather but no one does anything about it. Remember that one? It's no longer true in this age of controlled climate living. Off the street and into a cool building with the humidity under control by some new plug in wizzy dizzy that drinks from the air.

Apparently the UMass Library doesn't have such a device in its inventory, because the temperature and humidity of many stack floors is reminiscient of a sauna bath. The trouble is that the library staff does not allow students to take off their clothes and study in a Turkish towel. In the meantime the tall impressive monument to poor planning is impossible to work in, rendering it useless to anyone other than a photographer or pervert into architectural phallic symbols.

What can be done? Maybe nothing because the Physical Plant Staff in the building is about as organiwed as the structure they are in charge of. I asked a worker if he could turn down the thermostat or turn up the air conditioner. He replied that he was only authorized to dump trash and sweep floors.

The big question is: who will remove the bodies expired from heat prostration if the Beauracracy of Brooms doesn't get hot, or cold on an intolerable contribution the sometimes intolerable environment UMass has.

Open letter to Ford

To the Editors:

This is to record my protest, my disgust and my distress at your incredible pardon of Nixon, who by all objective criteria must rank as one of the arch-criminals of the twentieth century.

Your precipitant action is, in my opinion, a travesty of justice which proves to me, to the entire world, and to unborn generations, that

1. In U.S.A., Crime Does Pay!

2. In U.S.A., the head man gets off scab free while the underlings who did his evil bidding writh in jail.

It is a sad day for the United States of America when its first non-elected President casts his moral, ethical, and political lot with the perfidy, the mendacity, the malfeasance, the duplicity, the demogoguery ["suffered enough" indeed!] of the most criminally evil Presidency this country has ever known.

God Save America!

Fonda replies

To The Editor:

I would like to thank Mr. Fitzgerald for bringing to my attention the issue of amnesty to draft evaders and resistors. In my last letter I applauded President Ford for the mercy he showed toward Nixon. In this letter I would like to again show my admiration for the president in his granting amnesty to draft evaders. As president he has the power to grant amnesty. He also has the power not to grant amnesty. The conditions of the amnesty make difference in its justice. The fact is that Ford is showing mercy to these men by granting them amnesty at all.

Some people feel that men should not be giving amnesty because it is unfair to the men who did go and get killed or put in prisoner of war camps. I don't agree with that opinion. Many of these men left prematurely. I am sure that some of them could have gotten physical deferments or COs if they had really tried. With options like these I feel that Ford is within his rights as president to give them the amnesty that he has.

Doing what's right—wrong

"...no, no, no you don't understand how radio works."

-Catherwood

WMUA, the student run campus radio station, is in what appears to be the final stages of a controversy that has been going on actively since mid-May and in a different way for a lot longer. It is a problem that has implications for the entire campus, and campus media in particular. It is the problem of input of women and minority groups in the station. WMUA is an interesting case study in how to deal with and abuse the spirit of the term Affirmative Action.

The people involved in the affair are almost as diverse as the scope of student activities itself. With the organizations they represent, here is a rundown of those involved:

STUDENT GOVERNMENT ASSOCIATION [SGA] - represented by Student Senator and former Women's Committee member Martha Creegan.

THE BLACK NEWS SERVICE [BNS] AND CORP - represented by Collegian Black Affairs Editor and Corp member Sherwood Thompson.

THE BLACK MASS COMMUNICATIONS PROJECT [BMCP]

THE WOMEN'S MEDIA PROJECT [WMP] - represented by Robin Rich

WMUA — represented by Station Manager Jack Harper and Program Director Scott Bacherman.

I spoke to all the above this week. From their accounts and various other sources, such as meeting minutes, the following account of what happened over the last few months has emerged.

According to Robin Rich of WMP women interested in MUA, especially those from WMP, had been requesting time to meet with the Management of WMUA for most of the Spring semester to discuss what they felt were the special problems involved in the entrance of women in large numbers to the WMUA station body. Rich claims that the meetings were constantly postponed, but that the women "let it go" at the time.

Toward the end of the semester, according to Rich, grievances developed. The women felt at this time that they had been ignored too long and submitted a detailed list of grievances to the Student Senate at the May 23 meeting of the Senate Executive Committee. By then, all the students were gone, a situation which raised a few questions about the validity of decisions to be made in the controversy. The Senate's summer actions, for one thing, are not valid until ratified by the full Senate at one of its first Fall meetings. The same applies to WMUA and its staff, but that will be discussed later.

There is some disagreement by MUA Program Director Scott Bacherman with Rich's story as to why meetings were not held in the spring to discuss the problem. While Rich claims that the station was dodging the women (the reason they brought the matter to the Student Government), Bacherman gave the rationale for the delay as a case of the station receiving the women's request at a particularly busy time. The station was deeply involved in negotiations with Third World media groups to establish the position of director of Third World affairs, according to Bacherman, and he claims that this was keeping everyone at MUA too busy to sit down with the women. Only top personnel at WMUA know if this story is true. I can't see why they would be lying. It is easy to see on the other hand how the women may have felt neglected, as at that point hard feelings were already developing on both sides and communication was not flowing between the parties involved.

By this time all the groups mentioned earlier were involved in the controversy at the same time, and it turned into kind of an alphabet soup war, with WMUA on one side and the WMP, BMCP, BNS, CORP, and the SGA on the other. The Third World Groups had submitted to the SGA a copy of a letter they had sent to the station accusing them of non-compliance with Affirmative Action guidelines.

The SGA involvement in the affair comes in for a little examination here. When the four chief complainants against WMUA decided to go to the Senate their goal was to have the Senate freeze the station's budget, a power it holds over any recognized Senate Organization (RSO) that it budgets. The actual freezing was postponed many times (it never did happen) with the understanding that MUA would hold regular meetings with the four. These meetings were held, and from them came a document which was to be an agreement between all disagreeing groups. Martha Creegan, in her report to the Senate on her summer activities, states that at one time the document was accepted by all, but somehow it was not officially used.

From an MUA perspective the document has very little to recommend it, since it puts them in a position somewhat skin to the Germans at Versaille. Since the management feels that they were willing to work out the input problems with the four groups, the document, which implies their complicity in neglect of Affirmative Action, could hardly have pleased them or agreed with the position they related to me.

A dispute arose over some changes in MUA's constitution affecting personnel, the station people claiming that nothing could be done until their full staff was back in the Fall and the SGA finally alleviating the problem by the legal but somewhat dubious means of suspending MUA's constitution and setting up a new provisional government that incorporated the disputed personnel changes. The provisional government, which first met on July 18, will remain in control until the end of this month. It consists of the old MUA management board, with the change being that previously non-voting members can vote now. The MUA station body decided the future of these changes last night, but it was done too late for the Collegian's press time.

No straight thinking person can deny that there isn't enough input by any of the protesting groups, and that not only here, but in society as a whole, such input is not only deserved but crucially and morally right. But something is rotten here and it appears that in this particular case the right thing was done for the wrong reasons, and that is as bad as The wrong thing being done. Consider:

That no one knows what one of the groups, Corp, really is and who it represents. Martha Creegan thinks it is "kind of a clearinghouse for all the Third World groups on campus." When I asked Sherwood Thompson, a member of Corp. how many people were part of it he declined to give a direct answer, saying only that it is "composed of concerned community." Yet the Senate was willing to legitimize them without asking questions and demand that WMUA treat them on an equal footing with other groups.

The SGA was willing to override the station's constitution, which everyone admits was in a mess, and in need of change in order to gain an end that the four protesting groups desired. While this is within their jurisdiction, it seems a bit of a heavy handed thing to do, especially to media and especially in view of the fact that they did not really know who they were dealing with in at least one of the groups.

There is also the consideration that the SGA, as embodied by its representative, did not go the extra mile to get both sides of the story, but chose to believe the protesters who came to them initially. I see no reason not to believe that MUA was sincere in its intention to follow through with affirmative action. Both representatives of the station that I spoke with seemed to have no trouble with the concept. The only problem was constitutional, and the hassle of everyone outside of the station pushing through the measures they thought appropriate by governmental fiat.

Another aspect of the problem is the political nature of some of the changes incorporated in the grievance statements. One issue which was included in the WMP statement was that the station should "encourage the use of alternative news servicces." From my experience, these types of news services are little more than biased versions of regular news. This type of thing should be decided on by the full station since it is a decision that is political in nature.

Another requested change in the WMP statement was that MUA play music that "presents women and Third World people in a positive way." This ignores the freedom of the artist involved and of the people who play the music. Both of the aforementioned grievances reflect a willingness to subvert other people's rights on the road to what the authors consider a higher consciousness. It is in its own way as dangerous as fascism, although the intent was, I'm sure, not that at all.

Other provisions of the grievances of all the protesting parties display a general lack of awareness of the functions of the station in the community and the wants and needs of the listening audience. One of the statements, that of the three Black media groups, contains a good dosage of the rhetoric of accusation and mau-mauing that is both devisive and (in view of what I perceive to be the real intentions of the heads of WMUA) worthless.

My contention is that those who are powerless and oppressed stand to lose the most in the long run by using questionable methods to get things done. While I'd say that most of what went on seemed to be done without malice, it still bears looking at by all involved. We'll never be able to deal with the Richard Nixons of the world if we can be condemned for using the same tactics that we decried in him.

For these reasons I would urge the Student Senate to reverse the actions of the summer Executive Committee at its next regular meeting and allow WMUA to work out its problem of minority and women's input on its own. The impetus is certainly there, and I believe that the will is there and that the consciousness required has been there since at least mid-May, if not before. There's still time to do the right thing the right way and for the right reasons. Now it's up to the right people.

Dasterdly Dick lives

There will be no Nixon trial. This stark fact became evident to political strategists Sunday afternoon. It is obvious that something must be done. If Watergate, kept alive for over two years, is allowed to die now the longest, and most sordid inquisition in American history could be all for nought. Indeed, liberalism could be right back to Nov. 7, 1972. With nothing to detract from inflationary policies Congress would face the wrath of the American electorate. Democratic allocations, now free from Nixon would face a spotless and conservative Gerry Ford. As we can see in recent papers the defenders of the social welfare state are once again in gear for action.

Chairman Sam has called the pardoning "a continuation of the cover-up." Others have called it "the cover-up of cover-ups." Incredible as it may seem Ford's amnesty for Nixon has been labled more serious than the heinous crimes which Nixon himself allegedly committed. Why this growing wrath over an issue which was thought to be dead? Perhaps if the American people get the answer to this question they will finally know what "Watergate" is all about.

In the wake of the 1972 presidential mandate liberalism was faced with total anihilation. With Vietnam soon to be dead and conservatism on the rampage the left faced a purge within the Democratic party itself. The prospects for the first Republican Congress in twenty years loomed over the 1974 elections like a dark shadow. The public was becoming angry with inflation and an issue, any issue, had to be grabbed. Nixon presented his opposition with that issue and proceeded to set himself up in a political spider's web. Most Democrats wrote Watergate off as the McGovernites post-Vietnam toy until it became evident that Nixon's political mistakes could insure re-election in 1974. Salvation had come from the hands of the devil himself.

Unfortunately, Nixon would not hold on for the Senate trial which would have taken place (timing, my friend) during the fall of this year. As if that is not enough, Ford started his administration with many popular actions, such as: conditional amnesty for traitors; mass transit welfare; meetings with the EPA and, of course, Nelson Rockefeller. The month of August was a living nightmare for the social welfare state as the possibilities of a Republican Congress again came to life. But now that is all over. Congress has declared an end to the honeymoon just in the nick of time. The hatred and mass disregard once directed toward Nixon will now be transferred to Ford as election 1974 approaches.

Whether or not the American people will wake up in time is sheer speculation. There is a good chance they will believe the assertion that the spirit of Dick Nison the Dastardly lives anew in the person of Gerry Ford the Gum Chewing. One can only hope that the electorate will see this coup for what it is and vote accordingly.

Ariel said he feels the two articles, and one appearing in today's edition, are one-sided. "The accusations are really damaging," he said. "I would like to clear my name."

Ariel said if there was evidence that any personal financial gain came his way or if he has wrongly endorsed commercial products, "I will come out with a statement right on the spot that I should be fired." Ariel has become the focus of a dispute between three professors in the dept. of physical education. His case has also lead to charges that the UMass-Amherst administration allowed him to be hired improperly to full professor from part-time teaching position.

"I would challenge any professor to come up with a better set of credentials than mine," Ariel said, adding that allegations he has unethically reprinted original research in two publications concurrently are false.

In particular, Ariel said it was strange that "my advisor who signed the papers for my diploma could turn up so badly against me."

Students from the Committee for the Collegiate Education of Black Students, (CCEBS), participated in community work as volunteers of the University Year for Action, this past summer.

Carl Shelton and Ivan Hazard worked as recreation coordinators for the Hampshire Community Action in Northampton. Students carried on different recreational activities to residents of a housing program. According to Ivan Hazard some of the activities were sports, quiet games, arts and crafts and special projects.

UYA, CCEBS and Univ. of Mass. sponsored the Summer Program.

Women's union ras raises $200.00

The Valley Women's Union sponsored a benefit concert Wednesday night and raised about $200.

Lilith, a popular women's band, played at the event which was held at Hampden Dining Commons. Between 150 and 200 students attended.

Ellen Wade, a member of the Employment Work Group of the Valley Women's Union, said the money would go to such goals as the unionizing of local waitresses.

The Valley Women's Union, originally the Valley Women's Center, is concerned with issues related to Feminist Socialism.

They are located at 200 Main St. in Northampton.

Meeting on bikeways planned

The Circulation Committee of the Amherst Planning Board will hold its second meeting about bikeways in Amherst on Tuesday, September 24, 1974. The meeting will be held in the Town Room of the Town Hall at 7:30 p.m.

All citizens interested in bicycling and concerned about the need for a safe, convenient bikeway system in Amherst are encouraged to attend the meeting and share their ideas with the Committee.

At this time, the Circulation Committee is interested in getting citizen input on such items as safety; accessibility of biking routes for recreation and commuting; desirable routes and connections in the town; trouble spots such as dangerous intersections and curves, unsafe paving, curbs, poor warning signs; and the need for bicycle parking facilities. Wendy Lindquist, the Bikeway Planner, will review her work to date and present initial proposals for Amherst's Bikeway System.

San Andreas to let go in '82

WASHINGTON (UPI) - Two astronomers predict in a book published yesterday that a rare alignment of the planets in 1982 will touch off a chain of events that will trigger a great earthquake along California's San Andreas fault system.

"In particular, the Los Angeles region will, we believe, be subjected to the most massive earthquake experienced by a major center of population during this centry," say Drs. John R. Gribbin and Stephen H. Plagemann.

They say the San Andreas fault system, which runs from north of San Francisco down to the Gulf of California, is under great strain just waiting for something to kick off major earth movements.

That nudge, they argue in "The Jupiter Effect" Walker and Co., $7.95, is likely to occur when all nine planets will be lined up on the same side of the sun for the first time in 179 years. At the same time in 1982, the sun is expected to be undergoing its maximum sunspot activity over an 11-year period.

Gribbin and Plagemann say the combination of tidal forces of the planets on the sun and the normal activity increase will generate great outbursts of solar radiation which in turn will have a "pronounced effect" on Earth's weather patterns. These changes in atmospheric circulation, they say, will disrupt Earth's rotation enough to "agitate regions of geologic instability into life.

"There will be many earthquakes, large and small, around susceptible regions of the globe. And one region where one of the greatest fault systems lies today under a great strain, long overdue for a giant leap forward and just awaiting the necessary kick, is California."

The book is expected to draw considerable scientific attention. A solar astronomer at the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration's Environmental Research Laboratories at Boulder, Colo., said the past performance of earlier attempts to forecast sunspot activity on the basis of planetary lineups does not add any credibility to the new prediction.

Rhodes, Marshall scholarships competitions opened for 'F6

Rhodes and Marshall scholarship competitions for 1975-76 has officially opened, according to Barbara B. Burn, Director of the Office of International Programs.

A Rhodes scholarship provides for two years of study at Oxford University, England, with a possible third year if the scholar's record and plan of study warrant it.

To be eligible a candidate must be male, unmarried and a U.S. citizen with at least five years' domicile; be between 18 and 24 years old at the time of application; have at least junior standing at the time of application; and recieve official endorsement of the university.

Selection is based not only upon the applicant's academic ability and achievements, but upon his moral character and physical vigor. "Quality of both character and intellect is the most important requirement for a Rhodes scholarship," the official program announcement states.

The Marshall scholarship program is designed to enable qualified men and women to study for a degree at any university in the United Kingdom. Awards are made for two years, but may be extended for a third.

To be eligible a candidate must be a U.S. citizen, under 26 years of age on October 1, 1975, and a graduate of an accredited college or university.

Marshall scholarship selection committees look for distinction of intellect and character as evidenced both by scholastic attainment and other activities and achievement.

Rhodes and Marshall Scholarship application forms are available at the International Programs Office. Students interested in learning more about the scholarships should talk with Ms. Judy Epstein, International Programs Office, 239 Whitmore. Completed applications must be received at the International Programs Office by October 11. The applicants are then interviewed by a campus committee. Applications endorsed by this committee are transmitted to the state and regional Rhodes and Marshall Selection Committee for their review.

As only 30 Marshall Scholarships and 32 Rhodes Scholarships are awarded each year throughout the entire U.S., competition for them is extremely keen. Students should only consider applying if they have a very high cumulative grade average.

Grant awarded to legal services

Western Massachusetts Legal Services, Inc. has announced receipt of a grant from the Massachusett Dept. of Mental Health to establish a pilot project to provide legal services to the mentally retarded residents of the four western Massachusetts counties.

The Mental Retardation Representation Project, with a staff of two attorneys and two paraprofessionals, is located at 67 Pomeroy Terrace, Northampton.

MERREP will counsel and-or represent any resident of Belchertown State School or its community placement facilities. There are no limitations on the types of cases that we can handle.

MERREP will also provide paralegal training for Dept. of Mental Health staff and community placement staff in areas involving the legal rights and problems of people labeled mentally retarded. We hope to have a workshop in late September dealing with the legal rights and legal problems of people labeled mentally retarded. The workshop will be open to the public.

MERREP will act as a resource for the private bar. We will provide information to private attorneys representing clients labeled mentally retarded.

Also, MERREP will begin an educational program for the residents of Belchertown State School and the community placement facilities. A program will be run to provide a legal education to the residents. The program will focus on their legal rights as well as responsibilities.

"A school of higher education"

EDUCATION?

By NAOMI MILAMED
Staff Reporter

"What do you want to be when you grow up?"

How many times have we heard this priceless question? On the surface it is quite flexible - we have choices of becoming nurses, firemen, or beach bums. No one has commanded us to continue learning, and actually joining the foreign legion is still a possibility. Yet, we really know that translated these "loaded" inquiry are a chant of "Go to college, go to college, go to college.."

So here I am at sunny (sometimes) UMass, a victim of high school "college" courses and dreams of grandeur. Along with my radio, stuffed animals, and other necessities, I dutifully lugged from hom dictionaries, reference books, notebooks, and other marks of diligence. Why? To study with, of course! Yeah, you guessed it - I'm a freshman (i.e. a member of that almost extinct race who expects college to be a few notches above high school). When examining the past two weeks at UMass, though, I find the only book I have opened is a campus guide. I have already logged several nights at the Blue Wall, invaded countless parties, and helped drain foaming kegs. Maybe I'm just naive, but why am I here, anyway?

Perhaps my confusion stems from following the saying "Don't believe everything you hear." My fidelity, however, was not due to any respect for proverbs, but because I received such diverse predictions and advice. My supervisor at work this summer insisted I would become an alcoholic before semester break, and concerned adults reminded me that college is a place for study. Tug o'war, anyone?

I have heard UMass called both a "school of higher education" and a "camp for aging children." Both descriptions, however, seem to overlap, for "college" has come to mean a place to live, study, shout, and play. Above all, UMass is a unique experience, for in this hallowed institution we have live-in sex counselors, parties on "school" (?) nights, dining common food (the last time I checked), and, of course, dormitory living en masse. Many types of students have flocked to UMass. I have heard the resident yodeler and champion shouters, yet have also seen colloquia course listings. Where else can such a combination of merrymaking and learning exist?

If an atmosphere of all work and no play creates an insipid student body, then surely UMies are among the most inventive people. The balance between time spent in scholastic endeavors and hell-raising is up to us.

Where's the party tonight?

Astrology in Amherst

By LARRIE SHEA

There has been an upswing of interest over the last year in Astrology. There are several resources in the Amherst area that can help you to satisfy this interest.

Basically, Astrology is a system of understanding life. We are all interested in answering the basic questions of Who am I?... How did I get here?... Where am I going: Astrology attempts to answer these and many other questions.

Let's take a look at some recent history before discussing Astrology resources. Nearly two years ago two students, Zachariah and Larrie Shea go the idea, independently, to create a BDIC Major in Astrology as an alternative. The reality came about due largely to the efforts of Prof. Ed Phinney of the Classics Department, who courageously agreed to sponsor them. Subsequently two more students came in to the program, Jeff Jawer and Don Cerow.

As an outgrowth of the program the Amherst Astrology Cooperative was born. The Co-op's goals of establishing an Astrology Library, Beginner Classes, and a base of co-operation for Astrologers in the area has been met. There are nearly fifty books on reserve at the Jones Library in Amherst, that are available for anyone to use. This Fall a beginner course will be taught free of charge and open to the public. The Co-op will begin regular weekly meetings at the end of this month.

This Fall, astrological activity in the area has reached an unprecedented peak. Larry Ely, an eminent area Astrologer, will be teaching a Beginner Course through UMass Continuing Ed. beginning Monday November 4th.

Jeff Jawer is doing an Astro-Prediction show over WMUA weekday mornings at 8:30. He and Larrie Shea will be teaching a Beginner Class for the Astrology Co-op beginning Sept. 25th at 8:00 p.m. on Wednesday.

Jeff, Nancy Blair, and Barry Lynes initiated an Astrological Service last August 17th, called Ometrics. Some of their specialties include Personal Counseling and a written five-month projection. They can be contacted at P.O. Box 341 Amherst or 549-6743.

The UM Tut Sut Bookery, the area's only Astrology-Occult specialty bookshop, is changing its name and location. It will be located in between the Hungry-U Earthwares off of North Pleasant Street, and will be called The Sirius Bookery.

Leslie Mitchell and Don Cewow, experienced Astrologers, will be teaching a course on "The Symbolism of Astrology" on Thursday evenings at the Amherst-Pelham Regional Junior High School through the Adult Education program and Project Ten. This is a one-credit colloquim course and it will meet on Thursday evenings beginning Oct. 3rd.

These are your resources for Astrology in the area. If I have missed any others I apologize...and hope that you will let me know about them. Anyone interested in starting an Astrology Club can call me at 549-0005. Thank You... May the long time Sun shine upon you.

Those crazy unshaved legs: they don't feel any less femine

By JAN ALEXANDER
Staff Reporter

Well the times they are a-changin', and as the times change, well, so do habits and customs and opinions about what makes a woman and what makes a man.

So a lot of women these days are no longer shaving their legs for one reason or another and they are not feeling any less feminine. In fact most say that they feel more feminine and even sensual.

"Have you ever swung on a swing with unshaved legs?" asked one 19 year old woman. "It feels good, it's a different sensation."

A 21-year-old married woman said that there were "sensual perversions" involved in not shaving and went so far as to say that unshaved legs helps her to "become one with the animal world."

There are a lot of reasons why this trend is growing. One 19 year old said simply that she didn't shave her legs because "no one sees them".

Another 19 year old from Reading said, "I couldn't understand why I was doing it. It was a waste of time."

A 20 year old woman interviewed in Franklin Dining Commons said that her parents made her feel guilty about shaving. "They felt that it was a bad thing to do, and that it wasn't necessary", she stated.

"The only reason women shave is because society makes them think that shaving makes them more of a woman," she continued. "Society shouldn't push you to do it."

One Field House resident felt that the trend was directly related to the change in sex roles. "When the whole ideology changed concerning men and women, not shaving was a natural outgrowth of that. For some it was a sudden cultural shock," she said, "While others glided into it after realizing these social changes."

In contrast to this view, Katherine Garnard of the Everywoman's Center said, "I would not think this is a woman's issue." Ms. Garnard continued saying that she personally doesn't shave because "I see no reason to do it".

The question remains concerning whether the ones that break away from tradition are chastised by those that don't.

"At first I was afraid to be looked down upon," said one non-conformist, "But most people tell me they hardly notice it. I do get mad at people looking down at me though," she concluded.

One woman epitemized a dying attitude when she recalled that the young girls attending a camp where she worked this summer told her that if she shaved her legs, they could get her a boyfriend.

U.S. Army bureaucracy breaks up marriage

BONN [UPI] — Although Joanne and Fred Reinfeld are happily married and intend to keep sharing a connubial bed, they have sued each other for divorce in order to get around U.S. Army bureaucracy.

"I love Fred very much and he loves me very much and we will stay together," Mrs. Reinfeld said after their decision to file for divorce to save her husband's job.

"I don't want to sound maudlin or anything, but I am crazy about Joanne — please understand that," Fred said.

"A priest told us we would still be married in the eyes of God and the Catholic Church," Mrs. Reinfeld said. She is Roman Catholic, he is Jewish and both are Americans.

The 31-year-old, long-haired Mrs. Reinfeld said the Army withdrew her husband's permit to sell insurance because of her job at the U.S. Army's elementary school at Rhein-Main air base.

"The Army told Fred that it had become aware her was my dependent and withdrew his solicitation permit," Mrs. Reinfeld said.

Reinfeld, a civilian insurance salesman, sold policies to American military personnel stationed in Germany until the Army withdrew his license three weeks ago, citing regulations which prevent dependents from acting as agents for an insurance or brokerage firm.

"I am shaken by the whole situation, but we have no choice but to go through with the divorce to satisfy the Army," Mrs. Reinfeld said.

"I come from a very religious family, and divorce, well-I hope my father doesn't find out about it," she said.

In a letter to Reinfeld, the Army justified its withdrawal of the permit to prevent Army dependents from gaining unfair advantage in their business as a result of access to Army facilities.

"Your dependent privileges to enter installations permit you access to areas and facilities in which solicitation is prohibited," the letter said.

Prof. Ira D. Trail joins U. Mass. School of Health

The nursing division of the University of Massachusetts-Amherst School of Health Sciences begins the year with a new director, Prof. Ira D. Trail, who comes to UMass with 27 years as a nurse, educator, and consultant.

She has also studied several nursing topics, including public health, community mental health, mental health education, social and community psychiatry, and nursing education.

For the past four years, Dr. Trail has been chairman of the nursing department at California State College in Bakersfield. Her career began in 1947 as a staff nurse at Bellevue Hospital in New York and since then she has had several positions as nurse, nurse instructor, and nurse administrator.

She had been a nursing consultant to the Los Angeles County Health Department and to Veterans Administration Hospitals in California. From 1968 to 1970 she was associate director of nursing in charge of continuing education and staff development at the Cedars-Sinai Medical Center in Los Angeles, and from 1969-70 was director of education at the Neuropsychiatric Institute of the University of California, Los Angeles.

Her publications include a 1966 book entitled "Establishing Relationships in Psychiatric Nursing," and such journal articles as: "Registered Nurse Students in Baccalaureate Programs," "In-Service Education for Psychiatric Nursing Supervisors," "The Emotional Aspects of Cardiac Disease," and "Goal for Nursing: Education for Practice."

Grain yields down

WASHINGTON [AP] — The nation's drought-shriveled corn crop, a key to much of the consumer food supply in 1975, has improved slightly as the result of recent rains but still will be 11 per cent below last year's record harvest, the Agriculture Department said Wednesday.

Based on indications Sept. 1, the 1974 crop is estimated at 4,994,730,000 bushels, up 29 million from the forecast a month ago, the department's Crop Reporting Board said.

The soybean crop was estimated at 1,315,792,000 bushels, up slightly from the August forecast. But the report said the harvest will be 16 per cent less than last year's.

As ingredients for livestock feed, corn and soybeans are the major building blocks for meat, poultry and dairy products. Both crops were delayed by too much rain at planting time last spring and have suffered drought effects this summer.

The delayed planting last spring means potential trouble now from killing frosts. Some damage to corn in the upper Midwest was reported last week and if more freezing weather comes before corn and soybeans are fully mature their yields could be cut further.

"Cool temperatures and much-needed rainfall during August relieved the stress to grow crops throughout the eastern half of the nation," the department said. "However, crop conditions were slow in recovering from hot, dry weather in July and conditions in many areas are still only fair."

The report said the 1974 corn harvest is expected to average 78.3 bushels per acre, compared with 77.8 forecast in August and 91.4 last year.

Soybean yields were put at 25.1 bushels per acre, the same as indicated in August. An average of 27.8 bushels was harvested from the 1973 crop.

The U.S. government said earlier in the day the 1974 grain harvest in the Soviet Union is estimated at 210 million metric tons, second only to last year's record crop and more than a goal set by Moscow.

Roger S. Euler, a specialist on Soviet agriculture in the department's Economic Research Service, told a reporter the Russian harvest appears to be progressing about normal, despite delays in some regions.

Senes on presidency sponsored

The first of a series of public seminars on the Presidency sponsored by The Boston Globe and UMass Journalistic Studies will be this Monday night at UMass.

The seminar series, to be held over the coming semester, will include public discussions by member's of The Globe's Washington bureau. The seminar locations will be rotated among UMass and the four colleges.

Monday's location will be Thompson Hall room 106 at 8 p.m. It will include Globe executive editor Robert Healy.

The series is a cooperative effort of the Five Colleges (Amherst, Smith, Mount Holyoke and Hampshire Colleges, and UMass) and lectures will be given at each school.

Robert Healy is considered "practically a daily commuter between Boston and Washington" as he covers political scenes in both locations. He began his award-winning career with the "Globe" in 1942 and has covered terms of Presidents Eisenhower, Kennedy, Johnson, and Nixon. During the Eisenhower Administration, Healy received the Boston Press Club's Amasa Howe Award for his coverage of the Sherman Adams-Bernard Goldfine scandal. In 1965 he won the Sigma Delta Chi Award, and also a Pulitzer Prize for his teamwork investigation into Francis X. Morrissey's qualifications for a Federal judgeship. Healy was named "Globe" political editor in 1963, assistant executive editor in 1965, and executive editor in 1969.

Martin Nolan has been "Globe" Washington bureau chief and a syndicated columnist since 1971, and his column appears three times a week in the "Globe" and other newspapers throughout the country. NBC's John Chancellor has said that Nolan is "one of the best political reporters in Washington, as savvy and careful as they come." Nolan, who has covered regional and national politics in New England for 13 years, began as a national political reporter in 1965, covering Congress and White House politics and the inner workings of bureaucracy. He has also written for "The New Republic," "New York Magazine," "The Atlantic," "The Reporter," "The New York Times Review," "Village Voice," and "Sports."

"The Presidential Crisis: View from the Press" lectures will continue Sept. 30 at Mount Holyoke College with Thomas Oliphant, assistant metropolitan editor for the "Globe" morning paper. Other lectures will be: Oct. 21, David Nyhan, at Hampshire College; Nov. 11, Sal Micciche, at Smith; Nov. 25, Darius Jhabvala, at Amherst; and Dec. 9, Robert Healy and Martin Nolan, at UMass.

Shortie on senility offered

A short course on the Psychology of Senility for those who work with the aged will be presented by the University of Massachusetts Division of Continuing Education in five locations throughout the Commonwealth this year.

"The course is being offered five times in Tuesday and Wednesday sessions on the following schedule: Oct. 8 and 9 in Pittsfield; Dec. 3 and 4 in Boston; Feb. 18 and 19 in Worcester; April 15 and 16 in Holyoke and May 27 and 28 in Fall River.

Clinton F. Jenne and Dawna K. Jenne are the instructors. The former, now on the staff of the Regional Nutrition Program for the Elderly, is a visiting lecturer at UMass and a nursing home consultant. The latter is a marriage counselor for the Roman Catholic Diocese of Springfield, a private counselor for the aged and a nursing home consultant.

Full details are available from the Division of Continuing Education, 315 Hills North.

So are new computer courses

This fall, a computer course will be offered to both graduate and under-graduate students, numbered BA 700B and Acctg. 390B respectively. This course will include: advanced COBOL using the new CDC KRONOS system, various newer routines available with COBOL, and data base design techniques.

For those of you who are interested in information systems work, it is recommended that you take this course. Remember, if you are a graduate student, sign up for BA 700B Independent Study; undergraduates sign up for Accounting 390B - Adv. COBOL & Data Base Design.

The course will meet Tuesdays and Thursdays rom 1:00-2:15 in SBA 4A.

Analysts relate primary "purge" to Watergate

BOSTON — Political analysts were still assessing the results of Tuesday's Massachusetts primary and at least one high state official said the outcome of some key races had "a lot to do with Watergate."

There were others who seemed to agree that independent voters could tilt the outcome in the governor's race between incumbent Republican Francis W. Sargent and Democrat Michael S. Dukakis.

Dukakis won an impressive primary victory Tuesday over Attorney General Robert H. Quinn, who had been slightly favored. Sargent soundly beat conservative businessman Carroll Sheehan.

State Treasurer Robert O. Crane, who won a narrow victory over challenger Mark Furcolo, said he thought the primary election returns amounted to a "purge" conducted against incumbent office holders.

"It really was unbelievable watching the returns last night," Crane said Wednesday morning. "I have never seen anything like it that I can recall. I think it had a lot to do with Watergate."

The purge reference was to the defeat of Secretary of State Francis F. X. Davoren and Quinn's 100,000 vote loss to Dukakis.

Sargent, who has held office for 5½ years, predicted a tough fight.

Dukakis' running mate will be Thomas P. O'Neill III, son of the U.S. House majority leader. O'Neil was an easy victor in a five-way contest for lieutenant governor.

Incumbent Lt. Gov. Donald R. Dwight, unopposed for renomination, again will be paired with Sargent, his long-time friend.

Dukakis, son of Greek immigrants, whipped Quinn by a convincing 14 per cent margin.

Both Dukakis and Sargent will try to lure independent voters who comprise almost half the Massachusetts electorate. There are 500,000 Republicans and about one million Democrats.

Even during the primary campaign, Sargent appealed for support outside the GOP.

Rep. Paul H. Guzzi handily upset Davoren. Guzzi, former Harvard football star and self-proclaimed reformer, took the lead from the former House speaker early in the evening and never surrendered it.

Guzzi will be opposed in the November election by Sen. John M. Quinlan who was unopposed in the primary.

Crane, in the toughest fight of his political career, survived the reform challenge of Mark Furculo, son of a former governor and treasurer. Crane polled strong in his Suffolk County home area.

Crane, and Auditor Thaddeus Buczko who was unopposed in the primary, have no Republican opponents on the November ballot and are virtually assured of winning fourth terms.

The contest for attorney general will pit two veteran campaigners against each other-Democratic former Lt. Gov. Francis X. Bellotti and former Republican State Committee Chairman Josiah A. Spaulding, who unsuccessfully tried to unseat Sen. Edward M. Kennedy four years ago.

Population series H 5

Women maybe beneficiaries of population research

By DUANE DALE
Special Correspondent

UMass Doctoral Student Duane Dale attended the World Population Conference in Bucharest this summer and filed this report on the status of women. This is the fifth in a nine-part series.

A concern for overpopulation may force world leaders to consider the status of women, according to the highest-ranking woman on the United Nations staff.

Mrs. Helvi Sipila of Finland, U.N. Assistant Secretary-General for Social and Humanitarian Affairs, told a press conference here that "States, which are usually governed by men, have not seen the necessity in giving priority to a question which is just a human rights question—equality of men and women."

But, she pointed out, leaders are increasingly aware that if women are to have fewer children, they will need to have other opportunities available to them.

Mrs. Sipila was in Bucharest for the U. N. Population Conference; next year she will direct the International Women's Year Conference in Bogota, Colombia.

The United States is one country that has already recognized the connection between the population problem and women's liberation. The U.S. Population Commission concluded in 1972 that to minimize such problems as resource shortages and deterioration of the cities, and to improve the quality of life, a stable population is desirable.

This could be achieved by the year 2050 if the two-child family continues to be the norm. But the commission saw the continued development of work opportunities for women as essential to this goal, and recommended passage of the Equal Rights Amendment.

John D. Rockefeller 3rd, who was chairman of the U.S. Population Commission, is also in Bucharest for the World Population Conference. In a speech here, he stated that improvement in the role of women is not only essential to the resolution of population problems, but is also a key factor in the success of modern development programs.

In poor countries, economic development is not a matter of providing the "good life" but rather of trying to meet the population's needs for a bare subsistence. Capital to provide tools and factories is scarce; people are central to successful development.

When women face discrimination in education and employment, according to Rockefeller, "the situation is not only unjust, it is also inefficient. It means that full advantage is not taken of all the country's human resources."

The relation between population and development has been a central theme at the World Population Conference. "Development is the best pill," according to one slogan. African and South American spokesmen point to the U.S. experience: a high birth rate during the days of expansion and economic development was followed by a spontaneous transition to a low birth rate once a good life was secure.

It came as a surprise to many that Rockefeller--who has given millions to family planning programs—now seems to share the development view. He called for a sweeping reappraisal of all that has been done in family planning, and stated the conviction that rapid population growth "is only one among many problems facing most countries, that it is a multiplier and intensifier of other problems rather than the cause of them."

The family planning approach assumes that people throughout the world want smaller families, and that the problem is merely to provide the information and the means.

The development approach recognizes that for people living in poverty, children can provide security in old age, cheap labor, and personal fulfillment. A higher standard of living, old age benefits, better health care, and higher levels of education are all factors which could help to create a preference for small families.

Some countries want to increase their population. Brazil is one of these, but Brazil's official statement to the conference stressed the importance of providing birth control information and means because couples have a "basic human right" to control the number and spacing of their children.

Better health care is important to countries which want to increase their population. If infant mortality can be reduced, then more people will live into their productive years and contribute to the work force.

But curiously, lower infant mortality is also a goal for countries like Bangladesh, which are desperate to reduce their growth rate. A lower death rate is obviously desirable in itself, but if there are fewer deaths to counterbalance births, then it would seem that the population would grow more rapidly.

However, if a couple is planning their family so as to have several children to take care of them in old age, or a son alive when the father dies (as some cultures dictate), then it may be important for them to have a large family, population specialists point out.

If the couple could be guaranteed that all of their children would outlive them, they might be inclined to have a smaller family. Better health care would, of course, make it more likely that all of their children would live.

The World Population Plan of Action is the set of resolutions and policy recommendations which is emerging from the World Population Conference. It will include sections on the importance of equality for women, improved health care, and better educational opportunities, as well as the right to the information and contraceptive materials which will allow couples to plan the number and spacing of their children.

Population and family planning are the concern of women as much as--and undoubtedly more than--men. Ironically, but not surprisingly, women are a small minority of the 1100 delegates from 135 nations. Fortunately, their influence has gone beyond their numbers. Women heads-of-delegation from Sweden, Finland, and Sri Lanka (Ceylon) presented eloquent statements before the main conference session.

At the Tribune--the Conference session for representatives of nongovernmental organization and other persons--women were particularly active. Margaret Mead, the anthropologist, and Germain Greer and Betty Friedan, American women's liberation writers, were among the contributors to a women's amendment which has corrected some of the oversight of the World Population Plan of Action. The amendment was accepted by the governmental representatives without dissent or debate.

Dr. Mead, familiar here for her pithy pronouncements and her five-foot walking stick, praised the women for "keeping their eye on the ball." Whereas the male delegates have spent a lot of time arguing whether population programs or development programs are needed, the women have been willing to start from the assumption that both are essential.

The basic facts which the men lose track of, according to Dr. Mead, are that the world is short of food, that 30 million people may die in the next couple of years because of famine and that we have to do all we can.

Radical economy, politics open to public tomorrow

By BILL DENSMORE
MDC Staff

Radical economics, student unionization, racism and feminist socialism are amont seminar topics at the first campus-wide meeting of the University of Massachusetts Radical Caucus tomorrow in the Campus Center.

The Caucus is a group of about twenty graduate students and faculty in political science and economics concerned with "radical activism" according to seminar coordinator and caucus member and grad student Patricia A. Rector of Northampton.

"This is a series of workshops designed to bring radical activism to the University," Ms. Rector said yesterday. "Anyone in the University is welcome to come."

She said small rooms in the lower level of the Campus Center will be the only limit on participation in the ten seminars all day tomorrow.

Rector said the three-year-old caucus includes UMass professors in philosophy as well as radical economics.

Former Harvard economics Profs. Samuel S. Bowles and Herbert Gintis will share leadership of a 4 p.m. seminar tomorrow called, "What is Radical Political Economy."

Since last year, the UMass-Amherst economics dept. has gained several new faculty who share a radical perspective of economics. Their presence make UMass-Amherst one of the few enclaves of radical economic theory in the nation.

A seminar schedule follows. Campus Center room numbers will be listed at the bottom of the escalator from the Concourse level, Rector said.

—10 a.m. - University Complicity: a third world perspective by Victor Gomez, UMass grad student.

—11 a.m. - Racism and Political Repression

—12 noon - Teaching and Political Consciousness by Prof. John Bretlinger, dept. of philosophy.

—11 a.m. - Citizen Action in the Environment by Louise Doucette, MassPIRG-Amherst.

—1 p.m. - Why Students Should Unionize by the student organizing project of the undergraduate senate.

—1 p.m. - Graduate student organizing

—2 p.m. - The New Labor Movement by the Vally Women's Union.

—3 p.m. - Feminist Socialism

—4 p.m. - What is Radical Political Economy?

CONTROL OF STUDENT FUNDS at Arizona State is being challenged in a court action brought by ASUA against the Board of Regents.

A page one story in the Arizona Daily Wildcat describes the litigation as centering on withholding $40,000 from ASUA, earned at the student-owned ASUA Bookstore. A fourth of the funds was to have been used for a birth control clinic.

HIGHER OCCUPANCY level of Indiana U. dorms is attributable to the fact that room and board rates have not been raised, according to a report in the Indiana Daily Student. Three per cent more students will be living in dorms, this Fall, bringing the occupancy level to 96 per cent of capacity.

Director of Residence there says "We do have things that attract students to dorms, such as special-interest houses and three square meals a day."

"GIVE PROFS GUNS" is the headline of the week over a tongue-in-cheek letter to the editor appearing in The Oracle of U. of Fla. Reacting to a proposal that campus cops be permitted to carry shotguns and off-duty weapons "for their own protection," a faculty member proposed arming his colleagues.

"Any time you give someone an 'F', you make an enemy," wrote the assistant professor of Humanities.

"Professors must walk a fine line between maintaining discipline and keeping acceptable rapport. I certainly do not advocate shooting students for no reason at all," he added.

"Finally, I believe this right should also be granted administrators. And since they are further up on the bureaucratic hierarchy and there are more people taking pot shots at them, perhaps they should be given sub-machine guns. Students, maybe, we could issue hand-guns. After all, they have their rights, too."

SBA offers seminars this month

Marketing planning, transactional analysis for management, and pricing in inflation will be discussed at three separate seminars this month at the University of Massachusetts-Amherst School of Business Administration.

"Marketing Planning" will be Sept. 16-18; "Transactional Analysis for Management" will be Sept. 23-25; and "Pricing in an Inflation Economy" will be Sept. 30 through Oct. 2. (All are Monday through Wednesday.)

The three-member faculty for "Marketing PLanning:" Robert S. Weinberg, author of "An Analytical Approach to Advertising Expenditure Strategy;" Martin L. Bell, professor of marketing in the Washington University, St. Louis, Graduate School of Business; and Victor P. Buell, associate professor of marketing at the University of Massachusetts.

"Transactional Analysis for Management" will include these topics for discussion: "The concept of winning or losing...or why people really enjoy losing and beating themselves," "Life styles and life positions and what they mean to effective management," and "How to handle the problem employee...ulterior transaction."

On the faculty will be: David L. Ward, director of the Business Laboratory Program at Chicago State University; Larry Kokkelenberg, a psychotherapist and director of the Place for Human Understanding; and Lynn G. Whitehurst of Chicago State University department of business and administration, and former project director of the Problem Solving Institute for General Electric.

"Pricing in an Inflation Economy" will have a faculty of four: Kent B. Monroe, UMass associate professor of marketing and a nationally known authority on pricing; Joseph P. Guiltinan, UMass associate professor of marketing who has done research projects for IBM, General Electric, and local businesses; William B. Whiston, director of the UMass Center for Business and Economic Risearch; and Albert J. Della Bitta, assistant professor of marketing management at the University of Rhode Island and author of several papers on pricing.

Further information on these conferences may be obtained from Dr. Bertil Liander at the UMass School of Business, or from Continuing Education, 920 Campus Center.

Montague nuclear plant under study

One of the area's hottest environmental issues — the proposed nuclear power plant in Montague — will be the subject of a study program this year at the University of Massachusetts.

The program will be an in-depth seminar on the Montague issue for 12 undergraduates from the Southwest Residential College, under the direction of Walter Silva of Southwest's Office of Interdisciplinary Studies.

The group will study with faculty from several areas — Tom Zajicek of chemistry, Robert Coler and Robert Walker from environmental science, Donald Doehring and Donald Wise of geology, Allan Hoffman of physics and others.

They will spend the first semester gathering information on all aspects of the issue, from community representatives, utility officials and others. The second semester will see the material summarized and published in an extensive report, copies of which will be made available to those in Montague and others concerned with the power plant question.

Series offered on Western Europe

This year there will be a Western European Studies Colloquium series bringing distringuished guests to the campus for talks and discussions. A wide variety of topics on contemporary Western Europe will be covered. All colloquia will include a period of questions and discussion. Students, faculty, staff, and other interested persons are welcome at the colloquia.

Monday, September 16th, Campus Center, Rm. 105 at 3:30 p.m. Professor Heinrich Winkler, of the History seminar at Freiburg University in West Germany will talk about "The Sources of Bonn's Stability versus Weimar's Instability."

Wednesday, September 25th, Campus Center, Rm. 105 at 3:30 p.m. Dr. Kristian Hvidt, Parliamentary Librarian of Denmark and authority on Scandinavian migration to the U.S. will speak on "The Image of America in Denmark, 1874 and 1974."

Coalition to study N.E.energy needs

A coalition of environmental groups including the Amherst-based Massachusetts Public Interest Research Group (MassPIRG) have formed a group to study New England's energy needs, MassPIRG said this week.

The group will "evaluate New England's future electricity needs, and strategies for ensuring that those needs are met," according to MassPIRG spokesman Jonathan Souweine.

The first part of the study will be prepared by independent experts working at the Dartmouth College Environmental Studies program. Funding for the research will come in part from the nationally-based Environmental Fund, Souweine said.

The group is to be called the New England Citizens Energy Study and Souweine is slated to head it.

In a statement, Souweine said the group hopes to gather facts to support or refute utility claims that power consumption will continue to increase, thus justifying rate increases for plant expansion:

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

By Stella Wilder

VIRGO: (Aug. 23-Sept. 7) Business arrangements can be made well ahead of time. Keep to your own method of operation at this time; another's can wait its turn. (Sept. 8-Sept. 22) Stick to a schedule that has proven feasible in the past. To try new ways and means at this time could mean to introduce a definite sour note.

LIBRA: (Sept. 23-Oct. 7) — Keep appointments even though you may have to put yourself out considerably to do so. There is no point turning another against you. (Oct. 8-Oct. 22) Concentrate on those activities which require you to use your mental capacities to the utmost. Don't be persuaded into taking the easy way out.

SCORPIO: (Oct. 23-Nov. 7) — If your are wise, you will meet whatever events occur when they occur. To put off your responsibilities is to forfeit success. (Nov. 8-Nov. 21) Although problems on the home front may not have financial gain as an incentive to their solution, they must not be neglected. Tackle them at once!

SAGITTARIUS: (Nov. 22-Dec. 7) — This is not the "take it easy" week you may have expected. Do what you can to adjust to situations and circumstances that arise. (Dec. 8-Dec. 21) — Make no mistakes as to what issues are involved in your success this week. There is very little margin for error built into present events.

CAPRICORN: (Dec. 22-Jan. 5) — Conserve your energies. Make an effort to remain calm, to swim easily and laxily with the prevailing current. Fight against nothing. (Jan. 6-Jan. 19) — Although you have imagination and creativity, you would do well to keep both under absolute control this week. Remain calm.

AQUARIUS: (Jan. 20-Feb. 3) — Problems of employment may make it difficult for you to meet another's demand this week. Do what you can and then don't worry! (Feb. 4-Feb. 18) — You would do well to hold your enthusiasms in check all through the week. Approach your work affirmatively, but don't go overboard with eagerness.

PISCES: (Feb. 19-March 5) — If you would undertake a conciliatory course of action, make sure that those with whom relations are strained and are ready and willing. (March 6-March 20) — You could make an error of identification early in the week that would cause you regrets for many weeks to come.

ARIES: (March 21-April 4) — The future success or failure of this week's activities depends upon your willingness to adapt to present circumstances. Bend with the wind. (April 5-April 19) Personal contacts will not be as helpful this week as you had hoped. Trust, instead, to your ability to help yourself progress.

TAURUS: (April 20-May 5) — You should be able to get a clear picture of your immediate future this week. Take care not to underestimate your ability to adapt to ills. (May 6-May 20) — A business association may cause you considerable trouble this week. Don't be alarmed if you are unable to change things to suit yourself.

GEMINI: (May 21-June 6) — Make decisions wisely, but don't expect everything you decide on to turn out your way. Develop old plans into new methods of operation. (June 7-June 20) — Make all plans in accordance with what you know from past experience you are capable of.

CANCER: (June 21-July 7) — A new professional project could prove more than you expected where hours and labor are concerned. Find relief through the attainment of new knowledge. (July 8-July 22) Depend upon your own knowledge and your own ability to act. If you depend upon others, you may be in for genuine disappointment.

LEO: (July 23-Aug. 7) — Keep financial issues from boiling over at this time. You would do well to ask for professional help early in the week.

NFL opens 55th season

[UPI] — With a bunch of new rules and loads of new faces, the strike-scarred national football league opens its 55th season Sunday.

Despite all the newness, a couple of things don't figure to change, among them a couple of George Allen streaks which include the Washington Redskin coach's record of never having lost an opening game and his mark of never having lost a game to the New York Giants.

The oddsmakers figure both Allen streaks will continue as the Redskins have been made one touchdown favorites for the game at New Haven, Conn.

The Redskins finished with a 10-4 mark in 1973 and made the playoffs for the third year in a row under Allen's guidance. They lost to Minnesota in the opening round of postseason competition.

The 1974 Washington Club will be practically the same as last year with only two positions to be filled, Fullback and Right Guard where replacements have to be found for Charley Harraway and Walt Sweeney, respectively.

Miami, in quest of a third straight super bowl title, opens up against New England and the Dolphins have been made two touchdown favorites to get off on the right foot.

Other favorites include: Philadelphia 1 over St. Louis, Dallas 2 over Atlanta, New Orleans 4 over San Francisco, Houston 4 over San Diego, Minnesota 6 over Green Bay, Cincinnati 6 over Cleveland, Detroit 7 over Chicago, Los Angeles 7 over Denver, Kansas City 7 over the New York Jets and Pittsburgh 20 over Baltimore. Oakland is a five point pick over Buffalo for their opener Monday night.

Harriers strive for goals; out to better 1973 season

By SCOTT HAYES
MDC Sports Staff

"Climb high. Climb for your goal - the sky, your aim - the star." This inscription on Hopkins Memorial Steps at Williams College in Williamstown, Mass. could become the motto for the 1974 UMass Cross Country team.

Bettering last season's outstanding performances may call for celestial goals. Coach Ken O'Brien's runners not only captured the Yankee Conference crown a record fourth straight time, but also won the New England Championships. The Minutemen compiled an 8-3 dual meet record a year ago, but more importantly, enjoyed spectacular showings in the championship meets, including a third place finish in the IC4A's.

The harriers treked to Spokane, Washington and in doing so became the first UMass squad to reach the NCAA Cross Country meet. The team managed to place fifteenth among the nations top cross country teams.

This year the team will be paced by super-runners Randy Thomas and Bill Gillin, who will assume co-captain duties once again. Consistent junior Tom Maguire and standout sophomore John McGrail should be tough to beat having gained valuable experience last season.

Allegheny Community College transfer Frank Noto of Maywood, New Jersey, will probably challenge veteran Tom Wilson for the squad's fifth spot. Noto, a 9:15 two.miler at Pittsburgh's Allegheny C.C., is accustomed to exceptional coaching and should feel right at home in Coach O'Brien's rewarding program of hard work. Noto was coached by Sam Bair at Allegheny, one of the great milers in track history.

Talented Chris Farmer, junior Phil Broughton and second-year runners John Scheer and Jim Hunt will battle for the remaining positions on the team.

Thomas and company will be backed by a solid fleet of freshmen harriers who may be used to give their teammates an occasional rest and can be expected to put some pressure on the varsity runners.

The thinclads open with a home meet against Boston College on September 28 then will face several top teams in the East over a two week span. On October 1, the Minutemen will be looking for revenge against Harvard in a Franklin Park tri-meet that has the improved Providence Friars scheduled as the third team. The Crimson stopped Coach O'Brien's charges 27-30 a year ago and haven't lost in twenty years to a UMass team. Northeastern and St. John's provide the opposition in an October 5 tri-meet at the apple orchard. Sophomore Mike Buckley led the Huskies to a 25-30 decision last season, but hppefully the friendly surroundings of the hilly UMass course will aid the harriers this Fall.

One week later, the harriers will get a chance to sharpen up for the championship meets with a five-way meet at New York's colorful Van Cortlandt Park. Defending IC4A champion Manhattan will host Syracuse, the University of Connecticut squad, and Eastern powerhouse William and Mary as well as UMass. William and Mary placed sixth in the NCAA meet last November.

Less than a foot decides game; Cards top Mets in 25 innings

NEW YORK [UPI] — A matter of inches turned into a matter of hours for the St. Louis Cardinals and the New York Mets Wednesday night and Thursday morning.

"Reitzie's bomb went out by about that much," said St. Louis' Claude Osteen, holding his hands less than a foot apart. "That much" spelled the difference between a 3-1 Mets victory in nine innings and 4-3 cardinal triumph in 25 innings, the longest night game in the history of major league baseball and scored longest in History.

Ken Reitz' sixth home, a two-run, two-out ninth inning shot off Jerry Koosman, opened the floodgates for the seven hour, four minute Marathon that was not decided until Bake McBride scored all the way from first on two Met errors as they tried to pick him off in the 25th inning. The game ended at 3:13 A.M. EDT.

Rookie pitcher Hank Webb tried to pick McBride off after he singled in the 25th. The ball rolled into foul territory in right field and McBride steamed around the bases. He appeared to be dead at the plate but catcher Ron Hodges dropped the throw from first baseman John Milner.

"I don't think he would have gotten me anyway," McBride said. "He was in front of the plate and I

In between those runs, 15 innings of continuous blanks graced the Shea Stadium scoreboard. For the record, here are some items that will be preserved in Baseball's history volumes:

Major league records set.

Longest night game, time-7 hours, 4 minutes.

Longest night game, innings-25.

Most Batsmen, game-103, New York.

Most batsmen, game-202 (New York 103, St. Louis 99).

Most at bats, game-89, New York.

Most at bats, both clubs, game-175 (New York 89, St. Louis 86).

Most left on base, both clubs, game -45 (New York 25, St. Louis 20).

Most plate appearances, game-12, Filix Millan, John Milner.

Major league records tied

Most at bats, game-11, Dave Schneck.

Most intentional bases on ball, both clubs, game -7 (New York 4, St. Louis 3).

National league records set.

Most players, game-26, St. Louis.

Most players, both clubs, game-50 (St. Louis 26, New York 24).

The game was one inning short of the all-time mark, a 26 inning 1-1 tie between Brooklyn and Boston on May 1, 1920. The only longer game by time was a 7 hour, 23 minute, 23-inning extravaganza between the Mets and San Francisco on May 31, 1964.

And there were these events, not to be set down in record books, perhaps, but certainly to be remembered by those by viewing the historic game:

Joe Torre making two outstanding plays at first base, saving the game in both the 14th and 23rd innings.

Met manager Yogi Berra being ejected by umpire Ed Sudol in the 20th inning for repeatedly kicking dirt on home plate while protesting an obstruction call on catcher Duffy Dyer.

The UMass Water Polo Club splashes off to its third season with a 3:30 scrimmage versus Amherst College this afternoon in the friendly waters of Boyden pool. The squad, still high from last year's climactic season's end at Brown, is anxious to get into this year's beefed up schedule. This year's squad is led by player-coach Bill McCafferty, Captains Jon Nordby and Bill Bridgman, along with Henry MacLean, Duncan Lomas, Tom Rhodes, Kevin Mcginn, Ron Boucher, Ben Crooker, Ed Fouhey, Marc Gordon, Carl Zulick, and Dave Boucher.

The Women's team faces an equally tough road ahead but coach McCafferty feels they are equal to the challenge. The women's team includes stars Jane Welzel, Kathy McDonald, Judy Day, Betsy East, Kathy Zaffino, Debby McCafferty, Jane Louderhilch, Sharon Smith, Susan Howard, Judy Cox, Janet McGrath, Maryann Elias, Debby Hoxsie. The Water Polo Club welcomes anybody who likes to have a good time regardless of ability. Practices are informal and co-ed. In addition, the club welcomes to their games all fans and fellow water poloers, past, present, and future. The club practices most afternoons in the Boyden pool and the next home game is Saturday, September 21.

Courageous wins

By JACK WOLISTON

NEWPORT, R.I. [UPI] — The U.S. Defender Courageous outsailed the Australian challenger Southern Cross in a protested race Thursday to take a 2-0 lead in the best-of seven series for the America's Cup, the significant trophy in international yachting.

Courageous crossed the finish line 1 minute 11 seconds ahead of the Australian boat in one of the closest races in the 123-year history of the cup competition. The narrowest margin was in the fourth race of the 1962 series when the U.S. yacht Weatherly defeated Gretel I by 26 seconds.

It was a lot closer than the first race of this series Tuesday when the Courageous dropped the Australian yacht by 4 minutes 54 seconds. Unlike Tuesday, when winds varied between 5 and 7 knots, the air was heavier today, 10 to 12 knots, and this going was the kind in which Southern Cross was supposed to have the edge.

Both are good boats but the U.S. sailing tactics were superiors.

The protests in Thursday's race came as the two 12 meters were maneuvering to get a favorable position for start. Courageous hoisted her protest flag first and a few seconds later a flag went up in Southern Cross' starboard shrouds.

The dispute involved maneuvering tactics, each boat charging that the other had failed to yeild on right of way. There appeared to be little merit to either protest.

Neutral jury

NEWPORT, R.I. [UPI] — In this series for the America's cup, an "International Jury" of not less than three people who are not nationals of either contestant's country, acts on protests, according to a new rule set up prior to his competition by the New York Yacht Club.

The international group was set up after a controversy arose in the 1970 series when protests were decided solely by the New York Yacht Club, which sponsors the cup series. In that series, the challenging Australia Boat Bretel II made protest and the NYYC denied it, amid much heated argument.

The new rule setting up the international jury says that its decisions will be final.

The American 12-meter yacht "Courageous" (top) defeated Australia's "Southern Cross" (bottom) in the second race of the America's Cup series. The Americans won by the narrow margin of 71 seconds.

F. Robby an Indian

ANAHEIM [UPI] — Frank Robinson, baseball's fourth-leading home run hitter and the only man to win the MVP award in both leagues, was sent from the California Angels to the Cleveland Indians Thursday for the $20,000 waiver price.

Cleveland will be the fifth major league team Robinson has played for in his storied 19-year career.

The 39-year-old Robinson was completing the second year of a two-year contract estimated at $172,000 annually for the Angels. The team had tried to deal him to the Baltimore Orioles in midseason, but Robinson vetoed the deal.

A club spokesman said the Cleveland deal was made "with the possibility that there will be a future deal with the Indians in the winter."

Robinson, whose home run total of 572 trails only Henry Aaron, Babe Ruth and Willie Mays, batted .251 with 20 home runs and 63 RBI's this season. He was used mainly as a designated hitter for the Angels, the last-place team in the American League West.

Robinson was the subject of trade talk most of the season. Recently Angel Manager Dick Williams said, "you have to realize there aren't many teams who want to pay the kind of salary Frank is receiving."

Robinson came to the Angels in a seven-player deal with the crosstown Los Angeles Dodgers before the 1973 season. He hit .266 with 30 home runs and 97 RBI's as the Angels' designated hitter last year. His hitting fell off this season, and he frequently received mixed receptions from crowds at Anaheim Stadium.

Robinson, who began his career with the Cincinnati Reds in 1956 when he was named the National League's Rookie of the Year, won the N. L. MVP award with the Reds in 1961, when he hit .323 with 37 home runs and 124 RBIs.

Ellis' hand fractured

PHILADELPHIA [UPI] — A line drive off the bat of Willie Montanez put a dent in the Pittsburgh Pirates' pennant hopes.

The Philadelphia Phillies' first baseman hit a stinging shot back through the box in the sixth inning of the Phils' 8-5 victory Wednesday night that broke a metacarpal bone in the right hand of Dock Ellis, the Pirates' hottest pitcher.

A Pirates' spokesman said Ellis, who is 12-9 and had won nine of his last 10 statts while compiling a 1.89 earned run average over that stretch, would be out of action at least through the end of the regular season.

The righthander remained in Methodist Hospital Thursday to have a cast placed on the hand and was expected to return to Pittsburgh by the weekend.

"Ellis will be out a minimum of three weeks," the spokesman said after x-rays were taken. "It's possible he could be back in time for the World Series."

Villanova first UM test

By STEVE DECOSTA

The Minutemen begin a brand new season tomorrow afternoon in Villanova, Pennsylvania. In a 1:30 kickoff, UMass faces the Wildcats of Villanova (WMUA, 91.1 FM) and a brand new series of football challenges.

First and foremost in the minds of UMass fans is the return of the beanpot, symbolic of Yankee Conference supremacy, to the halls of Boyden after a one year absence.

Another primary goal of coach Dick MacPherson and his charges is the re-establishment of a running game, something that was so sorely lacking last season.

MacPherson is also faced with the restructuring of his defensive backfield, an area that looked secure for a long time to come only two years ago.

There are also some personal challenges to be faced. Fred Kelliher, starting at quarterback, must show he can run the team from the outset, instead of as a last minute magician.

Gary Mika will be making the switch from tight end to wide receiver, where his speed and hands should be able to do the team more good.

Walt Parker will be back at the tight end spot, after missing all of last season with a broken leg.

And perhaps the biggest challenge of all will be faced by Dave Croasdale, a freshman from Phil-lips Academy, who will be starting as a defensive back.

It was less than a year ago that MacPherson said he was against using freshman on the varsity, but how quickly the situation has changed. There will be several frosh making the trip, but Croasdale is the one who will be thrust immediately into the pressure cooker. starting in what is perhaps the Minutemen's most vulnerable area.

"The defense should be strong enough up front to take some of the pressure off the backs," insists MacPherson. He's counting on players like co-captains Ed McAleney and Dennis Kiernan and returning vets Tom Bradshaw and Paul St. Onge rescued from obscurity in the offensive backfield, to hurry the passer, and make the going easier for the inexperienced secondary.

Another problem spot for the Minutemen could be the offensive line, but MacPherson does not seem concerned. "The offensive linemen that started against Villanova last year are still on the squad," the coach argued, "but none of them are starting this year. That means we have made some improvements."

A strong and steady line would make it much easier to establish a running attack, an important facet of the game that was all but lacking from the Minuteman itinerary last season. Two new sophomore running backs, Rich Jessamy, who saw limited action last season, and Keith Lang, up from last year's freshman squad, could also provide the necessary punch.

Jessamy and Lang have been impressive enough in preseason drills to relegate holdovers like Jerry Mondalto and Jim Torrance to reserve roles.

The prolific passing combination of Peil Pennington and Tim Berra has moved on and replacements need be found. Kelliher will get the first shot at the ballhandling job and if he can maneuver the team as he did in several impressive relief roles last fall the quarterback question will be solved. Kelliher only completed 20 passes last year, but seven of his tosses resulted in touchdowns, including several gamewinners.

If Kelliher cannot handle the job, Mark Tripucka will step into the breach. Tripucka also has experience as Pennington's back-up, that coming two years ago. He sat out all of last season with a knee injury.

The receiving corps should be bolstered by the return of Parker, who will provide more beef on the line as well as a pair of sure hands. Mika and Lee Harriman will man the outside spots, backed by Mark Finnerty.

A newcomer, John Romboli, also a running back, will handle the punting, and Greg Sprout, up from last year's frosh, and Croasdale will split the place-kicking chores.

If the Wildcats have a distinct advantage over the Minutemen it will be that they already have game experience under their belts. Villanova lost its opener to Richmond Saturday, 14-13, on a touchdown with only 20 seconds to play.

But Villanova is far from the same team that came to Alumni Stadium last season (a game, by the way, won by the Minutemen 21-20 with some last-minute heroics.) For starters, the Wildcats have a new coach, Jim Weaver, a former assistant of Joe Paterno at Penn State.

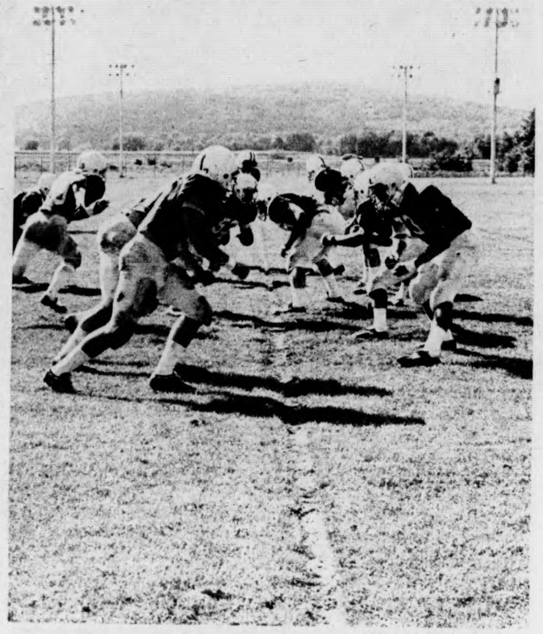
Weaver has instituted a new running attack, the veer option. "We're relying on the running game more than Villanova has in the past," Weaver said in a telephone interview. But the Wildcats have not forgotten how to throw the ball. In fact, sophomore qua4terback Brian Sikorski put the ball in the air 35 times against Richmond.

But the fact that Sikorski only completed 15 of his tosses and had two others intercepted made Villanova fans mourn the loss of last year's leader Bill Hatty. Hatty left school last winter for personal reasons after he had gained status as the nation's fifth best collegiate passer. "Hatty should be back next year," said Weaver, but that won't help the Wildcats tomorrow.

The Wildcats do have one viable All-East candidate in defensive tackle John Zimba. The 6'4, 250 pound Zimba is the kind of guy offensives would rather not have in their way.

Even though Villanova does have the advantage of previous game experience, MacPherson sees the situation as advantagous to the Minutemen as well. "It gave us a chance to see them under a new coach, a new system," Mac said.

It will be a team filled with question marks that takes the field at 1:30 tomorrow. But when the game is finally over maybe we'll be able to tell if the Minutemen are on the right track.



The work which began last spring will begin to pay off tomorrow as the Minutemen begin their season against the Wildcats of Villanova.

Sox end loss skein, defeat Indians 3-2

CLEVELAND [UPI] — Dick McAuliffe doubled home the first run and hit a sacrifice fly to score Carl Yastrzemski with the winning run in the eighth inning Thursday night when the Boston Red Sox snapped a three-game losing streak with a 3-2 victory over the Cleveland Indians.

Bill Lee, who has given up only eight earned runs in his last 46 2-3 innings, went all the way for Boston in picking up his 16th victory against 12 losses. The lefthander struck out one, walked one and allowed 10 hits.

Yastrzemski led off the eighth with a double down the rightfield line and took third on Deron Johnson's sacrifice. Bernie Carbo and Rico Petrocelli walked to fill the bases and Tom Buskey took over for starter Jim Perry. McAuliffe hit a 1-0 pitch to left field scoring Yastrzemski to give the Red Sox their fifth victory in their last 19 games.

After spotting the Indians a 1-0 lead in the first on John Ellis' run-scoring single, the Red Sox bounced back with two runs in the fifth. Petrocelli singled and scored on McAuliffe's double. McAuliffe took third on Rick Burleson's sacrifice and scored as Tommy Harper lined a single to left.

Charlie Spikes smacked his 21st homer of the season over the rightfield fence for the final Cleveland run in the sixth.

Yanks blank Orioles

BALTIMORE [UPI] — Graig Nettles, Chris Chambliss and Lou Piniella drove in the runs Thursday night when the New York Yankees stopped the Baltimore Orioles, 3-0, behind the combined four-hitter of Mike Wallace and Dick Tidrow.

The Yankees chased starter Jim Palmer with a three-run eighth, aided by a throwing error from newest Oriole Bob Oliver, the first baseman purchased from the California Angels.

Roy White led off the Yankee eighth with a single and, with one out, Bobby Murcer chopped a bouncer that Oliver knocked down and flipped to Palmer, who was unable to handle the throw, allowing white to dash to third.

Nettles singled to right field scoring white and chasing murcer to third base. Chambliss singled to center to score Murcer and Piniella doubled down the right field line for the final run.

Wallace, 6-0, lasted 7 2-3 innings in his first American League start. Tidrow got him out of hot water by retiring Tommy Davis with two orioles aboard and two out in the eighth.

Lindsey calls for 'public confession'

Jim Lindsey, president of the Graduate Senate, Friday called for an investigation into possible abuses of Affirmative Action policies in regard to the controversial hiring of Dr. Gideon Ariel to the Physical Education's Department of Exercise Science.

In doing so Lindsey joined SGA President Rick Savini, who made such a call Thursday.

"This is a time for public confession," Lindsey said. "This whole affair is bad for UMass. I think the Administration was very lax. This whole mess could have and should have been handled internally a long time ago. The responsibility rests ultimately with (Chancellor) Bromery."

Lindsey felt one of the major factors which resulted in this is that UMass does not have a consistent Affirmative Action hiring policy, which causes a great deal of confusion and uncertainty.

"I would like to see this situation cleared up," he said, "so that similar incidents will not take place in the future. Nobody gains anything and the University stands to lose a great deal in grants and so forth, which are directly tied to Affirmative Action policies."

"I really don't think this situation is going to snowball into anything bigger," Lindsey concluded. "I think it will gradually disappear from the public eye and that it will be up to the courts and the Administration to handle it from there."

Lovejoy trial begins

By DAVE GREENSLIT
Staff Reporter

GREENFIELD — Samuel H. Lovejoy, 28, of Montague, begins his long awaited trial tomorrow in Franklin County Superior Court.

He is charged with willful and malicious destruction of personal property in the Feb. 22 toppling of Northeast Utilities' meteorological tower at the company's proposed $1.5 billion nuclear power plant site on the Montague Plains.

Northeast Utilities built the tower to comply with an Atomic Energy Commission regulation that requires power companies to test weather conditions for one year at prospective nuclear power plant sites.

At 2:50 a.m. that February morning the instruments on the tower stopped recording data. Within hours, Lovejoy, an Amherst College graduate who had been living on a farm in Montague for the past five years, turned himself in to the police and accepted full responsibility for downing the 500-foot structure.

He said his toppling the tower was an act of civil disobedience, stemming from the certainty that the meteorological tower was symbolic of what was soon to follow - a nuclear power plant.

"There was no other way of stopping the thing," Lovejoy said later to the Collegian. "The folks (anti-nuclear sympathizers) needed energy," he added.

In a four page statement released at the time of his arrest, he outlined what he saw to be the dangers of nuclear power. He said the presence of a nuclear power plant in Montague would mean "biological finality" for Montague and the surrounding area.

Lovejoy has planned to use his Sept. 17 trial for a political forum on the dangers of nuclear power ever since the incident occurred. He plans to have sympathetic nuclear experts from around the country testify in his defense. Several legal sources, however, have said that malicious destruction of personal property is a cut and dry charge, and that political arguments concerning nuclear power will not be allowed.

Rulings on several of Lovejoy's pre-trial motions seem to bear this out. Requests for subpoenas to Northeast Utilities and the state attorney general for information on the dangers of nuclear power were denied in preliminary hearings last week by Superior Court Justice Kent Smith.

Lovejoy later said these rulings would not limit the scope of his trial. The denials eliminate only the most far reaching aspects of his case, he emphasized, areas he had hoped to get into but had not counted on.

"The case is still wide open," he added.

The whole case could hinge on the word "malice" used in the offense charged. It's the state's burden to prove malice on Lovejoy's part, and it's here that Lovejoy says the scope of the trial broadens. "Here we enter a giant grey area of legal interpretation," he said.

To establish that his act was not malicious, he plans to show the "inevitable" danger posed by nuclear power plants. Thus, in light of such danger, he says his act was beneficial to the populace.

Lovejoy told the court again last Friday that he has no intention of being represented by a lawyer during the trial. When questioned why, he said that he disapproved of how most lawyers planned to handle the case. He added that he might, however, have a Boston attorney, Harvey Silverglate, cross-examine him when he takes the stand in his own defense.

In a move obviously intended to protect Lovejoy's rights, Judge Smith said he would imterrupt the trial for as much as an hour at any time should Lovejoy feel he needs to consult with an attorney. Smith then reminded Lovejoy that once the trial begins he (Lovejoy) must continue to defend himself.

Jerry Lazar, newly elected Collegian Editor-in-chief.

The Collegian staff last week elected Jerry Lazar, a senior majoring in Journalistic Studies-English, to serve as Editor-in-Chief effective today.

Lazar, a former Collegian Executive Editor and columnist, replaces Karen Lynch, who withdrew from the University for personal reasons.

Increased staff communication, improved production capabilities, and increased Third World and minority participation were among the objectives Lazar cited at a staff election Thursday night.

Lazar will serve until regular Collegian editorial board elections in December.

Power out on campus

A large portion of UMass experienced a 50-minute electric power failure just minutes before noon Friday.

According to George Norton, Director of the Physical Plant, power from feeders to the west side of the campus was cut off for approximately 50 minutes. Norton blamed the power failure on Western Mass. Electric Podick substation in N. Amherst. (Officials from Western Mass. Electric could not be reached for comment on Friday.)

The Bulk of the campus did have power, though, according to Norton. He said the library, campus center, infirmary, the graduate research towers, and most dormitories received power during the black-out.

The only major incident caused by the power failure was a collection of steam in Whitmore Administration Building. Norton said a disruption of ventilation caused the building to fill up with steam.

Rowdy Hatch crowd greets Edwards

By MARLA RICHMOND
Below the Salt Staff

Thursday night 2500 people waited in line for up to thee hours to hear Jonathan Edwards and Rush in the first of the Hatch Celebrity Series Concerts. According to Carl Clay, Auxiliary Services Manager, this was the largest crowd ever to attend a Hatch concert.

The doors were opened for the 9:00 concert at 8:45, due to late set up. A double rarity was experienced when the crowd got in: the concert started at exactly 9:00 and a name performer bothered to show.

Rush had a difficult job that they carried off well: they had to play for 2500 angry people who were tired of standing in line and anxious to see Jonathan Edwards. The masses finally calmed down for their third song and the set went well.

Jonathan Edwards stroke on the stage at 10:00 amid a good deal of welcome noise. He opened with "You Are My Sunshine" leading into his AM hit, "Sunshine". The crowd went wild over a belated line, "Nixon's got cards he ain't showin' ".

After a few sing-along standards from his older albums, he introduced Lynnie, "my lady". Togeoher they sang a set from his and their forthcoming albums (his to be released next month, theirs to be recorded next week). I heard a lot of disapproval of Lynnie's singing lead in many of the duets, but then a lot of people would complain that Steve Stills and Neil Young appeared at a Crosby/Nash concert.

Lynnie has a very pleasing alto voice that lends itself well to the Country/Western songs they were doing. Most notable was a song from his new album called Nova Scotia. Lynnie sang lead in this song of that mythical home in the country (remember "Mud Slide Slim", "Home in the Heart of the Country" etc.?). They closed with "Shanty", "a song near and dear to our kitchen table."

While Rush played their second set, I found Jon, Lynnie and friends feasting on beer, fresh fruit and hash. It somehow reminded me of some Roman feast. Jon said that he really liked Amherst and vicinity and enjoys playing UMass. "Tonight is a really good audience, but they get too noisy during some of the quiet numbers." It was their first concert in quite a while and Jon was uncomfortable singing by himself, "Playing a concert is a lot different from milking a cow."

Jon went over to talk to some friends and Lynnie told me about their cow and chickens. Life in Nova Scotia suits them well.

"If there's anything that you write, make it 'Get out of line and shine'. That's our philosophy. Dig yourself!"

Back at the concert, the second set followed the format of the first. Jon opened alone with "Athens County" (the crowd loved the harmonica). "Sometimes", "Honky Tonk Stardust Cowboy", more C/W with Lynnie. "Lucky Day", the title cut from his new album is another I-dig-the-country song. For an encore they did "Sunshine" and "Freedom". Jon prefaced "Freedom" with a philosophical statement about living life and not working for the man. All of the middle class college kids cheered this and wished that we could grow up to be singing stars who didn't have to take spit jobs for the summer.

People left feeling good and that's what a concert is all about.

Ken Mosakowski (l) talking to a voter: a losing cause.

Mosakowski: press at fault for loss

By DENNY MATTEAU
Staff Reporter

"I was accused of running a "nothing" campaign, but the press was incompetent. Most of the papers in the Valley do not cover politics in a way for the voters to make an informed choice."

This statment was made by Ken Mosakowski in a Collegian interview in the Hatch. Mosakowski just lost the September 10th Democratic First Congressional District primary election to Thomas R. Manning of Pittsfield, Mass. Manning will now go on to face Republican incumbent Silvio O. Conte, also of Pittsfield. Manning will have Mosakowski's backing as a Democrat against Conte

In a retrospective look at his campaign, Mosakowski said that he feels the major factor in his loss was the failure of the press to cover the entire primary election, thus aggravating a natural disadvantage he faced as a newcomer to the political scene. "The media does help shape public opinion", he said,"and the political chicanery in Washington is obvious to everyone, but the efforts of the people trying to change that aren't, because the people trying to change it don't have money, and thus depend on a free press."

I've seen so little about my opponents it's ridiculous", Mosakowski said, indicating that he does not feel the press, meaning all the papers and Radio Stations in the Valley "with the exception of one good interview in the Holyoke Transcript," covered any of the candidates well. In fact, the Collegian ran an article on the gubernatorial primary race in its primary day issue, but not a word on the First Congressional District race.

Mosakowski's face is a familiar one to users of the UMass library, for he often does duty there as a book security guard. His voice is familiar to WMUA's audience, for he has been hosting Focus, a public issues discussion program, for several years.

His stands on the issues: The Economy: "More public service jobs should be made available to the welfare recipients because it's the government's duty to stimulate the economy. There should be selective price controls on essential commodities, and I support a national health insurance bill of the Kennedy-Griffiths type. That was defeated and the Kennedy-Mills compromise is useless. It would make you pay the first $150, so the poor still pay."

Minority peoples: "I feel its a good idea," he said," to actively recruit people for government appointments who otherwise aren't represented. Conte voted against funding for that kind of program, and he also voted against bilingual education which I would have supported."

Gil Scott-Herron concert puts "energy in the aisles"

By DAVID MILLER
Below The Salt Staff

Gil Scott — Heron and Midnight
Bowker Auditorium
September 13, 1974

This concert really should have been held in the Ballroom, 'cause it's hard to stand up and cheer and dance when you're hemmed in by rows of seats, and that's what Gil Scott-Heron and his band, Midnight, had us doing by the end of his concert Friday night. The evening's magnificent finish is all the more remarkable when compared to its very slow beginning.

Although the concert was to begin at 8:00, the huge crowd which jammed the Bowker lobby was not let in until several minutes past then. Following this was a delay of about 30 min., while the band completed setting and warming up. When the music finally did get underway, the band was plagued by inadequate sound (attributed to a volume control burnout) which particularly affected Scott-Heron and his fellow vocalist.

Eventually, however, all problems were solved and the group moved ahead into another two hours of words and music. The audience members, with a couple of exceptions, remained patient during the delay; in any case, Scott-Heron's relief at having the tech taken care of was considerable and noticeable — he broke out into broad smiles for the first time that evening.

Photograph by Howell

Midnight is a fine band, capable of communicating much through their music — joy, love, power, freedom — and the audience understood. Their music was supplemented by audience flashbulbs and percussion, which included at least two police whistles. Among the songs performed by Scott-Heron and the band were "Red, Green and Black", "Must Be Something We Can Do", "Offering" and "Ain't No Such Thing As A Superman". "Western Sunrise", inspired by a line from the Koran, featured a lighter-than-air sax solo over a percussion carpet: "Peace Be With You", included some especially lovely keyboard work and vocal-sax unisons; and "Gorilla" (one of the most striking compositions) gave Scott-Heron a turn at the keyboard, accompanying a flute duet.

Throughout, the audience was more than sympathetic; but what really got the audience up was the closing song, "Bottle". Bowker Auditorium rarely sees that kind of energy in its aisles.

Gil Scott-Heron and Midnight ("the first minute of a new day") came to UMass in the middle of an electrical storm and showed us the meaning of "Free Will is Free Mind is Free Spirit is Free You-Me-Us". They can come back anytime.

Human Rights a big concern at Population Conference

By DUANE DALE
Special Correspondent

UMass Doctoral Student Duane Dale Attended the World Population Conference in Bucharest this summer and filed this report on Human Rights. This is the sixth in a nine-part series.

Before the final gavel sounded on August 30, the representations of 135 countries gathered in Bucharest to resolve a basic dilemma for human rights. The delegates committed, for the most part, to preserving each couple's right to determine the number and spacing of children. At the same time, none would want to deny a child the right to the essentials of life--food, water, shelter, health care, education, a decent job.

Yet couples may want more children than the world can support. There is only so much farm land in the world. The best is already under cultivation; urban growth devours more each year. Without expensive desalting, even water is limited; the U.S. is overtaxing its supply in some regions already. In a crowded world, a new sense of responsibility must accompany the freedom to plan families.

The problem is not only one of numbers. The world can support more people at a minimal subsistence level than at the U.S. standard of living. Resources are limited: the fish which Americans buy as canned pet food is not available to protein-starved people in Latin America, where the fish were caught. The fuel which powers American recreational vehicles is not available for basic transportation in West Africa.

The world's population today is 3.7 billion. At the present rate, it will double every 35 years. We have a small and crowded world today; every country's population and development program should take this into account. The United States can begin with a national policy aimed at population stabilization.

The Declaration of Independence begins with a statement of rights: life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness. The desire to extend these rights to all the world is not just idealistic; it may be essential to the survival of our little planet.

Yet the American Dream-in the material sense-may turn out not to be accessible to all. We may come to ask ourselves whether there is more value in assuring the survival of other people than in the next increase in our own standard of living.

Tomorrow — U.S. Population Policy

Passing around the knowledge

"People are our resource", says Cynthia Parent, co-coordinator of the Franklin-Hampshire Learning Exchange.

The exchange, expanded this year to include Hampshire County, is operating out of the Amherst Community Resource Center at Jones Library on Amity Street. It was started with the idea that people can learn a lot from each other.

You can register with them by filling out a card stating the things you would most like to learn and what you would enjoy teaching someone else. Interests can range from auto repair to Zen and anything in between. The exchange then matches you with a person who has similar interests.

Mark Schern, also a co-coordinator, suggested the exchange can be particularly useful for college students to supplement their reading for a course or a paper with a resource person.

Forms can be obtained at the main desk of the University Library. The registration fee is $1.00.

Volunteers are also needed to help run the exchange.

Skills center helps pressured students cope

Five students out of every ten coming to the University of Massachusetts will probably have to limp and stagger under the cultural and educational standards imposed upon them by the academic system. Perhaps four out of those five might stand a severe risk of succumbing to that weight, either by failing degrees, by dropping out or at the very least emerging from their university experiences with frustration and disappointment as the major byproducts of their academic qualifications.

Less than one percent so far have had the initiative and stamina to seek for help. The majority of those who need it are either unaware of that need, unware of its cause, or unaware that there exists a relief from that need. And the help so urgently required and increasingly needed takes the form of skills in communication which for one reason or another have not been accessible to the student before reaching university level.

These are the skills now being taught at the Communication Skills Center situated in Goodell 609. Communication skills, as the name implies, are a series of academic techniques which, though taken for granted, are vital to university survival, and which regardless of intelligence, are not the property of all alike. These skills include listening and reading, notetaking, paper and dissertation writing, spelling, logic, and a host of allied accomplishments which, because they are directly related to a particular cultural and educational formula, often present crushing problems of method and content to those whose educational and socio-cultural backgrounds are different from the unrepresentational norm.

The Communication Skills Center was established in the fall of 1973 in response to these individual needs, and during the past year has been perfecting its methods, clarifying its objectives and widening the scope of its appeal. The growing number of students who have been made aware of its existence and made use of its services has substantially aided its firm establishment in the Rhetoric Program.

There is ample opportunity in the Center to determine the vague, half-sensed needs which a student might bring with him, through the broad range and applicability of diagnostic tests which are available through research. By adapting its methods to suit the individual needs and serve the specific problems of students who come to it with skill deficiencies, the CSC offers a supplementary program to the regular courses being taught at the University.

Now in the fall semester of 1974 the Center is publicly ready to open its doors to those students who have not yet heard of its existance, who are finding difficulty in writing their term papers, in finding their way about the Library, in absorbing meaningfully the substance of lectures, video-tapes, and text-books. These are the forgotten and often ignored skills so essential to academic survival which are offered through the CSC as a University service.

A number of accredited mini-courses are available at the CSC and students are free to arrange, in consultation with the Center staff, mini-courses directed towards their specific needs. They are free also to take courses and receive individualized help for no credit, but in either case the CSC procedure states that a contract is necessarv.

This contract sets goals and establishes objectives, defines the term of study and imposes a time limit on both the staff and the student. Consequently when the student leaves the CSC he takes with him a valid statement which certifies his achievements in specific skill areas and which will stand him in good stead for the rest of his University career.

Both the students and the staff at the Center come from an impressively diverse background, both educationally and departmentally, as well as culturally and linguistically. In fact the Center is one of the few truly integrated examples of diversity on the campus.

The Director of the Center, Professor Deshields, has established a tacit philosophy around which much of the work of both staff and students revolves, regardless of departmental and cultural distinctions. This is simply, that by maximizing the potential of everyone at the Center and emphasizing the unique capacities of each individual within it, a high quality of achievement and a broad scope of service will be reached than would have been possible through the efforts or knowledge of a single individual, whether staff or student.

It is through this diversity and adaptability that the Communication Skills Center seeks to reach and serve the students at UMass who so urgently need the survival skills necessary for university life.

Hostages number 11, not 9

France demands guerillas release hostages

THE HAGUE, Holland [UPI] - France demanded yesterday that Holland force three pep-pill munching guerrillas to give up the French ambassador along with 10 other hostages before it lets the terrorists go.

The 11 hostages have been held for two days at the French embassy, which is officially French territory.

France said the guerrillas must give up all their hostages and weapons before leaving the embassy. Dutch government sources said. The Dutch agreed the weapons must be surrendered but had suggested the guerrillas keep the French ambassador until they arrive at their destination, the sources said.

Though a jet with a volunteer crew was standing by, the guerriallas had yet to specify where they wanted to go.

Police said the Japanese kept awake with their own supply of pep pills.

"One person who knows has told us they are munching the pills like candy," a policeman said.

Sunday crowds gathered outside the police cordon around the embassy. Relatives fo the hostages wept openly but ducked news photographers' cameras.

Dutch officials told newsmen the guerrillas were in fact holding 11 hostages, and not 9 as previously announced.

"We know with certainty there are 11 hostages," a government spokesman said. "And we know with equal certainty they are in good health." The 11 hostages included French Ambassador Jacques Senard, 54.

In Tokyo, a Japanese Foreign Ministry spokesman said Dutch and French authorities had turned down a million dollar ransom demand made by the guerrillas during the night.

The French government had bowed to their demands for release of a comrade from a Paris prison. The Dutch government had provided a jet liner and volunteer crew to fly them to freedom, but the gunmen apparently balked at a demand that they throw down their weapons and name their destination before takeoff.

About 200 troops of a Dutch anti-terrorist commando force and police sharpshooters ringed the modern concrete and glass embassy building where the three guerrillas seized their hostages Friday afternoon.

In compliance with the initial demand of the terrorists. French police removed Yutaka Furuya, 25, a terrorist suspect arrested two months ago, rom Sante prison in Paris on Friday and flew him to Holland. But the French refused to turn Furuya over to the terrorists until negotiations were completed.

Nixon continues depressed; still refuses hospitalization

SAN CLEMENTE, Calif. [UPI] — Former President Richard Nixon, reported to be fighting illness and depression, remained isolated in his oceanside villa yesterday after refusing to be hospitalized.

There was no word from his home here but Dr. Walter Tkach said in Washington, D.C., Saturday after returning from a visit to the Nixon home that the former president was suffering from a serious phlebitis condition in his left leg.

Nixon reportedly told him he would not go to the hospital because, "I'll never come out alive."

Tkach was Nixon's personal physician during his years in the White House.

Tkach said Nixon's general condition had worsened despite his pardon from President Ford and described him as a "ravaged man who has lost the will to fight."

Nixon's left leg was described by Tkach and Dr. John Lundgren, a Long Beach physician, as severly swollen and painful as a result of a second blood clot. Tkach said, however, the former president was in good mental condition and had been working in his office.

Nixon continued to receive medication at his home and was to be given weekly medical examinations by Lundgren.

Tkach did not say what type of medication was to be prescribed, but noted it would not be an anticoagulant which is used to thin the blood.

Area hospitals confirmed yesterday no special arrangements had been made to accommodate the former president.

Among the hospitals checked were the Scripts Memorial Hospital in San Diego and the Camp Pendleton Marine Base Hospital in nearby San Clemente.

One killed in Paris as drugstore bombed

PARIS [UPI] — A well-dressed man about 30 years old hurled a package of explosives yesterday into a crowded drugstore in the bustling Left Bank Latin quarter, police said.

French radio said one person was killed and at least 27 wounded.

The bomb-thrower escaped into Sunday crowds thronging the Boulevard St. Germain.

The drugstore is owned by a French Jew. The attack occurred six weeks after bombs exploded at the offices of newspapers which have criticized Arabs and outside a building where Jewish workers collected funds for Israel.

The Publicis drugstore is combined with a cinema. It stands on the Boulevard St. Germain next to the Brasserie Lipp, traditional meeting place for French and foreign politicians and writers, and across the street from Deux Magots cafe, a favorite stop for tourists.

"It was horrible," said Diane de Beauvau, 19, who was in the drugstore buying a toy dog. "I remember a man, he was totally smashed by the bomb. If he was not dead then, he mustbe by now."

The injured included a small boy.

Mideast arms race increases

Israelis bomb southern Lebanon

Compiled From Wires

Israeli warplanes fire-bombed and strafed Arab terrorist targets in southern Lebanon twice yesterday, and the Beirut command said they killed the mayor of one town and wounded two other civilians.

The Tel Aviv command gave no casualty figures, or a specific reason for the attacks, but said each of the raids lasted 10 minutes and all planes returned safely.

The raids, conducted about five hours apart, came amid reports that both the Israelis and the Arabs were engaged in major arms deals to replace weapons lost in last October's Yom Kippur war.

A Beirut newspaper reported that Saudi Arabia is using its hoard of oil dollars to buy $700 million worth of weapons for Egypt.

London's Sunday Telegraph said Britain has concluded a secret deal to sell about 400 Centurion heavy tanks to Israel.

The raids were the first such assaults in five weeks, and came as Israel prepared to celebrate the Jewish new year, or Rosh Hashanah, which starts at sundown today.

Israel in the past has warned it would take whatever steps are necessary to maintain its security.

The first raid, involving at least 10 Phantom jet fighters, was at 3:35 p.m., and the second came at 8:15 p.m., just as villagers were about to leave their air raid trenches, witnesses said.

Lebanese officials said the jets hit six villages, and that Mayor Fuad Abu Saleh of Hasbaya, was killed. Two other civilians were wounded, several houses were destroyed and several farms were set afire, they added.

The villages are about 80 miles south of Beirut and six miles east of the Israeli border. They fall within the area of Arkoub, known as Fatahland because so many guerrillas of Al Fatah, the strongest Palestinian organization, live there.

The last Israeli air raid against Arab terrorist concentrations was Aug. 7 when planes also blasted targets in southern Lebanon.

In another development Israeli Premier Yitzhak Rabin returned to Tel Aviv from six days of talks in Washington, expressing satisfaction with the "practical conclusions" reached with the United States for the strengthening of Israel's armed forces.

Rabin told newsmen that in his discussions with President Ford and other U.S. officials he had achieved satisfactory results for "the immediate and long range strengthening of Israel."

Hijacked Viet plane crashes, killing 71

PHAN RANG, South Vietnam [AP] — A hijacker set off two hand grenades aboard an Air Vietnam jetliner yesterday, sending it crashing to the ground in flames and killing all 71 persons aboard, officials said.

They said the pilot refused the kidnaper's demand to fly to North Vietnam.

Officials said it was the first hijack incident in aviation history to result in massive deaths.

On Feb. 20, a young man set off grenades inside an Air Vietnam plane killing three passengers after the crew tricked him and landed at Hue instead of flying to Hanoi.

The search for bodies from the latest explosion continued last night under floodlights at the crash site, next to a minefield.

Rescue workers had recovered the remains of 57 passengers and seven crewmen.

The flight's manifest included the man identified as the hijacker, Le Duc Tan, who boarded at Da Nang; 58 Vietnamese passengers and eight Vietnamese crewmen; two South Koreans, a Filipino and a Frenchman.

Little was known about the hijacker, who, according to one report, wore a South Vietnamese paratroopers uniform.

A government official said Tan set off two grenades when the pilot of the Boeing 727 refused to obey his order to fly to Hanoi.

France blasts No. 8

CANBERRA, Australia [UPI] - France yesterday exploded its eighth nuclear device in three months of atmospheric tests in the South Pacific, the Australian and New Zealand governments reported.

Australia labeled the blast at the French test site at Mururoa Atoll, 720 miles southeast of Tahiti, as "in direct conflict with world opinion and in breach of international law."

Sen. Don Willesee, the Australian foreign affairs minister, said his government will lodge a diplomatic protest expressing "strong concern" at the test, the 43rd France has carried out in the Pacific over strenuous objection of nations rimming the Pacific in recent years.

France, in keeping with past policy, would not confirm or deny the latest test in the series that began June 17.

Selassie to live

ADDIS ABABA [UPI] - Ethiopia's military government yesterday turned down demands for the court martial and excution of ousted Emperor Haile Selassie as premature and against the nation's interests.

A junta spokesman urged the public to look upon the 82-year old monarch as part of Ethiopia's dead past.

"It is not in Ethiopian tradition to beat a dead horse," he said.

An underground Communist student group continued efforts to organize a street demonstration today to press the army to hand power over to a provisional civilian government.

Diplomats said this protest could mark the first crack in the solid support enjoyed by the estimated 80 men on the ruling armed forces committee since Selassie's removal.

Diplomats said the junta is intensively discussing what form the government should take.

Guns given to Vesco

WASHINGTON [UPI] - Sen. Henry M. Jackson, D-Wash., said yesterday Senate investigators believe sophisticated automatic weapons have been smuggled to Robert Vesco, the fugitive financier now living in Costa Rica, by Vesco associates based in Los Angeles.

Jackson said the Senate permanent subcommittee on investigations will examine the evidence tomorrow.

Jackson said law enforcement authorities tracked down an airplane believe used to transport the weapons, but gave no indication of the purpose of the gun smuggling.

Boston Blacks advised not to keep children home

BOSTON [UPI] – The head of the Boston branch of the NAACP, reversing a previous position yesterday urged black parents to send their children to school in racially-tense South Boston.

Thomas I. Atkins, at a new conference, said he now is more confident police can protect black children being bused into South Boston when classes resume today.

At least 23 persons were arrested in a series of incidents last week, most of them near the South Boston High School, when whites stoned buses carrying black pupils. Several black youngsters, a policeman and a bus monitor received minor injuries.

A number of other incidents of whites stoning busloads of blacks were reported in other parts of the city and one incident of blacks throwing rocks at a bus carrying whites also was reported.

City officials met during the weekend to map a strategy to safeguard students riding buses. Mayor Kevin H. White and Police Commissioner Robert diGrazia announced that large numbers of policemen will be assigned to South Boston for as long as needed to keep order.

Atkins, who last Thursday urged black parents not to send their children in South Boston, said yesterday "On the basis of statements which have been recently made by police and city officials, and on the basis of what now appears to be planning more adequate to the task of enforcing the court-ordered desegregation, I am now calling upon parents in all parts of the city, black and white, to send their children to school on Monday morning."

"This includes the parents who have been boycotting the schools, since it must now be apparent that many of the youngsters who were not in school were around the schools and might have been involved in the acts of violence which were committed," he added.

Vermont Bar Association urges legalized sale of marijuana

BRETTON WOODS, N.H. (AP) - The Vermont Bar Association has recommended changing state law to allow marijuana to be sold legally at state liquor stores to persons aged 18 and older.

The resolution on legalized sale of marijuana was one of four marijuana-related resolutions recommended to the full convention by the association's Junior Section. Two of the resolutions were accepted.

John Downs, president of the association, said the other measure called for the Vermont Department of Liquor Control to supervise the distribution of marijuana through state liquor stores.

The association also suggested that the sale of marijuana be subject to regulations regarding purity, potency and price, Downs said.

Downs said he thought the resolution endorsing the legalized sale of marijuana was a more sweeping action than many of the delegates were prepared to take. But he said the lawyers appeared convinced that legalizing possession of marijuana, while making it impossible to buy it legally "certainly poses problems all of it's own."

The convention rejected a resolution from the Junior Section, made up of young lawyers, that law enforcement officials and judges be urged to "adopt an immediate policy of defacto decriminalization of marijuana, including casual, non-profit transfers, and the growth of limited quantities for personal use."

Downs said the majority, in voting against this resolution, took the position that the association should not tell judges they should not enforce the law. He said there was also the feeling there are fewer prosecutions of persons for the casual use of marijuana.

Another defeated resolution had recommended clearing the criminal records of those already convicted.

Judge to resolve issue

Sick juror delays Wounded Knee trial

ST. PAUL, Minn. [UPI] – A decision was expected today on what the illness of a juror will mean in the Wounded Knee trial of American Indain Movement leaders Dennis Banks and Russell Means.

Juror Theresa Cherrier, 53, was hospitalized for apparent high blood pressure Friday, one day after the jury of nine women and three men began diliberations on charges against Banks and Means in the 71-day armed occupation of the South Dakota reservation hamlet of Wounded Knee last year.

U. S. District Court Judge Fred Nichol ordered the other 11 jurors sequestered in a St. Paul hotel for the weekend, pending his decision.

The judge could order a mistrial, order the remaining 11 jurors to proceed with deliberations and return a verdict or, if Mrs. Cherrier is able, have her rejoin the other jurors and proceed with deliberations.

Prosecuting attorney R. D. Hurd said he wants a mistrial declared should Mrs. Cherrier be unable to resume jury duties.

Defense attorney William Kunstler said he preferred that the jury resume deliberations with or without Mrs. Cherrier.

Hurd is apparently not sure he has a conviction at the present time. He said Mrs. Cherrier was believed to be a supporter of the government's position.

Thus far, the eight-month trial has cost an estimated $300,000 to $400,000. Hurd said he believes a new trial in Bismarck, N. D. or Sioux City, Iowa, would result in a conviction.

While the jury remained in isolation, defense attorneys prepared another of their motions to acquit Banks, 41, a Chippewa from Leech Lake, Minn., and Means, 34, an Oglala Sioux from Porcupine, S. D., of five counts apiece stemming from the Wounded Knee occupation.

FINAST BRAND SALE!

Finast Will No Longer Increase Prices of Food Once Placed on Our Shelves:

On Wednesday, July 24, 1974, all Finast Supermarkets began a new pricing policy on Grocery, Meat and Produce items.

1. When Finast is forced to make a price increase, cans and packages already price marked on the shelves will be sold at the old lower price.

When items are restocked on the shelves, the new, higher priced items will be placed behind the lower priced items.

2. Weekly specials or "sale items" are priced lower than regular prices. Any remaining after the sale event, will be repriced upward.

3. As regular prices go down, Finast will immediately reduce the price on shelf stock, and the lower price will always be honored at the register. When a can or a package shows more than one price, the customer pays the lowest price for that can or package.

4. Baby food and items controlled by state laws are exempt from this new policy.

5. Until current stocks are sold there will be some items of our many thousands with more than one price marking on the can or apckage. Please bear with us during this transition.

The question of national defense has always made a heavy burden on the shoulders of the nation's decision makers. With the ever-present affairs of Watergate, amnesty, and foreign situations, how will President Ford stand?

THE QUESTION: What do you think should be done with the money spent on national defense and what do you think Ford will do?

Gary Grover, 19, freshman from South West, hometown, Newton, Mass, Zoology major; I feel that over the past few years, too much has already been spent on "defense". Let's keep the money inside the country to begin with; put more towards poverty and cutting inflation.

June Kenney, 20, junior from South West, hometown, West Roxbury, Mass., arts & science major; I don't know that much about the Pentagon or the national defense or anything like that. But I would like to see more concentration here at home, and not overseas' spending. Sure defense is necessary, but from who? Who are the enemy?

Bill Kusler, 21, senior from Pufton Village, hometown, Fall River, Mass, History major; I can't really judge, right now. Looking back, the national defense has been both advantageous and to our disadvantage. It has prevented and caused a lot of unnecessary conflict. I think that Ford will handle more, "closer to home" issues first.

Susan Fay, 21, junior from Central, hometown, Boston, Mass., CASIAC major: The way things have been going lately, I have no idea what Ford will do. Whatever people think, he does the opposite. I don't want any more money spent on war or defense. Enough is enough.

Anthony Doyle, 18, freshman from Orchard Hill, hometown, Peabody, Mass;,CASIAC major; I'm certainly not for war but a good defense showing seems to be a method of preventing any trouble. Perhaps less money could be spent and more could be done with what we are spending now.

Darlene Romanowski, 23, grad student from Belchertown; I don't think you can go at all on what Ford says he's going to do. He keeps making these outlandish decisions. I can't begin to imagine how he'll mess up the defense budget. I personally prefer a lower expense and more concentration on inflation with the economy as it is now.

Need a Rhetoric?

By PHIL MACKENZIE

After a 35 minute wait in line:

Student: "I'd like to get into Rhetoric 100C."

Rhetoric Official: "I'm sorry, this is the wrong table. The table you want is the next one over. The line for it starts back there."

S: "Oh."

After a 30 minute wait in line:

S: "I'd like to get into Rhetoric 100C."

R: "I'm sorry, you can't do that now. We just got filled up and we have to send these latest adds and drops to the computer and then wait for the revised rosters to get here before we can process you."

S: "Oh. When will the new rosters be in?"

R: "Tomorrow?"

S: "When tomorrow?"

R: "We don't know."

S: "Oh."

The next day at the same table:

S: "I'd like to get into Rhetoric 100C."

R: "I'm sorry but that section is full."

S: "Oh. Well couldn't you just stick my name in on the bottom of that list? No one will notice me. I'm real quiet."

R: "I'm sorry, we can't do that. It's against the rules."

S: "Oh. Well could I get in if I said I was a senior and I won't graduate this year unless I get it."

R: "Gee, I just can't put you in even then. The section is full."

S: "Oh. Could I get in if I went to the professor and he said he wouldn't mind me sitting in on the class."

R: "I'm sorry but the professor are not allowed to sign students into their classes. It's against the rules."

S: "Oh. Could I get in if another student dropped the course?"

R: "Now that way you could get in."

S "Good. Put my name down to fill in for the next student who drops."

R: "I'm sorry but we can't do that. You have to be here first when the student drops. It's first come first serve for any openings."

S: "Oh. Well my time is pretty full. I don't think I'll have time to get down here again after today. Couldn't you put my name on a little slip of paper and sneak me in when the next student drops from that class?"

R: "I'm sorry but I can't. It's against the rules."

S: "Oh. Well can I look at the list of students in that section."

R: "Sure. Here."

S: "Hmmmmm. Well what if one of these students died unexpectedly? If I was the first one to get here then could I get into 100C."

R: "Yes. You most certainly could get in then."

Two hours later Joey Jr. had his rhetoric class.

I've been here 3 hours... Lets all grab books and run!
Aw, the cop would shoot ya
Not if you're in the middle.
Hold a Chem 111 book on either side of your head + you'll be safe
They wouldn't DARE shoot the books!
Forget it, the line's movin'... They put the cash registers on manual.

Letters to the editor

Fonda still faulty

To The Editor:

It seems to me that Kenneth Fonda has missed my entire point. In his last letter he stated that President Ford "is showing mercy to these men [draft evaders] by granting them amnesty at all." I am not concerned with how merciful Ford can be. If he can unconditionally pardon Nixon, but not these draft evaders; then where is the so called justice Fonda is talking about. Is it just to pardon Nixon when he is guilty of a crime far worst than draft evasion; and then put some kind of stipulation on amnesty to the draft evaders? I think not!

Besides this Fonda made the statement that the draft evaders "could have gotten physical deferments or COs if they had really tried." This just proves how stupid he really is. Doesn't he think that many of them tried to obtain these and were refused. Then because they had no other choice they left the country. I am not trying to say that I feel that these men should be granted an unconditional pardon. My point is that if Ford can give Nixon the pardon he has, then it can only be true justice if he does likewise with the draft evaders.

John Fitzgerald

He said it

To the Editor:

Upon hearing the news of President Ford's pardon of Richard Nixon, I'm reminded of what Ford said when asked at his Senate Vice-Presidential confirmation hearing about the possibility of his granting executive clemency to Nixon if he was to be removed from office and Ford ascended to the presidency.

Ford's reply to the Congressional investigators was: "I don't think the public would stand for it".

You said it, Gerry!

Tripoli mistaken on WMUA problems

To the Editor:

WMUA's summer hassles were certainly very complex and I think not a little credit is due Steve Tripoli for attempting to sort out the issues in his article [Doing What's Right - Wrong." Collegian 9-12-74]. I was working on public affairs programming through the summer and heard much from all sides. Here are some observations I'd like to add.

The basic issue that I saw at work was the question of who will be responsible for the functioning/ control of the station? Previously it had been in the hands of various directors of the station who had vote power on the management board. Now all the groups producing programming for the station were asking for vote power, immediate accountability and greatly increased communications between all parties.

The idea was, and everyone agreed, that the station should represent more people by utilizing the broader base, purposely designed to include minorities. The speed of response to change needs became an issue.

Consciousness raising, [that is, in terms of sensitivity to other's needs], particularly when asked for in a bureaucratic institution like WMUA, is new and precedent setting. One group's sensitivity does not necessarily rub off on others, and sometimes one party's feelings toward the need for change outstrips their ability to be patient with the others who are going through the changes.

Of not a little consequence was [what looked from the outside like] a long running feud between Scott, the program director, and Robin of the woman's media project. Because of their conflict and the inability to resolve it within the station, Robin set into motion public complaints - without realizing at that time to what extent the student governing association would involve themselves.

The suspension of the constitution was a surprise to all. It was viewed as a severe encroachment on personal powers by the station managers, and as a means to expedite the changes requested by the minority groups.

From what I saw of the student government's handling of the negotiations concerning the grievances and constitution creation, the work of Martha Creegan is to be highly commended. She was thorough in her research, impartial, mature and level-headed at the many meetings and often highly emotionally charged encounters.

Added to the working out of these issues of station control is the problem of content. WMUA started as a low output 10 watt station. The present 1000 watts throws a signal all over the valley and letters to the station have been received from as far as Albany and Hartford.

Potentially the station can, and sometimes does, commit itself to programming that goes far beyond the realm of local university affairs and good music formal. Shows of major impact and import to the greater surrounding community and experimental programs can be done as there is on hand a wealth of talent and perhaps the best equipped studio in Western Massachusetts.

The extent to which WMUA addresses itself to the greater community needs depends on collective vision.

I have not put this accounting in terms of WMUA on one side and all the other groups [BNS, BMCP, WMP] on the other side - because they all are actually on the same side. Everyone is vitally concerned about bringing the best programming possible to WMUA. And that is an effort that takes considerable cooperation between many people.

The Pardon Man

"Pardon me sir! I didn't see you standing there. Are you alright?"

"Oh! Pardon me. Yes, I'm fine. A little bruise on my noggen, but well, it'll pass. Are you often in the habit of bowling over people on the street. Thats an unpardonable offense, you know, especially if you get caught."

Actually, now that you mention it, I am in the habit of pardoning people that I mow down. In fact I can pardon everybody and everything."

Hows that?"

"My name is Throttlebottom C. Lincoln and I was appointed by the President to hand out pardons. You've heard of the Pancake Man, and the Boss Man and the Boogie Man, I'm the Pardon Man. My function is to walk out there where the people are — speeding down the turnpikes and languishing in the Porno-houses, and pardon every crime, sin, transgression and Bozo No No that I feel merits that action. But you know that not just anything will get pardoned. I must meet the specifications and guidelines that were handed down to me, for a pardon."

"Like what?"

"Well for instance, shoplifting and armed robbery are unpardonable, but cheating on your income tax and embezzlement are. Parking violations and assault with a hot tomale are unpardonable, but fraud and bribery are. Cheating on Welfare and evading the draft are unpardonable but dropping napalm on civilians and lying to a grand jury are. You see how simple it is. One rule of thumb to remember is this: If the collar is white — pardon him, if it is blue — book him. That is of course unless that blue collar belongs to a policeman in which case you slip him a five, and if that doesn't work, you threaten an I.R.S. Tax Audit or you sic Frank Rizzo on him."

It sounds so simple. Tell me though, won't the people mind — you know, at this imbalance in the Scales of Justice?"

"Not at all. First off, what we've done is tampered with the Scales putting a big fat weight on our side, so that no matter what we do, the Scales come out in our favor. There is only one small flaw in the operation. Every time I pardon someone, I hear refrains of the Mickey Mouse Mouseketeers Song in the wind. Gives me the shivers. And second, if someone complains, we just talk about the Red Sox and how they're blowing it this year, and that takes his mind off of this.

"What have you pardoned recently?"

"Oh, I've been kind of busy, especially around this place. Here is a short list of what I've done lately:

—I've pardoned the Library for looking like its waiting for the great Linda Lovelace in the sky, to come.

--I've pardoned Robert "Cub Reporter" Blossom of the Amherst Record for being so stupid.

—I've pardoned Ken Mosakowski for voting for all Democrats, as any good hack might. (Frank Bellotti)

—I've pardoned the New England Patriots for being so impotent.

--I've pardoned the Guru Maharaj Ji for his oral masturbations in front of his adoring multitide, who, of course, lapped it up.

—I've pardoned the Parking Office for giving Chancellor Bromery a space in V-lot, next to the Stadium.

—I've pardoned Amherst Towing for pulling the poor Chancellor's car to the Common Market and selling it as a head of spinach.

—I've pardoned Linda Lovelace for displaying such bad taste — orally.

—I've pardoned Moe Howard for not showing up and his fans for giving up the fight.

—I've pardoned MacDonald's for their grease and the Colonel for his fingers.

—I've pardoned Josherina Toughcookie for hating men, Pope Paul for hating Bill Baird, and SAVE A TREE FOUNDATION for hating Euwell Gibbons.

—I've pardoned Joe College for hanging and dangling and his daily round of rapings, molestings and pillages.

—And I've pardoned you."

"Thank you Mr....uh..."

"Thats Lincoln. I'm a Lincoln, you know...part of the Ford Corporation."

Ragtime Rufus

The only thing I have to be thankful for, thought Rufus, is that I'm not a Russian midget.

Having counted his blessing, Rufus opened his diary to record what he decided would be his last day on earth.

"The only thing I was good for was wormbait," he later explained to a New Hampshire psychiatrist. "I was pushed to the limits of my sanity."

"I've never seen anything like it before," the noted psychiatrist wrote in Psychology Yesterday. "The patient, a UMass student who attempted suicide by programming a computer to erase what he called his 'student identification number' from its memory bank, seemed to be a victim of a phenomenon particularly observed during the closing years of World War II---shell shock."

Three months after the incident, Rufus was back in his dorm room reading that copy of Psychology Yesterday, considerably amused that his previous condition should be worthy of a cover story.

"When asked to identify the cause of his extreme depression," the article continued, "the patient merely pointed out my office window."

Rufus remembered sitting in the Jaffrey office, remembered pointing to a distant blur of red brick which interrupted the lush New Hampshire greenery and blue sky.

"The patient identified the distant object as the 'University Library', an edifice known regionally as the site of King Kong's Last Stand," the psychiatrist had written. "As it turned out, it was not the Library itself, but rather the entire University. which contributed to the patient's malaise. The Library was, shall we say, merely a symbol, an association stimulus."

Rufus remembered he had an 8:00 a.m. class the next morning and tucked the issue of Psychology Yesterday under his bed and turned out the lights. As he drifted to sleep, he thought about the events leading to the article.

He recalled walking up to OSCAR the computer and, with his Fortran 101 handbook as his guide, attempting to erase himself (5129005) from its memory banks, thus ending his career as a UMie. No more hernias from carrying Chem III textbooks, he thought. No more dining commons diarrhea for me.

But he was apprehended on the scene by an ever-vigilant off duty campus cop, who later explained what he was doing there: "Well, uh, lemme see.. Iwuz out ticketin' cars, ya see, an' this kid comes up to me an' sez, "Leave my fuckin' car alone, ya hear? What are ya, nuts?" An' so I came to OSCAR to find the, uh, the kid's answer. OSCAR, man. OSCAR knows everything...."

Rufus' trial and conviction were duly reported in the campus rag, the Daily Collegian, by staff cartoonist Kris Jackson.

The series of cartoons depicting his adventures was the last thing Rufus thought of before he fell asleep and started to dream.

This was Rufus' dream: An astronomer discovered life on the moon and the U.S. sent a rocket with two astronauts to study it. Upon arriving on the moon, the astronauts discovered that the Moonman was remarkably 'human', and even spoke fluent English. A new era for humanity was proclaimed by President Ford, who declared that all sinners be forgiven, all transgressers pardoned, and "all lions be allowed to lay lambs, to quote Shakespeare..." Truly, said Ford, this is a new beginning for mankind. The astronauts brought the creature back to Earth, and as millions watched worldwide on their televisions, the Moonman stepped before the cameras to deliver a speech: "Let me make one thing perfectly clear," he began, in a strangely familiar voice. Reporters quickly turned to each other in horror and, in their living rooms across the nation, husbands and wives turned to each other with puzzled looks on their faces. Then Rufus walked up to the Moonman and ripped the mask off it's face and, lo and behold, revealed....

Rufus woke up, his heart beating madly, reached under his bed for the Psychology Yesterday magazine, instead pulled out his diary, flipped to his last entry.

Reaching for a pen on his night table, he knocked over a glass of water, waking up his roommate.

"Whatcha doin'?" asked his roommate.

"Nothin'" answered Rufus, "Go back to sleep."

This is what Rufus wrote in his diary: "Be thankful you're not a Russian midget..."

... AND BECAUSE OF PUNK DRAFT DODGERS LIKE YOU, THE VIETNAM WAR WAS RUINED!

Questions, questions

Last week, The Collegian revealed in a series of three stories that the UMass administration did not conduct a full search for minority candidates before hiring Gideon Ariel as a one-year professor of Exercise and Computer Sciences.

The series raised questions about Ariel's scholarly publications, and suggested that he may have been inappropriately referred to as the holder of a PhD. before he received one.

Ariel now holds a PhD. from UMass in Exercise Science after finishing graduate studies last spring. He is an acknowledged expert and world speaker in motion biology. He is specifically interested in using computers to analyze human motions and the forces that produce them -- from throwing a discus to the movements of a muscular distrophy victim.

In one story last Thursday, it was reported that Ariel was "kicked out" of Hungary while he was scheduled to speak at a world conference on motion biology last spring. That report was inaccurate. AT the time, Ariel, a native of Israel, was the holder of a Israeli passport. Such credentials and their bearers are unwelcome in Hungary.

More significant than the series' specific questions, more pertinent to the entire campus have been raised

--what are the goals of the federally-mandated "affirmative action" program, which requires that qualified black and minority candidates for University jobs be actively sought?

--when may the program be short-circuited in the interest of filling an opening quickly or to get the best qualified rather than a merely qualified candidate?

--what are current UMass-Amherst guidelines about the gratis performance of work for private firms by faculty, as has been alleged in Ariel's case?

--when may a UMass doctoral recipient get a UMass academic appointment, a procedure that was considered and approved by Provost Robert L. Gluckstern in the hiring of Ariel?

Our intent now is not to question the obvious legitimacy and uniqueness of Ariel's technological achievements in applied biomechanical analysis to medicine and athletics.

We simply wish to use the circumstances of Ariel's hiring, and the court suits which have followed, as a focus for questioning University policy. We will do that to the limit imposed by a mostly volunteer staff.

Schedule for Rosh Hashanah

High Holy Days

Rosh Hashana is the festival celebrating the Jewish New Year. According to tradition, this year is the 5735th since the creation of the world. Rosh Hashana is marked by prayer with introspection, with asking for forgiveness. The custom of eating apples dipped in honey signifies hope for a sweet New Year. Services are sponsored by Hillel, and will be held for the High Holidays in the Campus Center Auditorium. The schedule is as follows:

ROSH HASHANAH: Monday, September 16, 7:00 p.m.; Tuesday, September 17, 10:00 a.m., 7:00 p.m.; Wednesday, September 18, 7:00 p.m.

YOM KIPPUR: Wednesday, September 25, Kol Nidre service, 7:00 p.m.; Thursday, September 26, 10:00 a.m., closing service 5:30 p.m.

After UMass: What now?

The Cornell University Graduate School will be in the Student Development Center in Berkshire House on Wednesday, September 18 to discuss its programs with interested students. A list of their MS and Ph.D. programs is available in Room 106. Make an appointment to see the representative.

On Monday, Sept. 23 the University of Virginia Graduate School of Business will visit the campus. A representative will be available to discuss their MBA program.

On Wednesday, Sept. 25 the Hofstra Law School, Hempstead, New York will conduct group and individual interviews with interested students about their law school. Please make an appointment in Room 102 Berkshire House to talk with the representative.

UYS offers diverse opportunities

Channel 57, WGBY, in Springfield is a public service television station which gives access to citizen groups more so than any other station in the Western Massachusetts area. This is of special relevance to minority groups who historically have been "benignly" neglected by television stations. Having access to production time at Channel 57, WGBY, minority and special interest groups help educate and inform citizens not aware of these groups' programs and purpose.

Larry Scott, a minority student, provided techinical service as production assistant to the minority and special interest groups. Larry was technically involved in 138 hours of programming by minority and special interest groups at Channel 57.

During his semester of service at Channel 57, Larry was also a full-time student at the University of Massachusetts-Amherst. He earned twelve university credits in his major field because he was participating in the experiential education program, University Year for ACTION. Larry was one of 81 students in agencies from: Worcester to North Adams, from Springfield to Pittsfield, in housing, education, health services, legal aid, community planning and environmental education, developing programs which improved services to the community.

University Year for ACTION (UYA), an experiential education program has begun its sixth program year working to alleviate problems of low-income communities.

If you want to experience a meaningful role through education as Larry has, there are a few part-time or full-time positions available for this semester such as: Psychology Assistants and Sensorimotor Assistant at Belchertown State School; Program Development Assistant at Berkshire Unlimited; Community Organizer and Outreach Worker at the Family Planning Council of Western Mass.; Volunteer Coordinator at Northampton State Hospital; Rehabilitation Facilitator at the Occupational & Vocational Development Center for the Handicapped in Haydenville, Mass.; Legal Pre-professional at Central Mass. ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

By Stella Wilder

VIRGO: (Aug. 23-Sept. 7) — Intelligent decisions make the difference between success and failure this week. Don't hesitate to seek for needed knowledge in books. (Sept. 8-Sept. 22) — A crisis situation may be different to live with for a few days this week, but in the end it will prove to have been the way toward real gains.

LIBRA: (Sept. 23-Oct. 7) — Keep your emotions under strict control, especially as you go about the business of dealing with the public. You may be sorely tempted toward anger. (Oct. 8-Oct. 22): Though you may seem to see your progress slowed down early in the week, you need not be discouraged. Forward motion does prevail.

SCORPIO: (Oct. 23-Nov. 7) — Early in the week would be an excellent time to relax. You can't begin to make real progress until you near week's end. Don't try too hard. (Nov. 8-Nov. 21) — Take care that you don't appear to others to be interfering in their business. You would do best keeping to things you know very well.

SAGITTARIUS: (Nov. 22-Dec. 7) — Don't allow feelings to decide issues pertaining strictly to business. Head must rule heart this week if all is to go well. (Dec. 8-Dec. 21) — Be guided by just enough prudence and caution to keep you out of serious trouble. You can best insure gains by working in harmony with colleagues.

CAPRICORN: (Dec. 22-Jan. 5) — Unless you are careful to separate what you actually know from what you have merely heard via the grapevine, you could be in for trouble. (Jan. 6-Jan. 19) — Disallow information gleaned through another's informal spy system. You can depend upon knowledge gained for yourself through experience.

AQUARIUS: (Jan. 20-Feb. 3) — See to your own health early in the week. If you fail to cooperate with those who are experts in the field, you may regret it. (Feb. 4-Feb. 18) — Protect yourself against those who would try to upset you emotionally. Now is the time for calm, cool, clear thinking - and a friend who offers aid.

PISCES: (Feb. 19-March 5) — This is a week with much to offer-but you will not be able to take advantage of it unless you are also able to recognize where truth lies. (March 6-March 20) — Though another may receive the praise you felt due you alone, you can accept defeat graciously. In so doing you will gain a new friend.

ARIES: (March 21-April 4) — Personal matters may intrude upon business affairs this week — but that may be all to the good. Apply what you learn from one to the other. (April 5-April 19) — Though there is confusion in the air early in the week, you can keep from making serious errors. Simply pay attention to the job at hand.

TAURUS: (April 20-May 5) — There are certain decisions which you must make completely on your own this week. Fail to do so and you will forfeit real success. (May 6-May 20) — There is nothing that can cause permanent damage to your career this week — but you may have a few moments of real fear that the reverse is the case.

GEMINI: (May 21-June 6) — Weaknesses displayed carelessly could cause you unexpected harm late in the week. Make every effort to appear strong of character. (June 7-June 20) — Personal relationships are very important to your progress this week. Take care that you don't fall victim to the kind of gossip that spoils lives.

FOXBORO, Mass. [AP] - Quarterback Jim Plunkett of the New England Patriots has had many memorable days in his football career - All-American at Stanford, Heisman Trophy winner and No. 1 choice in the National Football League. He adde- another one Sunday in leading the Patriots to a 34-24 victory over the mighty Miami Dolphins, the Super Bowl Champions, beaten only twice in regular season play in the last two years.

"This is just a super game," Plunkett said. "It's certainly one of the most satisfying games of my life. It was a big thrill when we beat Miami when I was a rookie, but this means more coming at the start of the season.

"Our line did a super job. I didn't get too much pressure. A big key was the balance our rushing game gave me. That kept them out of a 3-5 defense on our third down plays."

The Patriots converted 10 of 16 third down situations, enabling the oft-maligned defense to get solid breathers on the side line.

Miami Dolphin coach Don Shula said he was "very disappointed with our defense." he added. "We saw how much they've improved on the films, even with a lot of young guys. On defense, they're not going to make the big mistakes they did last year."

The Patriots shocked the Dolphins on the passing of Plunkett and the running of Herron, then held on for the major upset.

The Patriots, who struggled through the 1973 season with a 5-9 record while Miami was posting a 12-2 mark, charged to a 24-10 halftime lead and then built a 31-10 advantage before the Dolphins rallied behind quarterback Bob Griese.

Griese passed 13 yards to Marlin Briscee for a touchdown late in the third quarter and then set up a scoring smash by Larry Csonka with 4½ minutes remaining.

The Dolphins get another shot, but the stubborn New England defense held four down at the Miami 17 with 1:33 to go. Then John Smith booted a 26-yard field goal at 14:07, providing second-year coach Chuck Fairbanks his biggest pre victory.

Plunkett led the Patriots on a 75-yard scoring match with the opening kickoff. Herron capped the drive by breaking several tackles and racing 14 yards for the touchdown.

The Dolphins came back to tie the score on a one-yard plunge by Csonka in the first play of the second period. But the Patriots bounced right back.

Plunkett completed three key passes for first downs and then fired a strike to Reggie Rucker in the corner of the end zone, putting New England in front to stay.

The Dolphins' Charlie Leigh fumbled at the ensuing kickoff and after three plays Smith booted a 21-yard field goal.

A pass interception by linebacker Sam Hunt gave the Patriots possession at the Miami 8 and, after Cunningham picked up three yards, Plunkett dived for a touchdown. Gare Yepremian kicked a 33-yard field goal for Miami just before the half.

Plunkett and Cunningham put on an offensive show for New England's fourth touchdown in the third period. Cunningham banged 13 yards for what proved to be the deciding tally.

Allen says he's through

CHICAGO [UPI] — Dick Allen "came to win," as they say, and when it became painfully clear the Chicago White Sox of 1974 weren't going to win, Dick Allen walked out.

Allen, 32, in the tag end of one of the better of his 11 major league seasons, announced his decision to quit baseball Saturday night to his stunned teammates just before they played and lost, 5-0, to the California Angels.

Third baseman Bill Melton may have summed it up when he said, "He came over here to win, and we didn't do it. Allen came here to do a job and all he wanted to do was help manager (Chuck) Tanner for a couple of years. He probably felt he helped him as much as he could."

Allen was hitting.301, leading the American League in home runs with 32 and was one of the RBI leaders with 88. But the White Sox were in fourth place in the American League West, 11 games behind Oakland, when Allen made his decision.

Thomas' g-slam keys Brewers 9-5

MILWAUKEE [AP] — German Thomas hit a grand slam home run in the first inning and Tim Johnson tripled home two runs in a four-run third, powering the Milwaukee Brewers to a 9-5 victory over the Boston Red Sox Sunday.

The loss dropped the third-place Red Sox 3½ games behind the New York Yankees in the American League East race. The Yankees beat the Detroit Tigers 10-2 earlier in the day.

Loser Luis Tiant, 20-12, who had only one earned run to work with his last 38 innings, received ample support in the first three innings Sunday, but lasted less than three innings himself.

Boston's ace right-hander, making a fifth straight unsucessful try for his 21st victory, allowed all nine runs, all earned, on five hits and five walks.

After Tiant gave up Thomas' grand slam homer, the Red Sox rallied for three runs in the second inning. Bob Montgomery capped the rally with a two-run homer, his third of the baseball season.

The Brewers took a 5-3 lead in their half of the second on George Scott's RBI bouncer, but the Red Sox came back to tie the score in the third as Carl Yastzremski keyed the rally with a run-scoring double.

Tiant then walked the first two batters in the third, but Johnson tripled into the right field corner. Pedro Garcia knocked out Tiant with a run-scoring single and Ken Berry later singled home the fourth run of the inning.

Yanks muscle Tigers 10-2

DETROIT AP - Bobby Murcer's two-run double high-lighted a four-run second inning outburst that helped unbeaten Larry Gura post his fourth victory of the year Sunday as the first-place New York Yankees routed the Detroit Tigers 10-2.

The Yankees scored two runs in the first inning when Elliott Maddox walked, stole second, took third on an infield out and rode home on Lou Piniella's double. Thurman Munson followed with an RBI single.

Eight New York batters came to the plate in the second. The first run scored on Roy White's infield grounder with the bases loaded, two more came home on Murcer's double and Piniella made it 6-0 with a sacrifice fly.

Jim Mason's single brought home Graig Nettles with the Yank's seventh run in third, and they added three more in the eighth on a two-run single by Murcer and a run-scoring single by Piniella.

Gura, brought up from the minors in August, pitched shutout ball for five innings and was coasting with a 7-0 lead before the Tigers broke through in the sixtth on a triple by Bill Freehan and a double by Reggie Sanders.

When singles by Ed Brinkman, Ron LeFlere and Al Kaline in the seventh produced Detroit's second run, Sparky Lyle came on to protect the victory. Kaline's hit raised his career total to 2,992.

Perry wins twentieth shuts out Orioles, 1-0

BALTIMORE [UPI] — John Lowenstein walked with the bases loaded in the ninth inning to force in the only run and the Cleveland Indians snapped a four-game losing streak to make Gaylord Perry a 20-game winner Sunday with a 1-0 victory over the Baltimore Orioles.

Ross Grimsley walked Lowenstein on four straight pitches after the Indians filled the bases on a single by Buddy Bell, a throwing error by Bobby Grich, and a walk to Oscar Gamble.

Perry, 20-10, became a 20-game winner for the fourth time in his career, yielding five hits, striking out four and walking three.

Perry warded off Oriole threats in the fifth and seventh innings when Baltimore put two runners aboard with no outs only to have Perry retire the side in order in each frame.

Grimsley, 17-13, gave up nine hits in 8⅓ innings before Bob Reynolds finished up in the ninth.

Kelliher, Croasdale hurt as Villanova spoils UMass debut

By STEVE DeCOSTA

The Minutemen did show potential. But, unfortunately, potential does not win footabll games.

So, while Villanova was taking advantage of its every opportunity, UMass failed to capitalize when it had the chance and came out on the short end of a 17-13 score in its opener Saturday.

The first series of downs set the disappointing tone for the rest of the afternoon.

The Minutemen took the opening kickoff and marched with ease to the Wildcat two yard line, where the drive mysteriously stalled. Keith Lange, who bruised his way to 97 yards rushing on the day, picked up one on an off-tackle slant. A quarterback sneak resulted in no gain. Then signal-caller Fred Kelliher rolled to his left, ignored an open alley to the goal line, and overthrew Gary Mika in the end-zone.

On fourth and goal from the one, coach Dick MacPherson elected to go for three points, and sent in Dave Croasdale for a field goal attempt. But the freshman missed wide left, and a brilliant scoring opportunity went by the boards.

The most discouraging note for the Minutemen was the loss of Kelliher to injury in the first quarter. Up to the time he was hurt, the senior quarterback had led two successful drives, combining a rejuvenated running attack with three completions in five passing attempts. But, as fate would have it, with 4:50 left in the quarter, Kelliker bottlegged to his right, carried for seven yards, and went down in a help beneath a bevy of Villanova tacklers. He rose slowly, his right arm dangling loosely at his side. The injury was diagnosed as a shoulder separation, but how long Kelliher will be on the sidelines remains unknown.

Already crippled by the loss of their signal-caller, UMass was still not exempt from the injury jinx. On the second half kickoff, Croasdale returned the ball eleven yards, only to suffer some form of knee injury on the take-down. The freshman defensive back had been impressive in the first half, batting away numerous passes. His replacement, another freshman, Todd Holt, was not as successful.

The two biggest question marks for the Minutemen prior to game time were the offensive line and defensive backfield. By game's end, both had distinguished themselves.

The offensive line, though on occasions weak on pass protection, opened gaping holes in the Villanova line as sophomore running backs Lang and Rich Jessamy ripped off several long jaunts.

Unfortunately for the defensive backs, both Villanova touchdowns came via the air. Otherwise, the inexperienced ballhawks handled themselves admirably. Wildcat quarterback Brian Sikorski could complete only 10 of 26 passes, even though he was sacked only once and pressure from the defensive line was nearly nonexistant.

According to MacPherson, the defensive line and linebackers were supposed to take some of the pressure off the secondary. After the contest, however, the coach was somewhat less than pleased. "I think they could have done it better," MacPherson admitted. "That area was disappointing to me more than anything else."

Beyond that general category, there were several specific defensive lapses that indirectly led to Villanova scores.

Midway through the second quarter, a John Romboli punt backed the Wildcats to their own 19 yard line. Two plays later, on a third and eight, Sikorski missed flanker Chuck Dreisbach cutting across the middle, but UMass was caught for pass interference, and Villanova had a first down. Sikorski then came to life, passing the Wildcats to the UMass four, where the drive stalled and Dennis Griggs hit a 21 yard field goal.

Villanova also owed a bit of thanks to the UMass defenders for their final score, a touchdown near the end of the third quarter.

On a second and ten at the UMass 16, Sikorski looked for Leo McGeehan but the ball landed right in the hands of defender John Penny. In his haste to pick up the interception, Penny dropped the ball, and the Wildcats had another life. On the next play, Sikorski hit Dreisbach, who barely managed to remain inbounds for the score.

Ken Diminick set up the second Villanova score, the one that gave the Wildcats the lead for good. He hauled in a Romboli punt and rambled 33 yards to the UMass 33. From there it took Sikorski only five plays to find John Mastronardo, who had six of the ten Wildcat receptions, in the right hand corner of the end zone.

Meanwhile, the Minuteman offense was sluggish, and could manage only two sustained drives.

Reserve quarterback Mark Tripucka led a 69 yard march at the opening of the second half that was highlighted by runs of 16 and 36 yards by Lang. Gary Mika, who showed plenty of speed and good hands in his debut at wide receiver, got credit for the score on a thirteen yard pass play.

Tripucka also masterminded an 80-yard drive midway through the fourth quarter, with the big play being a 40 yard toss to Mika. Tripucka then carried himself for the six points, but misfired on the attempted two-point conversion.

But interceptions hurt the Minutemen, as Tripucka flipped the ball into enemy hands three times, including one to Steve Ramsey that set up the first Villanova TD.

But there were positive aspects as well. As mentioned, the offensive line and defensive secondary showed they can do the job. The running attack has definitely improved over last year, as the Minutemen picked up 223 yards on the ground. (Remember, last year the Minutemen could manage only 749 yards rushing in all eleven games.) Before he was hurt, Kelliker showed he knew what the new UMass offense was all about as he moved the team well on two occasions.

So, the UMass football fan has reason to be optimistic. But, optimism must be rewarded. The Minutemen could just do that next week at Maine.

All they have to do is figure out how to tighten up a few of those loose ends.

Freshman defensive back Dave Croasdale launches himself at a Brian Sikorski aerial intended for Villanova flanker Chuck Dreisbach and deflects it away preventing an almost certain touchdown in Saturday's game at Philadelphia. The impressive freshman hurt his knee returning a kickoff and sat out the remainder of the game. Dreisbach later scored on a 3rd quarter pass.

Staff Photo/Dave Less

Breakthrough! Rich Jessamy bursts into the open field during Saturday's game. Rich gained 76 yards in the game and along with Keith Lang gave UMass a solid one-two running punch.

Keith Lang carries through a gaping hole in the right side of the Villanova line in first quarter action in Saturday's 17-13 Wildcat win. The sophomore fullback gained 97 yards in 15 attempts and broke one run for 36 yards which led to the first Minuteman score early in the third quarter.

Ford cites "evidence" of Nixon Watergate role

From Wire Services

WASHINGTON — President Ford told a national television audience last night there was "very persuasive evidence" that former President Richard M. Nixon was guilty of an impeachable offense in the Watergate coverup.

He said there was a "very real possibility" Nixon would have been indicted on obstruction of justice and possibly 10 other criminal charges if Ford had not pardoned him.

Ford said he pardoned Nixon to spare the nation further termoil and division over Watergate, and "there was no understanding, no deal between me and the former President...none whatsoever."

"I must say that the decision has created more antagonism than I anticipated," Ford acknowledged at his second White House news conference. But he said it was right for the nation, for the sake of national healing and unity.

"...As I look over the long haul with a trial or several trials of a former president, criminal trials, the possibility of a former president being in the dock so to speak, and the divisions that would have existed... I'm still convinced that despite the public reaction so far that the decision I made was the right one."

Again and again at the nationally broadcast and televised news conference, the questioning turned to the pardon, and Ford defended it.

"... I had no secret reason," he said at the outset. Nor, said Ford, did he have inside information on Nixon's health - although he was not oblivious to reports that the former president was ailing.

And later, Ford said there were no private deals:

"There was no understanding, no deal between me and the former president nor between my staff and the staff of the former president, none whatsoever."

Instead, Ford said, there was his concern that Nixon would be indicted for obstructing justice and possibly 10 other counts, that the proceedings would drag out for well over a year, and that they would worsen the national wounds of Watergate.

"It seemed to me that as long as this divisiveness continued, this turmoil existed, caused by the charges and countercharges, the responsible people in the government could not give their total attention to the problems that we had to solve," Ford said.

Ford bares conditional amnesty plan

WASHINGTON [AP] — President Ford officially offered judicial forgiveness yesterday to thousands of Vietnam-era draft evaders and deserters if they reaffirm their alleigance to the United States and work for up to 24 months in public service jobs.

In disclosing his conditional amnesty plan, Ford declared it is time to bind up the wounds of the past "so that we may all get going on the pressing problems of the present."

The amnesty program was affective immediately when Ford signed a presidential proclamation and two executive orders during a brief, nationally broadcast appearance in the White House Cabinet Room.

Under the program, draft evaders and military deserters who have not been convicted or punished can turn themselves in before next Jan. 31, reaffirm their allegiance and agree to spend up to 24 months in approved public service jobs such as hospital orderly.

The President set no minimum period of alternate service, but said the 24-month requirement can be reduced for mitigating circumstances.

For men already convicted or punished for desertion or draft evasion, Ford established a nine-member clemency board to review their cases "as equitably and as impartially as is humanly possible."

Journalism majors revamped

By CINDY ROGERS
Staff Reporter

Restrictions on major programs in the dept. of English's journalistic studies (JS) program have sparked a dispute between members of the program.

Professor Dario Politella of the Journalistic Studies Program is asking the dept. to "reconsider its action of May 15, when it voted to establish English as the sole track to a Journalistic Studies major.

Politella is asking the department to set-up an ad-hoc committee to hold hearings and to propose to the department a viable academic program in Journalistic Studies. He says the committee should include students, journalism faculty, English faculty and faculty-at-large.

Before this change was initiated, there were two other alternatives to achieve a concentration in journalism: full major requirements of any other department, plus 15 hours of JS courses; or 15 hours of courses in any dept. of the University with 15 hours of JS courses.

Howard Ziff, director of the JS program, presented the change at the May 15 English dept. meeting and the proposed change was vetoed by a 17 to 13 hand vote. Ziff is quoted in the minutes of that meeting as saying he considered a journalist to be a man of letters and that literature, therefore, was a journalist's most important discipline.

Politella, who was not at the meeting, objects to the change for two major reasons. He said it was a "elitist concept of education," and that "journalists should be skilled in various disciplines." He said it was easy to teach someone to write in a short period of time. He also said he objects to the way the change was done procedurally.

He siad "only twenty-five percent of the department was on hand to effect this action so vitally important to several hundred students" and that 17-13 vote "was too close to reflect concensus."

The actual minutes of the May 15 meeting and the number of English dept. faculty were not recorded. According to the departmental constitution-"a quorum of 30 percent of the professional staff shall be necessary for the conduct of business." Whether the vote was legal cannot be determined therefore.

Politella also argues that "three of the five full-time JS faculty had no knowledge that such an action had been planned." He said the action "was taken without any student imput, in violation of long-standing department policy that encourages student participation in decisions that affect their academic interests."

Ziff siad the change was "a way station to build a full major in journalism." He siad the change was "discussed with others and received encouragement form Whitmore, whose policy is against double majors and minors in the University."

He said the change was instituted for two reasons, administrative and intellectual. "The Journalistic Studies Program is within the English dept. can make adjustments of curriculum within the English dept." If a student had a major outside the dept.,Ziff said, "he didn't have control of the curriculum."

Freshmen 'evicted' from campus hotel

By MIKE KNEELAND
MDC Staff

Philip Lindsay is a freshman. He'd probably like to write a letter to someone saying he's enjoying dormitory life and the new friends he's made there.

Instead, he's more likely to write a letter home saying what a lovely view he has from his room on the ninth floor of the Campus Center Building.

That's where Phil has been living with some 30 other students while administrators have been looking for rooms for them in overcrowded dormitories.

Now, the freshman says, he and his hotel mates have been issued an "eviction notice" by the Housing Office. The students must now report to areas they have no desire to live in--and Phil doesn't like that.

"I don't want to leave the hotel until we get assigned to areas we want to live in," he said after being designated a spokesman for the hotel mates.

The Collegian could not reach a Housing Office spokesman last night for comment. Lindsay charges that office could care less about the students' living problems and has, in response to their protests, said "too bad."

Lindsay said some students were sent to John Adams dormitory in Southwest Friday and when they got there, there were no rooms available.

Lindsay himself would like to live, as he indicated on the necessary forms some time ago, in the Orchard Hill area. But now, he charges, he must go "where I'm told to go."

Still able to crack an occasional smile over the situation, Lindsay says his hotel mates are "tired of being temporary students."

If all this isn't enough, Lindsay has had a few other problems: getting into oversubscribed courses.

Harvard professor speaks

By LANA FISCHER
Staff Reporter

The Profile of Nonverbal Sensitivity test was the topic of Robert Rosenthal's speech at Herter Hall yesterday. Rosenthal was the guest speaker at a non-credit Collequium sponsored by the Psychology Department.

Rosenthal, a professor of social psychology at Harvard, discussed a new, eleven-channel test which measures sensitivity to nonverbal messages, body language and tone of voice, via audio-visual aids.

Some interesting results of the test, he said, have been that women score higher than men, in general, due to more involvement with children where interpretation of body language is necessary. However, people who score well have fewer friends but warmer relationships. Those who scored highest know "too much for their own good" said Rosenthal to a group of 200.

Commuters check needs Thursday

By KATHLEEN R. ALLEN
Staff Reporter

The Commuter Assembly Executive Council is encouraging commuters to attend Thursday's noon meeting on a possible regional conference on commuting students. The meeting will be held in the Commuter Lounge.

The main purpose of such a conference would be to establish mechanisms for determining the needs of commuter students with respect to the University, and the types of programs that can be developed to fit those needs, Larry Gendron, a member of the Council said.

Gendron said, "At the next meeting I'm going to submit a proposal that the Commuter Assembly Executive Council and Commuter Student Affairs in Whitmore investigate the possibility of hosting a regional conference on commuting students with participation of student and Student Affairs staff."

Gendron said people who would be interested in sitting on committees — housing, transportation, communications, ways and means, and academic affairs — are needed.

The assembly uses $25,000 for the operation of evening and outreach (to Belchertown Center, South Deerfield, and South Amherst) bus service. All college evening bus service is provided by contributions from the assembly, Student Center, and Graduate Center.

A hired, fulltime secretary, Tom Coffey, is available everyday from 9 a.m. - 5 p.m. in the Commuter Lounge. He is to act as a resource person for commuters. Coffey can direct commuters toward some solution to problems.

Formulation of policies in respect to one credit colloquia courses is among plans by the assembly.

Redesign of the Commuter Lounge is only one of the activities the Commuter Assembly is striving to complete, members say. Murals are on the walls, new furniture will be here about Oct. 1, according to Gendron.

Negotiations, for new carpeting, are presently taking place with the Negotiating Campus Center Board of Governors. If the carpeting is approved it will be paid for equally by the council and the board. Hopefully, Gendron said, the carpet will be installed by January.

The council established the summer program for off-campus housing. Gendron said the council paid for and ran the summer program hoping the University would continue the program, but they failed to do so.

Redesign of the lounge into a study area, conference area, and "living room" area is a beginning, Gendron said. Commuters are needed to carry out and initiate other changes, he added.

Citizens for Quality Environment (C.E.Q) have bought a used Road Master International 20yd. truck to aid in their recycling program.

The truck, purchased from funds authorized by the Student Senate, will make runs in approximately 65 buildings on campus where the barrels are located. On a good day, as much as 10 tons of paper can be saved from becoming trash, says Henry Doyle, who is in charge of the group.

He said that last year alone the group saved a football field 12 feet deep from becoming wasteland. With the price of land going up constantly, this is a tremendous savings.

Doyle added that one ton of paper collected saves 17 trees from being used as pulp. This means as many as 17,000 trees could be saved this year by people on campus.

With the purchase of 32 new containers, at the cost of $5,000, people should be able to pitch in the recyclables wherever they live or frequent.

The money made from selling the paper is directed back to the students through the Student Senate.

Acceptable items are : computer cards and printouts, newspapers, cardboard cartons, magazines, paper bags, towels, napkins, and tissues, letters, memos, envelopes, xerox, maps, and cardboard (if not plastic coated).

UMies get "The Little Idea"

By JERRY ROGERS
Staff Reporter

Carefully patterned and graceful movements, utilizing intense muscle control, were characteristic of the various forms of Kung Fu evercise and self-defense presented Sunday evening at the Campus Center Auditorium.

The demonstration, sponsored by Master Chan's Kung Fu Academy of Amherst and Greenfield, involved about 30 students from the academy and two guests from other academies.

Staff Photo/Steve Ruggles

Opening the program was "an exhausting exercise" known as the South China Lion Dance, which made use of the type of gaily colored costumes seen in Chinese New Year parades. Five forms of Shao-Lin Kung Fu were then shown and explained by Mr. David Blanchard, speaker at the series. The first has an exercise form designed to familarize the beginner with various movements.

The second form shown is used for both exercise and self-defense and is patterned after the movements of a fighting lion. The tiger set the pattern for the third form and it, too, can be used for both exercise and self-defense.

The fourth and fifth forms, not taught at the Amherst academy, were presented by guest performers S.-Fuling-Chan and Si-Fu Joseph Wong and are called the eagle's claw and northern forms, respectively.

Blanchard explained that Students at the academy choose one of the first three forms to learn, and decide whether to move on to either Tai-Chi or Wing-Chun. According to Blanchard, Tai-Chi uses less physical force and develops the "Chi or the power within" and is therefore taken up mostly by women. He added that Wing-Chun is the primary form taught at the Amherst academy and begins with learning "The Little Idea". Three parts compose the Little Idea: the first helps you to get to know the parts of your body so well that you can defend yourself in total darkness; Sticky Hands is the second part and this develops your sensitivity; the last part is actual sparring. Both Tai-Chi and Wing-Chun were demonstrated by the stud as were Shao-Lin forms of weapon fighting, which ended the program.

Prior to the program there was a short history of Kung Fu explained by Mr. David. The art originated with Buddhist Monks who, thousands of years before Christ, developed the Shao-Lin forms. Later, Tai-Chi was developed from watching certain animals.

Shao-Lin, or the "hard" form, and Tai-Chi, or the "soft" form, combine to form Wing-Chun.

The Ming dynasty, in the mid-eighteenth century, destroyed all the monasteries, forcing the monks to flee to the mountains of the north and south. This dispersion is where the individual Master-pupil relationship was born.

This system remains to this day, and it is the Master who develops "a personal standard of excellence" in each person who applies himself to Kung Fu.

Impeachment discussed by Globe editors

By FRED GOSIEWSKI
Staff Reporter

The process of impeachment was described as a combination of the political and legal factors that are separate but parallel, in a speech here last night by two members of the Boston Globe.

Declaring that, "The impeachment process was one of the finest hours of the American Constitution," Robert Healy, the Pulitzer Prize winning executive editor of the Boston Globe, noted that the major cause of the process was the desire to dismantle the powers of the Presidency.

Noting that other Presidents before Richard Nixon had abused their powers, especially of the agencies that have become what he called "governments within governments," Healy remarked that Nixon had developed this use of power through the use of "systems managers," without political experience.

Healy also remarked that the Foundaing Fathers had desired a political impeachment of the executive rather than a judicial one, so that the electorate could express their opinion on the impeachment at the next election, while if judges had removed the executive, they would not be responsible to the electorate.

The legal aspects of impeachment, Sal Micciche, of the Washington bureau of the Globe, observed that "We now know we can subpoena the President of the United States." This resulted from the Supreme Court decision that ruled unanimously that former President Nixon had to yield 64 subpoenaed tapes in August.

Micciche concluded by noting legislature, in its investigative capacity, was responsible for the "removal, not punishment" of the President, while the courts had to define the legal limits on the investigative powers.

Miccicho concluded by noting that the two aspects of impeachment merged in a "constitutional crunch" on Mr. Nixon in the week that he resigned. In this week, after the disclosure of the June 23, 1972, tape that showed that Nixon ordered the restricting of federal agencies, it was clear that the political mistakes of the President were also legal problems.

Are fees valid?

By JIM PAULIN
Staff Reporter

The Rents and Fees Board, a committee of the Student Senate, will be functioning in a new role this year as an investigatory agency, according to John Marcineac, Committee Chairperson.

The Committee will be scrutinizing the expenditure of fees charged students for various services such as health, Campus Center, Athletics, Fine Arts, I.D.'s, and Labs.

"I've had many questions from students regarding the validity of lab fees and we will be looking into them," said Marcineac.

The validity of I.D. card fees will be investigated. "We've been charging a dollar fee and we really haven't been seeing any benefit out of this each year," he went on to say. "When the Campus Center fees were raised, part of the money was to go to the Blue wall renovations, and we'd like to look into why it hasn't been done and what the renovations will be."

An investigative role is a departure from the original function of the committee which was established in 1970. "In the past, we have been mainly an advisory group, trying to give the student viewpoint to the administrators when they went to levy fees," Marcineac said.

The advisory role has been taken over by student run groups such as the Campus Center Board of Governors, the Fine Arts Council, the Athletics Committee, and the Health Advisory Board. These groups concentrate on one fee area, since the Rents and Fees Board had difficulty working with so many fee area. The Committee is open to all students.

Population policy seen as a must

By DUANE DALE
Special Correspondent

UMass Doctoral Student Duane Dale attended the World Population Conference in Bucharest this summer and filed this report on the U. S. population policy. This is the seventh in an eight part series.

—NEWS ANALYSIS—

BUCHAREST — The United States has a population policy, according to Caspar Weinberger, U. S. Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare. "It's an implicit policy but an effective one," Weinberger told a press briefing here. The Secretary is serving as head of the U. S. delegation to the U. N. World Population Conference.

According to Weinberger, the U. S. population policy is the aggregate of family planning programs, court decisions favoring the distribution of contraceptives, and laws regarding the status of women. The supposed proof is the recent drop in the U. S. growth rate, now at 0.7 per cent compared with a world average of slightly over 2 per cent.

Weinberger's "policy" is a figment of his imagination, designed to serve the needs of the at this highly political conference. The U. S., for some good reasons (and perhaps some bad ones) is urging nations throughout the world to develop explicit population policies, but we don't have one of our own. To label our family planning programs and court decisions as a "policy" may avoid embarrassment here, but it doesn't meet our needs at home.

The need for an explicit population policy was spelled out in Population and the American Future, the 1972 report of the U. S. Population Commission. If the two-child family continues to be the norm, the U. S. population will stabilize before 2050 at slightly over 300 million. If three-child families again become popular, the population of the U. S. could hit one billion by the year 2100. The current figure is about 210 million.

The concern over large numbers is really a concern about the quality of life. More people mean more urbanization, and we are already unable to plan rationally for our fast-growing cities. More people mean more mouths to feed, in a time when much of the world is malnourished.

Last winter's energy crisis was perhaps a quirk in the law of supply and demand, brought about by various political and economic factors. But there is good evidence that the long-term energy crunch — dirty coal, scarce petroleum, and unproven nuclear fusion — is real. Population didn't create the problem, but large numbers would make it worse.

Even if the energy is available to drive our cars, run our factories, and heat our homes, it gives off pollution — again, more of it with more people.

Water may turn out to be the limiting factor in the United States. Every ecosystem, after all, has its maximum "carrying capacity," determined by the amount of food, water, or space available.

Some scientists think that 500 million people would overtax the supply of water in the United States. In some regions, the water table is dropping dangerously fast; other regions are looking outside their river basins for sources of water.

Some businessmen are concerned about the idea of population stabilization in general. A growing market is good for profits, though industrial growth is increasing due to a higher standard of living — that is to say, the ability to buy a fancier car or take more airplane trips. A few sectors of business would be hurt, but they are diversifying already: no longer does Gerber's say that babies are their only business.

The Gross National Product would be smaller with a stable population than with one which continues to grow; less workers would be contributing their efforts to the country's total output. However, the Commission was firmly convinced that each person would live better financially under a stable situation. Reason: smaller families are equally comfortable in a smaller car or a smaller house; there is more disposable income for "the better things of life."

Mr. Nixon disapproved of abortion on request and birth control services for minors. Other suggestions included a federal Population Education Act to fund education on population problems; sex education for all; easier adoption; approval of the Equal Rights Amendment; ready and practicable access to birth control information and supplies. The Commission concluded that the opportunity to plan one's family is a basic human right, and stressed that decisions about birth control, abortion, vasectomy, and sterilization should be voluntary.

According to its chairman, John D. Rockefeller 3rd, the Commission decided to avoid the question of numbers. However, Secretary Weinberger's speech here, which must be taken as part of our implicity and aggregate population policy, points to the likelihood of a continued "replacement level" birth rate, resulting in a stable population by the first part of the next century. President Ford would do the country a service by proclaiming this as a desirable goal.

It is appropriate for the United States to encourage other countries to examine their own population situation, particularly as it relates to the prospects for development and improvement of the quality of life in each country. Assistance in carrying out family planning programs, when requested, is also appropriate.

However, there is justice in the argument made by many countries that population control is most important in the U. S. Because of our high standard of living, our use of energy and mineral resources, we place perhaps fifty times the burden on the environment that an Indian does. It is not merely a matter of numbers, but how those people gain their livelihood from our fragile planet.

The United States is food-rich: the breadbasket of the world. Overall, however, there is not enough to go around, and this year's weather problems have made things worse. But Americans, by feeding grain to cattle, consume eight times the grain protein as an Indian who eats the grain directly. Anthropologist Margaret Mead suggests that if we'd each eat one less hamburger per week, we might be able to keep everyone alive long enough to come up with some lasting solutions.

> The population Commission made numerous recommendations toward the end of a stabilized population.... but the report itself received no presidential endorsement...

Amnesty to be conditional

Congress accepts, resisters reject decision

WASHINGTON [UPI] — President Ford's conditional re-entry plan for Vietnam war resisters met with generally favorable congressional response yesterday, but spokesmen for the resisters rejected it as meaningless.

"It is no help whatsoever," said Dee Knight of the National Council for Universal and Unconditional Amnesty.

Knight, who formerly worked with the exile community in Canada, said the proposal "really is no change from what war resisters have had available to them for a long time."

Rep. F. Edward Hebert, D-La., chairman of the House Armed Services Committee and an opponent of amnesty agreed with Knight. Ford's offer, he said, "is nothing more or less than existing law merely clothed in a cloak of amnesty."

The American Civil Liberties Union said the program was one of "forced loyalty oaths, two years of compulsory labor, no assurance of an end to criminal prosecution, punitive discharges and administration by the Selective Service System, whose hostility to conscientious war resistance is notorious."

Ford, the group said, "has extended the war for another 24 months - this time against our own men."

The American Legion, meanwhile, attacked the grant of amnesty as too lenient and said those who wish to return should be dealt with in military or civilian courts.

"The American Legion is unalterably opposed to President Ford's ... program for the return of Vietnam-era draft evaders ... and deserters," said national adjutant William Hauck.

"The proclamation violates the principles for which millions served their country honorably, thousands died in combat, thousands more were wounded, many are hosqitalized, while others remain missing in action."

In a special proclamation and two executive orders implementing the proclamation, Ford offered to allow draft resisters and military deserters the opportunity to return to America if they accept up to 24 months of public service and reaffirm their allegiance to the United States.

"I intend to give the President my full support," Senate Democratic Leader Mike Mansfield said, adding that the action was "an opening of the door to something that has to be faced up to sometime."

House Republican leader John Rhodes said the Ford action was "a practical and fair solution to a grave national problem that simply has to be met."

In Toronto, however, resisters associated with Amex Canada called on the exile community to boycott the Ford offer and termed it a "gross miscarriage of justice for former President Nixon to get a pardon - plus a pension - for his very real crimes while war resisters are still punished."

Exiles in Sweden agreed, and termed the Ford plan "absurd" and "a punishment, not an amnesty."

Spokesmen for groups involved in the amnesty movement all scored the Ford action for not including the nearly one half million Vietnam veterans who received less than honorable discharges and expressed the belief that few members of the exile or underground community of resisters and deserters would take advantage of the offer.

Gen Haig appointed commander of NATO military in Europe

WASHINGTON [UPI] — President Ford yesterday announced the appointment of Gen. Alexander M. Haig Jr. as supreme commander of NATO and commander of American forces in Europe.

Haig, 49, who succeeds Gen. Andrew J. Goodpaster, will assume the North Atlantic Treaty Organization post Dec. 15 and take over command of U.S. troops Nov. 1. He is expected to give up his job as White House chief of staff on Friday.

"I'm honored," Haig told reporters of his new post in the military.

Ford's selection of Haig was approved unanimously by NATO's defense planning committee in Brussels yesterday although the Dutch government had previously indicated it would oppose him because of his close association with Richard M. Nixon during the latter's final beleaguered year as president.

Haig, who retired from military service in August, 1973, on a full pension, will be restored to active duty by Ford. Goodpaster, 59, who became the supreme NATO commander in July, 1969, will retire.

In a statement, the 14 NATO governments on the planning committee "expressed their lasting gratitude for Gen. Goodpaster's distinguished service," the White House statement said. "On behalf of the American people, President Ford joins in extending his appreciation to Gen. Goodpaster for a job well done."

There was no immediate word on whether Ford intends to appoint a successor as chief of staff. A transition team recommended that this function be shared by six top advisers, rather than one man.

Ford now has three top advisers handling his White House policy planning.

Draft boards to aid in search for jobs

WASHINGTON [UPI] — The government will assist in job searches for Vietnam draft evaders and deserters who want to take part President Ford's conditional amnesty program, the head of the elective Service said yesterday

Byron Pepitone, Selective Service director, said the public service jobs would be along the same lines of those currently performed by conscientious objectors.

Pepitone said that the government would help the men to find work but they were also free to look for jobs on their own that would fit into the categories of "national health, welfare, safety and interest."

Pepitone said that about half of the applicants would probably wind up serving in hospitals or homes for the aged or children.

He said he expected no problem in finding work for the men since many of the conscientious objectors are completing their service and would be vacating such positions.

Religious organizations, charities and forestry and conservation groups were expected to hire the applicants. The employer would pay the salary of the individuals and they would be paid "at the lower end of the wage scale," Pepitone said.

Ford announces amnesty decision

Men now in prison will have their cases reviewed first, and officials said their confinement would be suspended as soon as possible.

Ford designated an early critic of the Vietnam War, former Republican Sen. Charles E. Goodell of New York, to be chairman of the clemency board.

No congressional action is required for the program, which was enacted under the presidential powers of the Constitution.

Ford used those same provisions eight days ago to grant an unconditional pardon to former President Richard M. Nixon.

Ford described the main purpose of the program as "the reconciliation of all our people and the restoration of the essential unity of Americans within which honest differences of opinion do not descend to angry discord and mutual problems are not polarized by excessive passion."

"My sincere hope," he added, "is that this is a constructive step toward a calmer and cooler appreciation of our individual rights and responsibilities and our common purpose as a nation, whose future is always more important than its past."

The program could cover as many as 50,000 young men.

Officials said that about 15,500 draft evaders are potentially eligible for clemency. Of these, about 8,700 already have been convicted and another 4,350 are under indictment. Of those under indictment, 4,060 are listed as fugitives and an estimated 3,000 of them are in Canada.

Prison sentences now are being served by 130 persons convicted of draft evasion.

According to officials, some 500,000 incidents of desertion falling within the scope of the clemency program were recorded during the Vietnam war.

They said 660 deserters now are serving prison sentences or are awaiting trial and about 12,500 deserters are still at large with about 1,500 in Canada.

To be eligible for clemency, deserters would have to have committed offenses between Aug. 4, 1964 - the date of the Senate's Tonkin Gulf Resolution - and March 28, 1973 - the day the last U.S. combat soldier left Vietnam.

Clemency will not be considered for deserters or evaders who face other, unrelated charges, officials said.

Juror suffers stroke

Wounded Knee charges dismissed

ST. PAUL, Minn [UPI] — A federal judge yesterday dismissed all charges against American Indian Movement leaders Dennis Banks and Russell Means in the 8-month-old Wounded Knee trial following the serious illness of a woman juror.

The judge's decision was based on the government's refusal to let the 11 other jurors decide the case.

Banks and Means were charged with five felonies each in last year's 71-day armed occupation of Wounded Knee on South Dakota's Pine Ridge Indian Reservation.

At the end of the trial Friday, the jury deliberated for one day before the juror, Mrs. Therese Cherrier, 53, became ill. Doctors said yesterday she had suffered a stroke and could not continue as a juror.

U. S. District Court Judge Fred Nichol late yesterday dismissed the charges against Banks and Means on the grounds of misconduct by the government in the long, turbulent trial and during the takeover at Wounded Knee.

He said his decision was based at least in part on the Justice Department's refusal to let the 11 healthy jurors remaining decide the case and because of military involvement during the occupation of the South Dakota Indian hamlet.

Nichol said R. D. Hurd, assistant U. S. attorney from South Dakota and chief prosecutor in the case, deceived the court regarding a key prosecution witness - Louis Moves Camp, 22 - when Hurd said he knew of no more serious charge against Moves Camp than public intoxication.

The defense claimed Moves Camp also had been charged with rape but that the FBI had persuaded local authorities not to prosecute him on that charge.

The judge said Hurd was guilty of "errors of judgment" and negligence, which he said would not have happened if the government had been "half as thorough" in investigating the case as the defense attorneys.

"I was ashamed the government was not represented better," Nichol said.

Moves Camp had given the government's most damaging testimony against Banks and Means, each charged with one count of larceny, three counts of assault and one count of conspiracy.

Officials claim progress as guerrillas release two

THE HAGUE, Holland [UPI] — Dutch and French officials claimed fresh progress yesterday in negotiations with three Japanese Red Army guerrillas holding nine hostages in the besieged French embassy.

A few hours after the gunmen freed two women hostages and threatened to kill the nine, remaining male captives, French Foreign Minister Jean Sauvagnargues said negotiations had taken "a very positive turn."

He did not elaborate.

Dutch Interior Minister de Gaay Fortman inspected 200 policemen, including sharpshooters, surrounded the modern concrete and glass French embassy. He told newsmen, "The negotiations are developing."

Police said they felt the guerrillas would probably wait until today before fleeing in order to avoid attempting the 25-mile drive to the airport at night.

Police said the guerrillas were eating pep pills to stay awake in the third day of the siege.

Dutch Premier Joop den Uyl said the two young women were released by the guerrillas after an Air France Boeing 707 jetliner demanded by the guerrillas arrived from Paris at Amsterdam's Schipol airport, 25 miles away from the embassy.

IRA kills judges

BELFAST, Northern Ireland [AP] — Irish Republican Army assassins yesterday executed two judges who the IRA said were "part of the British war machine" and had put their comrades behind bars.

Judge Roger "Rory" Conaghan and Magistrate Martin McBirney were gunned down in their Belfast homes at breakfast time in apparently coordinated attacks. police said.

Within hours, the Belfast brigade of the IRA's Provisional wing claimed its men executed the two "collaborators," both prominent legal figures known for taking a hard line in jailing terrorists.

Conaghan, 54, was a Roman Cathloc and McBirney, 56, was a Protestant.

"Both men were warned time and again that they were part of the British war machine and as such were liable to suffer the consequences," said a guerrilla command statement.

Ecevit calls vote

ANKARA [UPI] — Turkish Premier Bulent Ecevit, at the peak of popularity following his invasion of Cyprus, said yesterday he intends to resign to break an alliance with rightwingers and seek a stronger mandate in new elections.

The premier told a news conference he informed President Fahri Koruturk of his intentions. The chief of state agreed with him, he said.

Ecevit said he would consult with the executive and parliamentary group of his Republican People's Party (RPP) today before actually tendering his resignation. He said he would prefer the election to be held in December.

Ecevit said collaboration with the conservative, Moslem-oriented National Salvation Party of Vice Premier Necmettin Erbakan had become impossible because of disagreements over Cyprus.

500 protest in South Boston

Boston whites intensify anti-busing stance

BOSTON [UPI] — Five-hundred white youths and parents mounted an anti-busing march on racially troubled South Boston High School yesterday, but were driven back repeatedly by police on motorcycles, horses and afoot.

At least 22 persons were arrested as police dispersed crowds of jeering whites on the third day of a court-ordered plan to integrate Boston's public schools, but a federal court judge said he would not order federal marshals to implement the integration plan.

Trouble over the school busing program remained confined to the predominantly blue collar, Irish Catholic area of South Boston.

Two policemen suffered apparent heart attacks, one falling from his horse, while putting down the demonstrations. Both were on the danger list at City Hospital. A third policeman suffered minor cuts.

The school day ended on a relatively peaceful note as the 87 black children at South Boston high got on four buses with military precision under the personal supervision of Police Commissioner Robert diGrazia. They were escorted home to Roxbury and the Columbia Point housing project by motorcycle police and a police helicopter.

All bars and liquor stores were ordered closed in South Boston yesterday and at one time police used nightsticks to drive back the cursing, jeering crowds which regrouped as quickly as they were dispersed.

Hundreds of police, spaced 25 feet apart, lined the roads and rooftops along the bus routes. The streets of "Southie," as South Boston, with a population of about 38,000, is known locally, were swept clear of any crowds before children left school.

The buses left South Boston high via a different route than taken Thursday and Friday, when they were pelted by stones and bottles. Instead the buses were divered some 300 yards from the seething Old Colony housing project, the scene of much of the earlier trouble.

There were an estimated 500 whites, at the project again yesterday, but they dispersed when they realized the buses would not be passing near them. A few whites vented their anger by hurling stones and bottles at police near the project.

More blacks and whites attended classes at South Boston High School as the school boycott appeared to be losing some steam.

U.S. District Judge W. Arthur Garrity yesterday ruled out for the time being taking any action to help the city implement court ordered busing.

Garrity refused to deploy federal marshals as had been urged last week by NAACP officials.

"The court, barring some unforeseeable development, would not take action unless there was a specific request from the parties," Garrity said. "There was progress today-and avoidance of some of the incidents of last week."

Some of the 5800 pupils transferred to new schools in the Springfield desegregation plan, which occurred without incident on the first day, arrive at Daniel Brunton Elementary School.

Springfield, Waterbury report peaceful desegregation plans

SPRINGFIELD [AP] — Classrooms were reported full yesterday as Springfield elementary schools began an integration program requiring the busing of both white and black children, while in Waterbury, Ct., a desegregation plan has quietly been implemented.

Busing had been fought by Springfield officials for nine years, but opposition dwindled as the deadline arrived for implementing the court-ordered plan.

"Everything is going fine," said C. K. Hannigan, spokesman for the Springfield school system's central office. "Our figures for the newly integrated schools show attendance at nearly 90 per cent, or just about normal."

In order to spread out the heavy black enrollments of five elementary schools, more than 6,000 students from 30 schools were rearranged, with about half of them riding buses to their new schools.

As a result, most of the grade schools now are roughly 70 per cent white and 30 per cent black. A few schools with large numbers of Puerto Ricans were exempted from busing in order to continue their special bilingual programs.

Students appeared to be taking the integration program in stride. Whites and blacks in many neighborhoods mixed freely as they waited for buses. Teachers said classes were orderly.

At most bus stops, parents as well as crossing guards stood watch to make sure children boarded the right vehicles. Extra police were deployed to patrol bus routes and direct traffic.

At one school that formerly was predominantly white, 10 families attempted to enroll their children who had been reassigned to an inner city school. School officials told them they could not admit their children, and the parents left without incident.

Elsewhere no signs of resistance were reported.

In Waterbury, Ct., officials say the only problem has been bus schedules.

The city has encountered no racial problems in carrying out the plan required by the Justice Department, according to Deputy School Supt. Theodore Martland.

Five years ago Waterbury became the first city in the northeast to be named in a U.S. Justice Department suit charging it tolerated segregation. When children went back to school last week under the first phase of the integration plan, bus schedules were the only problems.

Many of the elementary aged children were not used to riding a bus, so it took longer to board. Some schools changed opening times, adding to the confusion, Martland said.

The plan includes building three middle schools, one of which opens this fall. When the third is completed in 1978 all the city's middle school pupils will be bused. The Justice Department will monitor the plan until it's completed.

How would you like to become publisher of a daily newspaper with a circulation of 18,000 daily and an annual budget of over $200,000?

THE COLLEGIAN seeks two undergraduate and one graduate student-at-large from the University of Massachusetts to serve on the Constitutionally provided for "Publishing Board."

Similar to a Board of Directors, the "pub board" includes top editors of the paper, faculty representatives and the three students. It is the top decision and policy-making board at the paper, presided over by the Editor-in-chief.

NO EXPERIENCE is necessary. We seek those who are interested in, but not involved in journalism to provide a fresh outlook on Collegian operations.

JS faculty dispute change of major program

Ziff said "it was impossible to supervise and administer" when the student's second major was outside English.

He explained the change would only affect 10 students. Students who already were in a double major would not be affected by this change.

Ziff's second reason stemmed from his belief that the JS program "tired to develop the student journalist as a writer, explainer, rhetorician."

Ziff disagrees with Politella's idea of an ad-hoc committee and "can't imagine what the committee would do."

Prof. Joseph Frank head of the English dept. told The Collegian the change was a "pregmatic arrangement." Ziff, he said, was overwhelmed with students and he said the JS program "did not have adequate manpower for advising." He also said the change "was hopefully a temporary situation as that department grows." He also said that students "could take journalism through BDIC."

Bachelors Degree with Individual Concentration (BDIC) is an individualized major program available on campus.

Asked if there was a quorum present in the May 15 vote, Frank said he thought so, although he didn't remember.

The Collegian then spoke to two of the Journalistic Studies professors, Lawrence Pinkham and Ralph Whitehead. Pinkham was at the May 15 meeting; Whitehead was not. Both supported the JS change.

Pinkham believed it to be a "interim arrangement" after which the JS program "will try to work out a fully articulate major in JS that will differ in some degree from English major requirements and include courses in a lot of vitually substantive areas such as enconomics, political science, history, and sociology.

He also explained that "the JS-English major no way prohibits students in combining what amounts to be a double-major."

Nixon pardoned to spare "turmoil" Ford says

Ford, who as vice president said he did not believe Nixon had committed an impeachable offense, acknowledged that the unanimous finding of the House Judiciary Committee "is very persuasive evidence" that he had.

"Was the acceptance of the pardon by the president an admission of guilt?" Ford said.

"The acceptance of a pardon, I think, can be construed by many, if not all, as an admission of guilt."

Ford's news conference came at the end of a day in which he announced his conditional amnesty program for Vietnam draft evaders and deserters, then played 18 holes of golf in a congressional tournament. He said he was nine over par.

In response to a question about conditional amnesty on one hand and the full and complete pardon granted Nixon on the other, Ford said:

"In one case you have a President who was forced to resign because of circumstances involving his administration, and he has been shamed and disgraced by that resignation. In the case of draft dodgers and military deserters, we are trying to heal the wounds by the action that I took..."

While he differentiated between the circumstances of pardon and amnesty, he said both sought the same goal: the healing of national divisions and wounds.

Ford told the nationally broadcast and televised news conference that he had no secret reasons for pardoning Nixon.

"...I decided that we could not afford in America an extended period of continued turmoil..." Ford said.

He said that is why he reversed the stand announced at his first White House news conference on Aug. 28 that it would be untimely to make any pardon commitment before any judicial proceedings had been undertaken in Nixon's case.

Ford said, following that news conference, he asked his counsel to research what pardoning powers he had and determined what information was in the hands of the prosecutors.

It became clear, Ford said, "that the President might be charged with obstruction of justice" and 10 other counts. He said he was told it might be a year or more before Nixon could be brought to trial.

"I then began to evaluate in my own mind" his action pardoning Nixon, Ford said.

"The main concern that I had at the time I made the decision was to heal the wounds throughout the United States," he said.

"At the same time, the United States had major problems both at home and abroad that needed the maximum personal attention of the President and the country. It seemed to me that as long as the divisiveness and turmoil existed," he said, the wounds would not heal.

"I was more anxious to heal the nation," Ford said. "That was the top consideration."

While also concerned for Nixon's health, Ford said the major reason was "to heal the wounds."

Asked why he decided abruptly on a Sunday morning on the pardon, Ford replied, "I didn't decide abruptly." He said he "most carefully analyzed the situation in the country" and determined that America could not afford "a continued period of turmoil."

Asked about his statement at his confirmation hearings that the country wouldn't stand for a President failing to support prosecution of a former President if was asked a hypothetical question."

Now that I'm in the White House and don't have to answer hypothetical questions but have to deal with reality, it was my judgment...that it was in the best interests of the United States that I take the action I did.

"I must say the decision has created more antagonism than I anticipated," Ford said. "But as I look over the long...the possibility of a former President being in the dock so to speak...it seems to me if I had the choice between that possibility and the possibility of taking direct action...I'm still convinced that despite the public reaction, the decision I made was the right one.

"There was no understanding, no deal between me and the former President, no deal between my staff and the staff of the former President," Ford said.

Ford sidelights

From Wire Services

In a far reaching but tense news conference last night, President touched on these major points in addition to the Nixon pardon:

CHILE — Admitted that the United States intervened in Chile to frustrate economic reforms of democratically elected Marxist Salvador Allende.

But Ford declared: "Our government had no involvement whatsoever in the Allende coup." He said assistance to opposition newspapers was in the interests of the U.S.

DEPRESSION — Said the United States will not have an economic depression. "The overall economy is strong," Ford said, while acknowledging that unemployment is high and inflation continues.

NIXON TAPES — Said tape recordings and documents of the Nixon years are still at the White House, and will be available for use as evidence in Watergate trials. Ford said the tapes belong to Nixon, but will be available for trials.

INCOME TAX — Said he would issue an executive order severely restricting government access to personal income tax returns, a move made in the wake of administration snooping in tax returns during the Nixon era.

Mansfield: rehash

WASHINGTON [UPI] — Democratic leaders said President Ford added nothing during his news conference last night to explain the pardon of former President Nixon.

Senate Democratic leader Mike Mansfield said concern must now be focused on making certain that Nixon's tapes and papers remain the property of the government and are never returned to Nixon.

"It's too late," Mansfield said of the pardon. "It's irrevocable. The decision has been made. All I want now is the tapes."

Assistant Senate Democratic leader Robert Byrd said Ford shed no new light on his reasons for pardoning Nixon.

"He tried to explain it on the basis of curing the divisiveness of the country, but when he granted the pardon, the divisiveness had subsided," Byrd said.

Very few congressional leaders were available to react to the Ford news conference, possibly because of the Jewish high holy days, which began at sundown yesterday. Even non-Jewish congressmen, taking advantage of the informal agreement to hold no votes Tuesday, likely went home to campaign for re-election.

The circus continues

By BOB FOSTER

The American circus continued onward this past week in spite of the fact that its prime attraction, Richard the First (and hopefully the Last), had been disposed of once and for all. Though one may not agree with the method of disposal, one must agree that Nixon gossip is slowly filtering to the less prestigious pages of newspapers. Until death takes this man from his self-imposed exile, he shall become less and less important.

Washington, attempting valiantly not to be upstaged by San Clemente and blood clots, brought in a quartet of foreign diplomats in hopes on convincing them to "Buy American". Fighter jets were the topic conversation between James Schlesinger and representatives from Norway, Belgium, the Netherlands, and Denmark. Sales festivities that were written off on our national expense account included the Naval Band, a cannon greeting from across the Potomac, transportation to and from Edwards Air Force Base in California, the Presidential box in the Kennedy Center's Opera House, and finally the finest of American cuisine at a closing banquet. America once more is prostituting itself to sell machines of war.

The niceties of salesmanship have cloaked the realities of hard-core conniving that pervaded the circus day so appropriately dated Friday the Thirteenth. The only competitor to American aviation genius is France, at least in the Western world. Thus, the defense ministers are torn between the French cry to "Buy European" and American threats of serious political repercussions if indeed the ministers do buy European. The "hard-sell" has always been part of the American Way. The government just reiterates this point on the international scene.

One must seriously wonder how the French expect to compete with the vastness of the American economy. According to the New York Times, the United Stated offers not only flying models (the F-16 and F-17), but several service bases on continental Europe. The French did not even have a flying model to demonstrate. The French could only rely on their emotional appeal to "Buy European" and promises of future repair support.

The circus-like nature of the whole affair is culminated in the fact that though representatives from Northrup Corporation and General Dynamics (creators of the F-17 and the F-16 respectively) were present, it was the United States Department of Defense that was doing the hard core selling. Thus, the glorious U. S. Government became the ringmaster exclusively performing under the center ring spotlight with the Northrup Corporation and General Dynamics drawing secondary applause in the adjoining rings.

Never let anyone kid you about the military-industrial complex. The hand in hand nature of this sale of American planes is just a single example of the formerly covert and now blatantly overt cooperation of government and business in the game of selling death. America remains a country profiting from the wars of others in spite of all the rhetoric denying it. Vietnam may be over, but there are many other methods of making a buck when business and government cooperate to peddle death. The military-industrial complex continues to thrive on death!

Letters to the editor

Dear Mr. Ford

To The Editor:

On Sept. 10 I wrote the letter which follows to President Ford. I share it with you because it may still speak to the sincere but inadequate theology of Ken Fonda; in both of his letters to the COLLEGIAN he reflected a sentimentalized Christian compassion.

The imperative of unconditional amnesty for war resisters, draft avoiders, and even deserters has been made by several of your correspondents. It may be worth underlining.

Here is the text of the letter:

Dear Mr. Ford:

Love without Justice and Power is sentimentality.

Love without Justice and Power is sentimentality.

Power without Love and Justice is tyranny.

Justice without Love and Power becomes petty vindictiveness.

The God of the Bible is a God of Love, Power and Justice.

By exercising your Power to pardon Mr. Nixon, you showed something of that divine Love whith we call Mercy.

Two out of three makes for good baseball batting averages.

A two-legged stool topples over.

By exercising Love and Power without Justice, you have unwittingly but drastically undermined the moral leadership which appeared to have returned to the White House.

Should you now add an absolute pardon for the other Watergate defendants, you would compound the error, drastically.

Failure to link the Nixon pardon to unconditional amnesty for war resisters and draft evaders leaves us standing empty-handed in a wilderness of cynicism.

We do not believe you intended o reinforce the tragic cynicism of a generation of students. But you have.

In sorrow,

F. Peter Sabey,
Campus Minister

Tripoli view limited

To the Editor:

Action without thought is blind; thought without action is empty.

--Nkrumah

Steve Tripoli's article "Doing What's Right—Wrong" has portrayed a negative and limited view of what he terms "the problem of women and minority groups" at WMUA, the campus radio station.

First of all the "problem" was WMUA's management and NOT Third World people and women. WMUA had consistently violated the law. It had not followed any policy that even closely resembled Affirmative Action in its recruitment of Third World people and women. In fact, participation by Third World people and women had not been actively sought or encouraged. A recent example of this was shown when WMUA hired a non-student for the position of Summer Public Affairs Director without consulting or attempting to recruit from the Women's or Third World Media groups on campus.

Representatives of the Women's Media Project asked to meet with WMUA's management several times during the Spring semester to discuss grievances which included:

1. Limited programming time [one hour per week]

2. Repeated pre-emption of the Women's Show without notice

3. Lack of training sessions so that women could learn the technical skills.

However, they were put off by management with the excuse that they were too busy - they had a radio station to operate.

It was only when the Women's Media Project, Black News Service, Black Mass Communications Project and Corps all got together as a group and approached the Student Executive Committee that WMUS sent two representatives to attend the meeting.

The excuse that WMUA was too busy to meet with representatives of the Women's Media Project because it was "deeply involved in negotiations with Third World media groups" was also given as an excuse to the representatives of the Women's Media Project but was interpreted as an attempt to divide and play the groups off against each other [which, by the way, failed].

If WMUA was so deeply involved in these negotiations then why did the Third World media groups find it necessary [as did the Women's Media Project] to go to the Student Executive Committee and ask for a freeze on WMUA's budget?

The reason is because it was the ONLY WAY to effect any positive change within WMUA. It should be noted that it was also a legitimate course of action in regards to legality.

If WMUA's management had taken the time to successfully negotiate with the groups then approaching the Senate would have been unnecessary. But this did not happen. There were no real channels to go through with grievances at WMUA.

Tripoli's appeal to the Student Senate calling for a reversal of the actions of the Summer Executive Committee to "allow WMUA to work out its problem of minority and women's input on its own" should be seriously questioned.

There HAVE been positive changes beneficial to WMUA's growth and the community as well which resulted from the meetings held during this summer. These include:

1. The setting up of a strong Affirmative Action recruitment program.

2. The development and funding of non-racist, non-sexist news programming that reports on people involved in ending racism, sexism, and inequality.

3. The paid and voting position of a Third World Affairs Director on the management board to represent Third World Media groups in station discussions and decisions.

4. The voting position of a woman representative to represent women in station discussions and decisions.

5. Better communications within WMUA.

6. Clarification of pre-emption procedures.

7. Technical training sessions.

I don't believe Tripoli was aware of the positive aspects of the changes that have taken place and will continue to take place. He suggests that the controversy is in its final stages.

But it is just beginning.

Northampton Volunteers

To the Editor:

Are you interested in meeting people with a different interpretation of life? Well, there is a student organization offering you an opportunity to work with people with untamed minds.

Northampton Volunteers help people who live at Northampton State Hospital. Society chooses to label these people as mentally ill but what society has not been able to do [although they have tried hard] is to deny that patients are PEOPLE. But let's not remove ourselves from society because afterall we are society. Enter Northampton Volunteers. The Volunteers help these people forget the tedious boredom of a routine life which they are forced to live. How do we accomplish this? We work with these people in whatever capacity we are best in. That might be offering friendship by being an easy ear, playing cards or basketball, doing arts and crafts, playing music - just showing them a capacity to care, something some of them have never known. It is a real challenge to reach these people. Believe me your personality and communication skills will really get a work out.

If you are interested in becoming a volunteer, come to our orientation night Sept. 25 at 7:30 in the Campus Center rms. 165-69, downstairs. There will also be an information booth set up the week of Sept. 23. Our weekly trips happen every Thursday night from 6:30 till 9:30. Transportation is provided. So make your move for human liberation.

P. S. You won't be able to measure your pay because it comes in a rare and elusive form called happiness. Happiness that you get when you know you have touched another.

Butter, not guns

The United States has always been faced with critical choices. From that first day in Massachusetts when the colonists decided to risk their lives and fight the British, we have been faced with challenges and decisions concerning our future!

We have moved through periods of insulation and isolation. Through two decades of heavy intervention, we now stand at a fork in the road; which way we go will effect the future of our nation in a manner previously unprecedented.

First off, I'm glad that we became an interventionist nation during the Second World War. Those who were part of the "America First", committee, and wanted us to stay out of the war were naive at best, just plain foolish at worst. When there are real dangers to individuals, and their right to live in freedom and dignity, then a nation such as ours must take some steps towards alleviating the problem.

During the forties war seemed like the only alternative. There can be no real challenge to the fact that the Nazi's were the greatest threat to the world during the 20th century. In fact all such evils would be moot by now, because so many of us would probably be dead.

Establishing that our involvement during World War Two was just; using that involvement to justify all other international activity during the past thirty years is ridiculous.

What were we fighting for in World War Two? Hopefully to stop totalitarian oppression, mass murder, and preserve some sense of freedom in the world. Yet in the past ten years we have supported more dictatorships, bombed more civilians, and been despised by more democratic nations than any other nation with the possible exception of the Soviet Union. The point is that we shouldn't be competing with the Russians for the spot of "most hated nation." We are supposed to be a defender of freedom and liberty. Our leaders must learn that freedom does not necessarily mean support, but the right to decide and act on that decision whether it be in support of the United States or not.

In the name of freedom, what were we doing in Chile during the coup that murdered Allende. What is the CIA doing throughout the world? We can no longer try to bully the world into our corner. We must now lead from example.

We could start by forming aid programs where what we send overseas gets to the people, and not to the black market. We can try and send more food than guns; more books than bombs.

We could start by stopping aid to dictatorships that torture their own people. This might include cutting off aid to half of South America, as well as South Vietnam.

We can start by doing some of the things that should be done in this country. Putting more money into domestic programs should be a priority and not a secondary issue. Within the shadows of dozens of Coca-Cola signs, people are starving. Our unemployment lines are almost as large as the bread lines of the thirties. Inflation makes every middle class person in this country a master at balancing their own budget.

To a certain extent, the United States must stay strong. I have no illusions concerning Soviet innocence or nobility. However our country must oppose the Soviets through strength and not weakness. In this case strength is depending on our democratic system and good will. While we have done many terrible things during the past decade, I still believe in that good will, and feel that America can take a lead in helping the world survive. If we continue to drift towards a totalitarian path, where our leaders feel more at home toasting dictators than legitimate leaders we will continue to drift into a national state where everyone is our enemy...unless we own them. We will no longer be a nation, but rather a corporation. What we can't own, we'll have to fight. No nation can survive such a draining commitment throughout the world.

No great nation should even try.

Existential Editor

Somewhere, someplace, I came across an ad claiming that you didn't need much talent to write for the Daily Collegian. I let the idea mull over in my mind for a while and then one night I mustered all the talent I could and entered the office. The continuous, deafening pound of AP and UPI machines immediately confronted me with second thoughts. However, I amassed my courage and headed for the first typist.

"Pardon me," I began. "Shhh, shhh," he retorted with a raised finger. I followed his eyes off into oblivion. "I'm looking; I'm looking for a word..." I had a handy word or two to give him but thought it inappropriate of myself so I moved along to a small desk cluttered with papers and photographs.

Two reporters suddenly rushed in and excused themselves as they pushed me aside. One carried a camera with film emissing out from the sides; the other had a cassette recorder hanging from his shoulder. Through the steady din of confused conversation, I was able to barely make out what was being said.

"Well don't blame me for everything; I mean it wasn't all my fault!" exclaimed the nervous photographer. "Look," retorted the reported, "we've got two hours to get this damn thing on the press. Let's stick to the plan: shall we?"

They immediately set to tearing pages out of a 1968 Index yearbook. The photographer cut portraits out from the manuscript while the other set to typing out a few paragraphs occasionally looking up and saying something like: "I think the president is, how about unreliable? Nah, ummm, perhaps, independable. Yes, that sounds like what someone might say."

"Names, names," said the photoman. "Grab that phone book and thumb through it. Make sure you get a good variety and don't hesitate if the name sounds too corny. Use it."

The aged photographs were pasted along side of the paragraphs when the writer had finished. "Well, there we have it. Another issue of Campus Comments, and they're off on the road again!" With that the two gathered all their paraphanalia and made a hasty exit from the room. Outside in the corridor a blue flash was followed by: "Sir, oh sir. Excuse me....."

The screech of turning wheels loomed from the parking lot outside of the Student Union. I focused my attention to the windows and moved to investigate.

"Down!" came a voice and the entire staff vanished from my sight. I was suddenly tackled by the issue editor and a spray of machine gun fire rattled across the bulletin boards at the other side wall. Someone from Sports leaped across his desk to the window and displayed a .38 calibre pistol.

As the vehicle sped away he fired hitting the rear left tire. Tha car careened over and burst into flames against the concrete garage.

"What's happening?" I queried. "Oh," said the editor, "our relations with the administration aren't all that good." Another blue flash and "good filler photo. Page three maybe?"

After things had quieted down and people were back at their desks, two reporters entered with a tall, well dressed gentleman. He appeared to be a politician of some sort.

"What's your opinion on Co-ed living, sir?" questioned one of the staffers.

"No comment," replied the politician as he examined his fingernails. "Write this down," said the repoter to his assistant; "Ah, 'Thinks it's disgraceful! Should be abolished'."

"How about the parking situation here, whatta ya say?"

"No comment."

"The reporter, while writing,: '"Thinks there should be strickter law enforcement. Harder punishment. More fines and towing."

"Ahhmmm, the Administration, how do you feel about the Administration?"

"I believe," began the politician clearing his throat, "that we should clean up the cancerous corruption that is currently plaguing our administration. A complete check on everyone is in order. Everyone..."

"Ahh, write this, 'No comment'".

My attention was next drawn to a small cubicle shaped office bearing the title Below the Salt. Inside a dialouge was commencing between the three or four staff members.

"We gutta letta here for the 'Boating Editor'. Jeez, whadda we gonna do. Hey, Don..." A blonde artist looked up from his papers. "Ya?" "Wanna be 'Boating Editor?" "Shhhhuure."

The copy editor turned to me and asked, "Canni help ya?" I explained my situation and they all looked back and forth to each other laughing as if I wasn't there. I felt like I didn't even exist.

"We're havin' elections here tonight. We're pickin' a new editor-'n-chief. Whatta ya think 'bout that?"

"What do I think? Well, I personally don't care!" Was my reply.

'Don't care! Ya don't care! That's great! We'll make you, ahh, ahh, 'Existential Editor'!"

Clemency: ripoff

By DEAN TUCKER

And now clemency if you can spend another two years for the government.

It's not quite enough to have lived through an era where the price of humanity was cheapened by zealots such as Richard Nixon and Lyndon Johnson who in the cause of justice sent some fifty thousand Americans to fight an indecent, undeclared war in Southeast Asia, while they at home brought internal strife, shame and disorganization to the country.

It's not quite enough that one of the zealots is living the life of luxury that all Americans are ostensibly entitled to in California, off free to pursue the writing of his memoirs and make more money while the rest of the country is watching their lifestyle go out the window with impossible inflation.

It's not quite enough that we have a President of no notable record in the areas of civil rights, or domestic reform when we need one more since the depression of the 1930's.

It's not quite enough...that now Gerald Ford has in his perversion of justice decided to allow draft resistors to return to the country provided they serve a period of indentured servitude to the government of up to two years.

The elitist theory of taking care of one's own, in this case the upper level muck-mucks who have all but delivered a knock-out punch to the republic, is alive and well and most throughly deplorable.

Ford's much awaited announcement yesterday comes as no great shock, but is met with dismay by many who saw the best minds of their youth gunned down or living in self-imposed exile.

The Monday announcement has now cleared the way for a new system of justice.

If you decide that you do not want to become a part of an army involved in wholesale murders with bombs, destruction of cultures and foreign geography with massive occupations...or in pursuing the forever invisible and dubiously potent witch COMMUNISM...then for the price of two years service you can come back to the country for all intensive purposes a guilty man...to help heal wounds.

But if you corrupt the highest officials in the Executive Branch of the government, put the democratic system in this republic in the eyes of governments who are attempting to emulate our style of government, so that they see how sordid and rotten it can be when in the hands of maniac politicians then you get a full free and absolute pardon (someone to attend to your phlebitis) and a place to live forever.

But like the two Presidents previous to Ford one element of political and governmental life will not be yours...admiration by the people, who incidentally are the government.

UMass, the Environment, and You

The term "environment" has become almost a household word in recent years, being linked as it were, with phenomena as local as a town's sewerage disposal to world-wide problems of starvation, energy supplies and rising expectation of a better life for all peoples. These problems are not new, for no organism lives in the absence of an environment, but it is the pervasiveness and threatening aspects of environmental insults that focuses our attention and forces the issues into the open area of discussion. When we lack the solutions to pressing environmental problems, and have no ready means of grappling with them, we create commissions to examine the circumstances, formulate laws, form regulatory agencies, try to alter our life styles, and finally, and almost as a last resort, we attempt to educate our young to do better than we ourselves have done in the past.

Environmental education is not new, although its introduction into formal education is a relatively recent act. Every facet of exposure which increases our awareness of the world aroung us, from the earliest contacts of the home and the neighboring streets to the highest reaches of intellectual thought, is a part of environmental education. Each one of us is capable of living a thousand different lives, but the limitations of time, space, opportunity and individual capabilities force us to lead but one, so we inevitably become more and more selective as we attempt to exist wisely and richly in the environment in which we find ourselves. This is particularly true in the world of the university where your tenure is brief, your choices manifold and your goals of ten vaguely defined. For the student of the humanities the choice may concentrate on the environment of words with their nuances of meaning and juxtaposition, or an environment of space, shape and color to depict inner and outer interpretations of reality, for the engineer it will be an environment of matter and forces as new man-made worlds are created; and for the scientist it is the environment of the natural world, including himself, and extending from the inner mysteries of the atom to that of the human mind.

Today, environmental education would seem to have a more restricted meaning than that defined above. But this is not so; it has merely become formalized in an educational sense. It is still concerned with man's relation with his environment. The formalization, however, has its usefulness for it provides for community understanding, and enables us to violate and deal with the pertinent and pressing issues that threaten us.

The litany of crises is long and will, predictably, grow longer; overpopulation, pollution, cultural and national differences, depletion of resources, insufficient and poorly distributed food supplies and housing, destruction of natural landscapes, iniquities of opportunities for the full expression of individual potentialities, and endangered or extinct species of plants and animals are but some of the more dramatic and pressing instances of environmental concern. Some have a wider impact than others, but all have their local impact as well.

This is as evident here in Amherst as it is in so many places throughout this country and the world. Amherst was once a quiet New England town, its streets uncluttered and shaded with arching elms, its air and waters clean. It is now a strained town, beset with noise, people, overloaded sewers, buildings and excessive costs of maintenance. And its elms and sugar maples are disappearing. Some would sum up these changes by calling them progress; others find the term singularly inappropriate.

Every environmental crisis is, therefore, a human crisis. And human crises can never be overcome, alleviated or prevented only by the responsible and accountable actions of every citizen, individually and collectively.

There are no obvious, cut-and-dried answers to environmental crises; the diversity of our people, diverse in hopes, goals and ways of life, preclude simple solutions. Environmental literacy need not, of course, be gained only through the medium of courses and programs, but UMass, through its several schools and departments, and through the Institute for Man and Environment, offers a variety of opportunities for the general enlightenment of the university community and the training of environmental specialists. This section of the Daily Collegian is devoted to the details of how each of you can become involved.

The impact of UMass on Amherst

Over the last decade the phenomenal growth of the University of Massachusetts has and still is "impacting" the Amherst area. Evidence of this can be seen everywhere you look, especially in the fall when the new onslaught of students rumbles back to "UMie land".

Just imagine that hugh traffic jam that occurs the first nights of each fall semester on Route 9 at the Amherst-Hadley town line, the sea of humanity at registration, and the anguish in trying to find an apartment in July and August because most available units will be spoken for by September. The secondary effects of these growth impacts are often gleeful merchants who have just struggled through a "slow summer", irate local citizens who "just got adjusted" to the slow quiet summer, and faculty who are trying to prepare for an overloaded semester and students rushing around trying to straighten out course schedules, without getting a ticket from the University police who are trying to enforce a new parking plan that nobody likes. These and many more phenomena are the inevitable results of unplanned, sprawling, all-engulfing growth.

Growth does not have to have negative effects on us and our environment. Reasonable growth can be accommodated and impacts to the environment minimized if things we take so much for granted such as transportation, sewage treatment, adequate water supply, and adequate housing are considered "early in the game".

In order to help avoid adverse impacts from projects such as a University, the Commonwealth of Massachusetts adopted in 1973 the "Massachusetts Environmental Policy Act" (Chapter 30, Sections 61 and 62).

In other words, primary effect is professors and students coming to a University, and the secondary effect is construction of needed housing and community facilities for all these people.

Such concepts as "environmental impact" and "secondary growth" are currently undergoing much discussion and examination at the Center for Environmental Policy Studies which is within Institute for Man and Environment. At the Center, students are learning about environmental assessment, faculty are reviewing environmental impact reports, and studies are being done which may have an effect on statewide environmental policy and management. The atmosphere is relaxed, but the activity is intense with concern and meaningfulness. So if you are a student interested in things like environmental impact reports, coastal zone management, air and water quality planning or just think you might be concerned with environmental policy issues -- give us a visit at Blaisdell House.

Reality recognition

I was, at first, going to call this article something like "Environmental Education" (though I see someone else has chosen that title already). In the article, I intended to show how the words "Environment" and "Education" might be defined and perceived in many ways and, therefore, be highly manipulatible so that they become, for most purposes, weak and, in some cases, deceiving.

Instead, I've chosen the words "Reality" and "Recognition" for they represent, by themselves, more accurately what I mean by "Environment" and "Education", respectively.

By using the word "Reality" rather than "Environment", we are more directly confronted with the facts of our place in space: We are on a planet we call Earth. "We" are human beings, biological mechanisms capable of incredible extremes. We have sufficiently abused the Earth so that this planet's eco-reality has moved from what many of us think of when they think of Heaven to what, in many locales, now resembles (rather accurately), what many of us think of when they think of Hell (and it's spreading!).

This is, of course, somewhat of a paradox for if we can conceive of both Heaven and Hell and, for most of us, Heaven represents what we, as individuals, strive for (or at least dream about), why are we headed the other way? Is it due to some basic inability to attain that ideal? Not really. For example, the garbage cans of America are said to contain enough food to feed all of China three days a week (that's a lot of people!). Couple that with our eating 72 per cent above the maximum food requirement and we see a lot of food wasted that could be shared with others. Therefore, with better distribution (for which we already have a sufficiently developed technology to support) we (the priviliged nations) could feed the world's people now. And clothe them. If we shared. If we wanted to.

So our reality is one of ability. We are able now. Why don't we act? Recognition! We fail to recognize this reality because we've never seen it before. Oh, we've all seen it in our personal dreams and visions of a better world, but not in real life. It seems a crime that when we should be rejoicing that we, humanity, have made it and can now have an egalitarian world, we instead are figuring ways to hoard food or buy gold or head for the hills to escape the coming depression, revolution, disaster, apocalypse or (insert your personal prediction of horror).

We are constantly involved with the past, for lessons, or the future, for predictions, but are hardly ever in the now, for life. The past and future were fine when all was "progress" and we had to deal with scarcity as a "fact" of life. Well progress was a nice trip in that it brought us to our current "post-scarcity" footing. But, if we don't act to adopt "change" and "reactability" as replacements for "progress" we will "digress", and for quite a while, back into that "dog eat dog" ("man eat dog?") reality of scarcity, it's already started, (notice food prices lately? Shortages?).

So, in reality, there's no need to "educate" the masses about the "environment". No, what we really need to do is open eyes, ours and theirs, and see. Realize we've made it (for we have), and please, above all, don't get involved -- you are involved. Spread the word, pass it on!

Man and environment course listings

The problems faced by man in relation to his environment are varied, often complex, and greatly in need of attention and solution. The Institute for Man and His Environment, concerned with environmental education on the University's Amherst campus, was created because no existing department or school provided the multidisciplinary approach needed to view these problems in their totality. The range of these problems and relationships indicates why this approach is needed: from urban blight and renewal to the preservation of wild areas; from the inner city ghetto to the open tundra and sea; from microbes to man; from studies in the hard sciences, agriculture and engineering to those relating to sociology and the fine arts; from the problems of population, food, energy and resources to the quality of life in diverse environments; from environmental law, economics and managements to the needs, desires and goals of man as a social, ethical and political human being.

The Institute for Man and His Environment (IME) does not offer any degree programs or courses. It does, however, provide a number of services for students who have an interest in different aspects of the environment. The services are listed below. For further information, please contact Dennis Trager, Craig Zimring, or Professor Carl Swanson at the Institute for Man and His Environment, Blaisdell House (545-0648).

1. We maintain a list of environmentally oriented courses, many of which require no prerequisites.

2. We aid undergraduates in establishing environmental majors, both within departments and through interdisciplinary programs such as BDIC.

3. We maintain a list of faculty interests and faculty research in various environmental areas.

4. We offer career counseling in environmental fields.

5. We have contacts with many working professionals who are willing to give interested students advice about their fields and a view of day-to-day procedures.

6. We have contacts with environmental programs outside of the University such as University Year for Action.

7. We offer modest grants [up to $100] for support of undergraduate research in environmental fields.

Programs Where Environmental Studies May Be Followed:

Bachelor's Degree with Individual Concentration; Environmental Science; Global Survival; University Without Walls.

Current Courses in Environmental Areas:

The following partial and changing list of courses dealing with man and his environment indicates the offerings of schools and departments in areas of human environmental affairs. For other related courses adding breadth and-or depth to particular areas of environmental concern, students should consult their advisers and the latest catalog. Dr. Green selected new Head of Southwest

By FRANCES BROCK
Staff Reporter

Dr. Richard Green, the new Southwest Residential College Master-Director, wants to reorganize SW so as to achieve a "supportive, rather than competitive" situation amoung the many Centers, Houses, and staff committees.

Before coming to UMass, Dr. Green was the Assistant to the President and Director of the Human Opportunities Office at the State University of New York College at Buffalo. He has his degree in chemistry, and has taught chemistry at various universities around the country. He has also served in other administrative capacities during the last four years.

As well as being with SW, Dr. Green is affiliated with the Chemistry Department.

Dr. Green is impressed with what SW has to offer. He likes the attitude the students and staff have towards SW and the ambition of "building castles in the sky." But he feels it is now time to "build firm foundations for those castles."

"There is a need to assess what we are doing," Green says. "I am going to ask a lot of hard questions, but the answers should be easy."

An Educational Functional Inventory is going to be set up to assess and examine the existing programs and projects in SW. Green feels if SW is serving itself, it is serving the University, but the area must determine whether the programs are servicing the students of the area first.

Dr. Green also plans to set up a task force for Quality of Life. Q.O.L. is concerned with living, safety,is concerned with the living, safety, and general environmental conditions of the area. He feels that if the Q.O.L. is improved, the image of SW, in the eyes of the rest of UMass, will improve.

Some ideas towards improvement include sculptures for the quad, better organized facilities and resources and centralization of the SW staff.

Dr. Green hopes to set up two phone lines for students and staff. One would be used for hearing complaints, suggestions and questions. The other would be a recording of the day's schedule of events in the area. He also hopes to centralize a copy center. Eventually, he would like to see a SW library and health center.

Mosakowski for Manning

Kenneth Mosakowski of Amherst today announced that he will support Pittsfield attorney Thomas Manning in his campaign for the United States Congress this November.

Manning defeated Mosakowski for the Democratic Congressional nomination in last week's primary election.

In pledging his support, Mosakowski observed that "Democrats in the First Congressional District will have to make a strong show of unity if they are going to send the incumbent Republican of 16 years into much-deserved retirement."

"I sincerely hope," said Mosakowski, "that Tom Manning will mount an energetic, issue-oriented campaign which will provide the voters of the District with a clear alternative to the do-nothing policies of the Republican incumbent on November 5th."

Only a pipe dream?

By DEAN W. SCHOTT
Associated Press Writer

MONTPELIER, Vt. [AP] — A young clerk dreams of large glass jars filled with marijuana setting beside brightly-colored bottles of bourbon and brandy on the shelves of state liquor stores in Vermont.

"I can see it in apothecary jars with brand names like Acapulco Gold, Panama Red and Vermont Green," said Thomas Belville, a 24-year-old employee of the Montpelier state store. "And we would have scales on the counter to weigh it and have plastic bags to put it in."

Belville's dream was prompted by the Vermont Bar Association, which over the weekend approved decriminalization of marijuana and sale of the drug in the state's 30 liquor stores. However, the clerk realizes his dream is only that.

"The chance of it coming true is actually nil," he said. A survey of state officials and citizens supports his assessment.

Sean Dunphy, Mayor of Northampton cuts the Amtrak ribbon.

By JUDY BOUCHER
STAFF REPORTER

The energy crisis and the need for alternative transportation in the Pioneer Valley have prompted Amtrak, the federally subsidized passenger railroad system, to make stops in Northampton beginning this week.

Yesterday three passengers boarded the first passenger train that stopped in the city in ten years.

"The endorsement and support from the presidents of the five colleges, civic and business leaders demonstrated to Amtrak that there was a market for railway passenger service" said Sean M. Dunphy, Mayor of Northampton who has lobbied for the service.

Dunphy said he "anticipates the train usage to grow particularly during the daytime. Also, he hopes to expand passenger rail service in the daytime through 'Budd' car service between Northampton and New Haven.

Amtrak will make two stops daily at the makeshift station on Pleasant Street. At present, there is no station building or ticket office, but there is a tent for waiting passengers. Tickets can be purchased on board or at Pioneer Valley Travel Inc.

One train will stop at 1:20 a.m. heading north to Montreal and the other at 2:20 a.m. heading south to New York and Washington D.C. East-West service will not be available.

Are you listening?

A solo flute recital will be offered by Joanne Dickinson Tanner of the Massachusetts Department of Music at 8 p.m., Thursday, at Bowker Auditorium.

Assisting Ms. Tanner on piano and marimba will be Peter H. Tanner, also from the University faculty. In addition to their duties at the University, both perform as principal players with the Springfield Symphony Orchestra. Ms. Tanner also served as instructor and performer with the New England Music festival this past summer in Amherst.

Featured will be the recently published, "Diversions for Flute and Marimba" composed by Peter Tanner. Another work of particular interest is Beethoven's "Sonate fur Flote und Klavier." This noted work has long been controversial because there is no proof that it was actually composed by Beethoven. It was attributed to him only because it was found in his apartment. The controversy remains unresolved. Also on the program will be works by C.P.E. Bach, Alfredo Casella and Carl Nielsen.

The concert is open to the public without charge.

The Bookworm's Turn, a radio program produced by the Jones Library in cooperation with Radio Station WFCR, will present Ms. Bonnie Isman and Dr. Richard Mueller, in the second of a two-part program, discussing Cable Television, on Tuesday, September 17 and Saturday, September 21.

A retrospective exhibition of works by Robert Thompson will be shown at the Herter Hall Gallery of the University of Massachusetts through Oct. 4.

Thompson died in Rome in 1966 at age 29. His paintings are in important private and public collections in New York City and elsewhere in the U.S., and have been included in eight group exhibitions and featured in nine one-man shows.

The Herter Hall Gallery is open to the public without charge Monday through Friday from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m.

Sorry, wrong number!

An estimated four hundred thousand Federal taxpayers residing in New England and upper New York State who filed joint returns are being asked by the Internal Revenue Service for verification of spouse's social security number John E. Foristall, District Director of IRS in Massachusetts, said today.

The spouse, husband or wife, whose social security number does not agree with IRS records is being asked to fill out a special form and return it to the Andover Service Center, Andover, Mass. A special envelope is being provided.

Taxpayers unable to locate their official social security card and who are uncertain of their number, or who never secured one, are advised to leave the space for the SSN blank, but fill in other identifying details.

Bikerack blues

By STEVEN ROSE
Staff Repooter

Many bicycles can be potential fire hazards when left blocking stairways, halls and lounges in dormitories according to Diana White, special assistant at the Dept. of Public Safety.

The problem is that bikeracks, which are the official storage place for bicycles, are also the most popular area for thieves. Therefore, most students store their bikes somewhere in their dorm, either in stairways, halls, lounges, or in their rooms. According to fire laws, however, nothing can be blocking possible exits, including bikes.

In order for the Dept. of Public Safety to act on this fire hazard, there must be a complaint received by a head of residence; and Diana White told the Collegian that no such complaints have been received. It seems most heads of residence realize students need to keep their bikes indoors to keep them from being ripped off.

One solution to the problem is to set aside an area in the dorm, say in the basement. Some dorms already have done this with great success. Others, such as in Southwest where there is no room, have to put up with the high theft rate at the bikeracks.

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

By Stella Wilder

VIRGO: (Aug. 23-Sept. 7) — Intelligent decisions make the difference between success and failure this week. Don't hesitate to seek for needed knowledge in books. (Sept. 8-Sept. 22) — A crisis situation may be different to live with for a few days this week, but in the end it will prove to have been the way toward real gains.

LIBRA: (Sept. 23-Oct. 7) — Keep your emotions under strict control, especially as you go about the business of dealing with the public. You may be sorely tempted toward anger. (Oct. 8-Oct. 22): Though you may seem to see your progress slowed down early in the week, you need not be discouraged. Forward motion does prevail.

SCORPIO: .(Oct. 23-Nov. 7) — Early in the week would be an excellent time to relax. You can't begin to make real progress until you near week's end. Don't try too hard. (Nov. 8-Nov. 21) — Take care that you don't appear to others to be interfering in their business. You would do best keeping to things you know very well.

SAGITTARIUS: (Nov. 22-Dec. 7) — Don't allow feelings to decide issues pertaining strictly to business. Head must rule heart this week if all is to go well. (Dec. 8-Dec. 21) — Be guided by just enough prudence and caution to keep you out of serious trouble. You can best insure gains by working in harmony with colleagues.

CAPRICORN: (Dec. 22-Jan. 5) — Unless you are careful to separate what you actually know from what you have merely heard via the grapevine, you could be in for trouble. (Jan. 6-Jan. 19) — Disallow information gleaned through another's informal spy system. You can depend upon knowledge gained for yourself through experience.

AQUARIUS: (Jan. 20-Feb. 3) — See to your own health early in the week. If you fail to cooperate with those who are experts in the field, you may regret it. (Feb. 4-Feb. 18) — Protect yourself against those who would try to upset you emotionally. Now is the time for calm, cool, clear thinking - and a friend who offers aid.

PISCES: (Feb. 19-March 5) — This is a week with much to offer-but you will not be able to take advantage of it unless you are also able to recognize where truth lies. (March 6-March 20) — Though another may receive the praise you felt due you alone, you can accept defeat graciously. In so doing you will gain a new friend.

ARIES: (March 21-April 4) — Personal matters may intrude upon business affairs this week — but that may be all to the good. Apply what you learn from one to the other. (April 5-April 19) — Though there is confusion in the air early in the week, you can keep from making serious errors. Simply pay attention to the job at hand.

TAURUS: (April 20-May 5) — There are certain decisions which you must make completely on your own this week. Fail to do so and you will forfeit real success. (May 6-May 20) — There is nothing that can cause permanent damage to your career this week — but you may have a few moments of real fear that the reverse is the case.

GEMINI: (May 21-June 6) — Weaknesses displayed carelessly could cause you unexpected harm late in the week. Make every effort to appear strong of character. (June 7-June 20) — Personal relationships are very important to your progress this week. Take care that you don't fall victim to the kind of gossip that spoils lives.

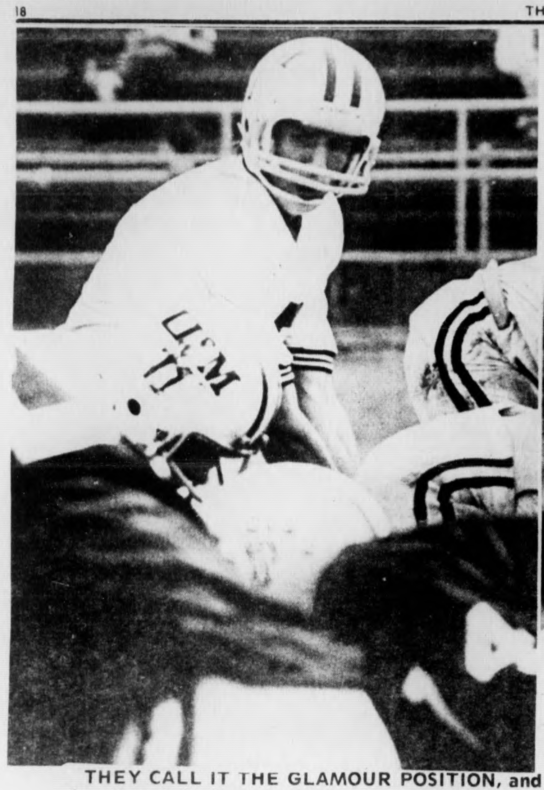
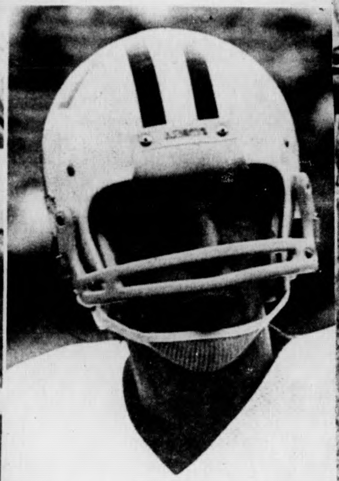
The hazardous careers of UMass quarterbacks





Staff Photos by Dan Smith

THEY CALL IT THE GLAMOUR POSITION, and most of the time they do their work with ten teammates in front of them, but nevertheless their job is often dangerous. The quarterback is the key player on the team, and the key target of opposing tackles; Saturday Fred Kelliher (15, top right) became the third UMass quarterback in three years to suffer serious injury. His replacement, Mark Tripucka (left, below) missed the entire 1973 season because of injury.

Kelliher to undergo surgery, sidelined six weeks

By MDC Staff

Minuteman quarterback Fred Kelliher will be sidelined for at least six weeks as the result of a shoulder separation sustained in Saturday's loss to Villanova.

The senior signal-caller will undergo surgery some time this week to repair the ligaments in his right shoulder.

According to coach Dick MacPherson, a doctor recommended the operation. If surgery was not performed, Kelliher would have little chance of playing again this year.

"It's better that he operate," said a disappointed Kelliher. "If he didn't, I guess there would be soreness. This way, they'll protect the ligaments and give them a chance to heal."

The doctors say Kelliher should be able to begin throwing in about four weeks and will be ready for contact in about six.

MacPherson also reported that Dave Croasdale, who suffered a slight knee strain in returning the second half kickoff, should be ready to play by this Wednesday, shich would mean he would not miss any game action.

"The one we're really worried about now is (Ed) McAleney," said MacPherson. The senior defensive end and co-captain suffered some form of knee injury in the second quarter, but managed to play the rest of the game. MacPherson said tests are still being conducted, and it is not known if McAleney will be sidelined for Saturday's game with Maine.

Stanford qb named player of week

SAN FRANCISCO [UPI] — Stanford's latest quarterback sensation, sophomore Mike Cordova, Monday was named the Pacific-8 Conference's offensive player of the week.

Cordova, following in the footsteps of Jim Plunkett, Don Bunce and Mike Boryla, completed 23 of 51 passes Saturday against nationally-ranked Penn State for 301 yards and two touchdowns.

Cordova's yardage and pass attempts broke Beaver Stadium records and his completions tied another stadium mark as Penn State came from behind to win, 24-20.

Other Pac-8 players nominated for weekly award included California's Chuck Muncie, center Ray Pinney of Washington, fullback Andrew Jones of Washington State and Oregon State quarterback Alvin White.

The rating game

In the early 60's, the United States' most popular sport was easily recognized as baseball. With the coming of the 70's though, professional football emerged as the leader. Now nearly midway through the decade, the American sportsfan has focused his attention on another level of football-college.

By RON ARENA
MDC Sports Staff

College football has developed into one ot the most provocative sports, conceivably surpassing professional football in both style and performance. Many college teams employ the wishbone offense, undoubtedly an exciting technique. Yet the use of this formation in the pro ranks remains nearly non-existent. Defensively, the man-to-man strategy, matching one man's talent against another's, inhabits many college teams' playbooks, while the zone defense dominates the pro scene.

Another factor advantageous to college football can be found in the personnel. Unlike some pros, college players perform with the maximum hustle, recklessness, motivation, and self-esteem. Granted, many professionals play with equal abandon. Yet the fact that football is a job to the professional results in a totally different environment. Professional football revealed its businesslike attitude with the recent strike. College football players sweat not for the dollar, but for the devotion.

But college football retains one major law; its system for recognizing a so-called national champion. The current rating system resembles a popularity contest. A team gaining the most national coverage ranks higher than another team of equal or superior talent, but suffering from its non-football reputation. Is a team that wins by a score of 58-7 necessarily make them a better team than another serving a 14-0 decision? Yet the eye notices the 58 while gazing at the scoreboard in their Sunday paper. So it is the team that scores the awesome number of points, probably relying on their first team throughout the contest, that receives the applaud. In short, the UPI and the API rating systems show much discrimination.

Pro football has the Super Bowl; baseball, the World Series; hockey, the Stanley Cup Playoffs; and college basketball, the NCAA Tourney. Realistically, college football could improvise a system basically the same as in college basketball. Deserving teams, based solely on their present status, qualify for a post-season tournament. A loss causes elimination until the remaining two teams meet to decide the undisputed champion. Surely, college officials cannot argue that this will lengthen the season beyond practical reasoning. Last year, prior to their New Year's Eve Sugar Bowl meeting, Alabama and Notre Dame actually had four weeks without a game. A month would be adequate time to conduct a post-season tournament.

Last year, Oklahoma, Notre Dame, Penn State, Alabama, Michigan and Ohio State all boasted undefeated records immediately prior to the bowl games. Of these teams, only Notre Dame and Alabama met head-on in any post-season play. After that game, it would have been quite possible for five of the above teams to have remained undefeated. Unjustifiably, only one of these teams could be voted the national champion, with much discord from the other four. Their arguments will seem legitimate as an undefeated team cannot reasonably be denied the title.

Unfortunately this season could be a repeat. Will Penn State argue that it is better than Nebraska, while the Cornhuskers defend their honor by claiming to take precedence over UCLA? And what about Texas, USC, Oklahoma, Michigan...? These teams spend endless time and energy to build a solid football team. With the season stretching from early workouts in August to crucial games in January, players deserve some reward. That reward has become their goal; being the best. With the present method we'll never know who really merits the recognition of being number one.

Soccer squad splits series at Keene State

By BEN CASWELL

Last weekend the UMass soccer Minutemen traveled to Keene, New Hampshire for the 4th annual Keene State soccer Tournament.

The tournament involved UMass, Amherst, Ulster State of New York, and Keene State. On Saturday the Minutemen went against Keene State and ended up on the losing end of a 3-1 score. Tom Coburn, the team's high scorer of last season got the only tally for UMass in a game that was sloppily played. Coach Al Rufe commented that, "we did not play as well as we would have liked. Our defense was weak but that was related to the fact that our offense was not pressing."

Sunday's game against Amherst was a different tale. Although the Minutemen started out slowly again, they began to execute well in the second half. The final score was UMass 4, Amherst 2, as the men from this side of town came up with three goals in the second half to rally for the win. Junior forward Bill Belcher led the team with 2 goals, and Tom Coburn and Tony King each added another. Coach Rufe was pleased with Sunday's second half and in particular the play of Billy Spyker whom the coach moved from a half-back position up the front line. "Spyker's pursuit, along with that of the rest of the forwards was something that we missed in Saturday's game and something that really added to our performance in the game on Sunday" Rufe noted.

Depth could be the key to the UMass soccer game this season as it is something that is present and plentiful. Much more qualified personnel on offense is a factor that Coach Rufe feels will be quite important. Experience at almost all positions, with returning lettermen at nearly every spot will also be a great contributing factor to what all hope will be a UMass soccer success story this season.

QUICK SHOTS — Keene State won both their games in the tournament. In addition to beating the Minutemen 3-1 they also shut out Ulster 1-0. In Amherst's other game they finished in a -1 deadlock with the team from New York.

Keene State, UConn, and defending New England champions, Springfield College will be the games to note particularly in this season's schedule. The Minutemen open their regular season play against Boston College at Chesnut Hill, under the lights a week from Tuesday on September 24.

Before them, the team will play two scrimmage games. One will be here, on the lower fields at Boyden versus the Lord Jeffs of Amherst College this Wednesday (that's tomorrow folks) at 4:00 p.m. The other contest will be played in Cambridge against Harvard University this Saturday with the possible starting time being 2:00 p.m.

Ohio State still number one

NEW YORK [UPI] -- Woody Hayes was unimpressed with his Buckeyes' fourth-quarter performance in their 34-19 victory over Minnesota Saturday, but Ohio State retained its top ranking in the United Press International board of coaches major college football ratings.

In fact, although Minnesota stayed closer to the Buckeyes than anticipated, Ohio State solidified it's hold on the no. 1 spot.

The Buckeyes received 24 of the 35 first-place ballots as opposed to only 13 no. 1 votes in the preseason voting. Ohio State was named no lower than third on any of the ballots in accumulating 345 points.

Notre Dame edged past Alabama for the no. 2 spot, receiving 11 first-place ballots for 304 points.

The Crimson Tide, which squeezed by Maryland 21-16 Saturday, accumulated 268 points.

Nebraska advanced from sixth to Fourth position by annihilating Oregon State, 61-7, while michigan, which received the other first-place vote, remained fifth in the ratings.

Louisiana State, which opened auspiciously under the direction of it's first black quarterback, Carl Otis Trimble, jumped from ninth to sixth on the strength of it's 42-14 pounding of Colorado.

Penn. State and Texas retained their respective seventh and eighth positions, while Arkansas bolted into the ninth position with a 22-7 upset of Southern California after the Razorbacks had been unranked in the preseason ratings. USC was ranked fourth in the preseason poll.

Ali-Foreman fight postponed

N'SELE, ZAIRE [AP] - A postponement of at least one week in the scheduled Sept. 25 world heavyweight championship fight between George Foreman and Muhammed Ali was ordered Monday after Foreman suffered a cut over his right eye in a sparring session.

In New York, Video Techniques, promoters of what is to be the richest fight ever, announced a postponement of between one week and 30 days because of the horizontal, one-inch gash Foreman suffered between his right eye and eyebrow in a Monday afternoon training session against Bill McMurray.

Davis Berman, a spokesman for Video Techniques, said in New York:

"The final date will be announced as soon as all the parties involved have agreed to the new date. We are awaiting further advice from the government of Zaire, which is on the scene evaluating the seriousness of the cut and the medical situation."

There was no way to tell immediately what effect the postponement would have on the elaborate and detailed plans which have already been made for the closed-circuit showing of the fight.

There were conflicting versions of the injury's seriousness. The Zaire government, which has made heavy investments in the fight as a showcase of the importance and competence of the country and opposed the postponement, tended to minimize the gravity of the injury.

But Dr. Peter Hacker, Foreman's personal physician, gave the view that apparently caused the postponement. He told a newsman within an hour after the injury, "It's the kind of thing that would be opened by a moderate blow in a week's time." The fight was only eight days away as Hacker spoke.

Foreman went into seclusion at his villa soon after he suffered the injury. His eye was bandaged, but Hacker would not say if he had taken stitches in it,.

Ali reacted to the news curiously. He first issued a statement that he was very sad about Foreman's injury and would not train any more until a decision was made. He then appeared in the gym for a light workout, made a gesture like he was crushing a cigarette butt with his foot and said, "That's George Foreman." The promoters of the fight expected to gross $30 million from it. Ali and Foreman are to receive $5 million each for the fight.

The cut came on Foreman's hardest day of training so far.

Southern Cross sinks again, in smooth seas

NEWPORT, R.I. [AP] — Courageous, taking advantage of a bit of bluffing at the starting line, whipped Australian challenger Southern Cross again Monday in the America's Cup yachting series.

The Aussies, their $6 million effort to dislodge the 123-year-old Cup from the New York Yacht Club on the brink of disaster, now trail the American defender 3-0 in the best- of-seven series.

The fourth-and perhaps final-outing will be sailed off Newport Tuesday, weather permitting.

The final margin in Monday's race-the third attempt to get it in-was a devastating 5 minutes, 27 seconds. It was the worst showing by the Australians in the competition.

Courageous, owned by a 116-member syndicate and selected to make the 22nd defense of the world's oldest sporting trophy, won the first race by 4 minutes, 54 seconds and the next one by 1 minute, 11 seconds.

The third race was run in fairly light wind, a condition favoring the American yacht on the 24.3-mile course outside Newport in Rhode Island Sound.

Similar wind conditions had prevailed in last Tuesday's first race and again on Thursday.

Then, with a forecast of more light winds for the third race, Australian syndicate head Alan Bond used a layoff day Sunday to install a new rudder calculated to help develop more speed and maneuverability in light breezes.

It did him little good. His 30-ton yacht was beaten again before the race was half over.

One English journalist commented, "I think they the Australians should consider keeping the rudder and building a whole new bloody boat over it."

Southern Cross, made of aluminum like Courageous, had been counted to be the strongest challenger since the U.S. first won the Cup in 1851.

She may well be the best Bond boat to appear in the series, but longtime sailing experts say she actually has been beaten in all areas of sailing and, remarkably, in tactics and seamanship.

Ted Hood, one of America's great sail makers, commanded Courageous in each of her outings, with Jim Hardy in charge of Southern Cross.

At one key point in each of the three races, Hood and his crew outwitted Hardy, contributing to the Aussie defeats.

In Monday's race, as an example, Courageous grabbed a 16-second lead over her rival at the start-thanks to a dazzling bit of tactics by Dennis Connor, who always is at her helm at the start.

Sailing into the win to the fourth mark, Courageous continued to gain on the yellow Aussie yacht as she has done on every windward leg completed in the series.

She rounded the mark 2 minutes, 52 seconds ahead of Southern Cross and "popped," her red-topped spinnaker for the second time in the race as she headed downwind toward the fifth and next-to-last mark.

The American yacht reached the fifth marker with an ever-increasing three minute, 32 second lead and needed only to cruise home on the sixth and final leg for her third straight victory.

They were burned

If you happened to read both the Boston Globe's and Collegian's wrap-up of Saturday's UMass-Villanova football game, you may have come away slightly confused. There were two points about which the Globe writer and myself differed. One of these is debateable, the other, though minor, I question for the sake of accuracy.

After the first UMass drive stalled, freshman Dave Croasdale was called on to try a 20-yard field goal. The Globe writer present said the attempt came from directly in front of the goal posts. That, my friends, is wrong. In fact, the previous play was an incomplete pass. After such a play, the ball is set at the hash mark, which means that Croasdale had the worst angle possible for his attempt.

The debateable point I wish to address is the play of the UMass secondary. The Globe writer says the defensive backs were burned constantly by Villanova quaterback Brian Sikorski. I beg to differ. Sikorski completed only 10 of 26 attempts, and the inexperienced secondary operated under a handicap all day. The vaunted UMass defensive line and linebackers nailed Sikorski only once, and the rest of the afternoon he could have pitched a tent and cooked supper before he was tackled.

The Globe writer based his opinion on the fact that both Wildcat touchdowns came through the air and their only other score, a field goal, was set up by a pass play. But even that stance is debateable.

The play that set up the three-pointer was picture perfect. John Mastronardo split the gap between defenders and Sikorski hit him with a pass that Joe Namath would have been proud of. The first Villanova touchdown came when John Van Buren, who was covering Chuck Driesbach, simply lost his footing and fell down. Even then, Dreisbach had to make a circus catch and barely managed to avoid going out-of-bounds. There were times when the secondary looked bad, but they were few and far between.

In good conscience, I could hardly say, as my colleague for the Globe did, that they were burned.

In their fist game performance was any indication, Keith Lang and Rich Jessamy could be the most exciting pair of runners ever to team up in a UMass backfield.

Both are only sophomores, yet each showed the power and poise of three-year veterans. Lang accounted for 97 yards rushing while Jessamy picked up 76 of his own, even though neither played in the second quarter.

With Lang bruising to the inside, and Jessamy fleet afoot on the sweep, the UMass running attack at times resembled a coach's inside-outside dreams.

And with these two around for another two years, the Minutemen's worries about their running game should be quickly dispelled.

Ford defended CIA action

Senate votes to study CIA role in Chile

WASHINGTON [UPI] - The Senate Foreign Relations Committee voted unanimously yesterday to investigate CIA operations in Chile, which President Ford defended Monday as a traditional and necessary type of covert activity.

The investigation will also help the committee decide whether it should recommend perjury charges against former CIA Director Richard Helms, among others, and whether it should investigate charges that Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger deceived the committee about Chile policy.

In a related development, Sen. J. William Fulbright, outgoing chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee, recommended creation of a congressional committee to oversee CIA operations. Senate Democratic leader Mike Mansfield said he would support such a proposal.

The decision to investigate followed Ford's news conference disclosure that the United States intervened in Chilean politics between 1970 and 1973 to help preserve opposition parties and press, although he denied any U.S. role in the violent overthrow of Salvador Allende's Marxist government.

"It is a recognized fact," Ford said, "that historically and presently such actions are taken in the best interest of the countries involved."

The Senate committee convened to discuss a staff report recommending perjury proceedings against Helms and other U.S. officials for allegedly lying in testimony about Chile policy. It decided instead upon a general investigation of issues raised by Ford's disclosures.

Sen. Frank Church, D-Idaho, said the inquiry would cover three areas:

-Examination of CIA interventions in Chile.

-A judgment on whether, as alleged by a subcommittee staff report, Helms and other officials lied when they testified at 1973 Senate hearings that the United

Foreign programs office called 'lazy'

By LAWRENCE KORNFELD
Staff Reporter

Complaints from several students of incompetence and laziness have caused the Student Senate to begin an inquiry into the International Programs Office.

The complaints are mostly about the performance of Barbara Burn, director of International Programs. Most of the charges concern her handling of the "Bologna Program" this summer.

Three students who went on the program told the Collegian they were mislead by Burn as to how much money they would need during their stay in Florence and that general conditions there were deploreable. They are Jim Delmonico, John Wright, and Andy Rizzo.

Wright and Rizzo claim they were only given 200 lire to spend for Breakfast, which is only enough to buy a single roll. They also claim they only had one meal five days a week and none the other two. They said Burn lead them to believe they would have two meals every day.

Burn claims she was not responsible for the food, and that Professor Hatfield, director of the program in Florence, was supposed to take care of it.

The students say the lack of food was not Hatfield's fault. Neither the students or Burn had any complaints about Hatfield's performance as director.

The Student Senate Executive Committee moved early this week that the Academic Affairs, Student Matters, and Financial Affairs committees jointly set up an inquiry board to investigate the International Programs Office. That Inquiry Board is still being formed.

The three students said the walls of their rooms in Florence were "paper thin" and the water was shut off at 3:00 every day.

They said Burn gave them litegature which led them to believe they would be living in what Wright called "a really nice place". Burn claims; "I only told them what I know about the place."

Burn left for London without warning one week before the program was to leave for Florence. The students say the staff left behind was unprepared to handle it themselves, but Burn denies this.

Another charge against Burn is that she received a complete list of the books needed for the program in January, but when contacted in April still hadn't ordered them causing great inconvience to the students.

Rizzo said of Burns; "She basically doesn't do anything."

Jim Delmonico said; "She didn't prepare me at all for Italy." He added; "She basically doesn't give a damn."

Student Senator Peter Birbaum said Burn has "lost all support of the students." Her office has been put at the bottom of the priorities list by the Stud. Sen. and receives only $2,441 a year from them.

New nursing director outlines improvements

By ROBERTA MARTONE
Staff Reporter

The new director of the UMass nursing program says she is going to make some changes.

Ira Trail says there will be an increase of 280 students in the program. More importantly, perhaps, students will be notified during the freshman year of their acceptance or rejection into the program.

Before, students had to wait until their junior year to apply to the program and those rejected had difficulty getting into another school's nursing program.

Furthermore, many rejected students had cumulative averages above 3.0 and were never given promised personal interviews by the admissions board.

The students were outraged and Student Senate Speaker Cindy McGrath called for a full investigation into the matter.

Trail feels, however, that an interview is "not a good way" to determine a student's acceptance into the program. She says she would like to put more emphasis on the cumulative average.

She says lack of direction has taken its toll on the nursing program here. "The nursing program hasn't had a permanent director for the past six years. How can it expect to hold together?"

McGrath calls the program here "one of the worst nursing schools although it has one of the best names."

Trail said she feels the undergraduates are being "pulled in different directions."

"The Admissions Office tells them one thing, while the graduate office tells them another. There should be some sort of consistency," she continued.

The situation could be improved if the students were given more of an opportunity to talk to majors in the field of nursing, said Trail. "They really have little access to the department."

In a further attempt to assist the nursing program, Trail has appointed Dr. Gallagher from Illinois, as chairman of the undergraduate program. Gallagher's purpose will be to direct the faculty so they may more readily assist the undergraduate nurses.

Other faculty to help with the program will be arriving in October, added Trail.

"I feel the faculty has a split feeling about the program. There are a lot of questions being asked. But that's good, because it means we are getting some reaction and going somewhere."

Trail hopes to postpone the academic evaluation and credidation of the program until 1978. "It would be useless to evaluate the program just yet."

"It's going to take some time, but in a couple of years we'll be up there with everyone else.", she optimistically concluded.

Saxbe ok's furloughs for jailed evaders

WASHINGTON [UPI] - Attorney General William B. Saxbe, following up President Ford's offer of conditional amnesty, yesterday ordered immediate 30-day furloughs for all persons now in federal prisons for evading the draft.

A spokesman called it "an act of mercy" which will give the men an opportunity to follow procedures prescribed by the President for allowing Vietnam-era draft evaders and deserters to return to society.

The spokesman said about 95 individuals are believed to be still serving time for draft evasion, while another 46 prisoners are free on appeal bonds or various legal writs.

Saxbe's order does not effect an estimated 700 deserters confined in armed services stockades, since they are within exclusive jurisdiction of the military.

The President announced Monday the details of his plan for letting deserters and draft evaders clear their records by declaring allegiance to the United States and serving up to two years in public service jobs.

The Prison Department spokesman said the furloughs would not be granted in the case of any prisoners who have been convicted on charges in addition to draft evasion or have other charges pending.

A total of 3,120 were sent to prison from 1966 through 1973, but many have already served sentences of one to five years or have received paroles, the spokesman said.

The violaters of Selective Service laws have been confined mostly in minimum security prisons, some even in so-called halfway houses and none has gone to maximum security prisons at Atlanta or Leavenworth, Kan., the spokesman said.

The President's amnesty proposal triggered a flood of telephone inquiries to the Justice Department about the specific means of surrendering to U.S. attorneys to accept the amnesty proposal, a department spokesman said.

As of 5 p.m. EDT yesterday, the department reported it had received 42 calls from draft evaders, 21 from deserters and 50 other types of inquiries.

First man seeks amnesty

The first person to surrender under President's Ford's amnesty program was a 22-year old man who had failed to register for the draft in 1970.

The unidentified man was told to return next Monday when he will be requested to sign an agreement to serve a maximum of 24 months alternative service

Meanwhile, draft deserters are planning to hold an international conference to support their claim for unconditional amnesty, without the requirement of alternative service. For more details, see page 4.

Renowned jazz pianist performs on Orchard Hill

Keith Jarrett featured opener at Artists and Society Series

By JOCK CAHILL
Below the Salt Staff

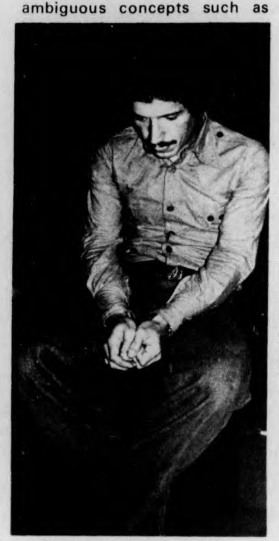
"I merely want to amplify the meaning of (my music) in words. The meaning for me is the truth involved in this one artist creating spontaneously something which is governed by the atmosphere, the audience, the place (both the room and the geographical location), the instrument: all these being channelled consciously through the artist so that everyone's efforts are equally rewarded, although the success or failure belongs completely to the artist himself. The artist is responsible for every second." — Keith Jarrett

Highly regarded jazz pianist Keith Jarrett held a "lecture-demonstration" Monday night as the first event in the Orchard Hill Artists and Society Series. Jarrett, sitting on the piano bench of the Webster dorm lounge's baby grand, told the attentive crowd of over 100 persons that he was going to talk seriously of the aesthetics and philosophy of "music on earth," if they were willing to try to understand his words. "I'm not concerned with the music so much," Jarrett said. "It's taken care of itself — and of me — for some time now."

Keith Jarrett is a diverse, well-travelled, dedicated musician. A member of Miles Davis' Fillmore concert band and of Charles Lloyd's original quartet, Keith has recorded on his own for Atlantic and is currently with both Impulse and ECM records, leading a quartet occasionally, but mostly playing solo piano in an intensely spontaneous and totally personal style. His deep involvement with music has shown him the deepness of the processes of life and creation.

"You can never defeat your own purpose. You can defeat the purpose you thought you had."

Acknowledging the difficulty of using words to convey his message, Jarrett led those assembled down a complex, twisting verbal road, coining ambiguous concepts such as gravity, flight and balance in order to reveal the truth he has found behind some of life's taken-for-granted mysteries. The artist must be an outside observer of the music he is inside of creating, stated Jarrett at one point. He also questioned why those college audiences he plays to clearly seem to understand his music less than other audiences.



Keith Jarrett, aesthetic...

Keith, an artist decidedly more than an entertainer, ignored the few comments that the discussion was "bullshit" as well as the more prevalent requests to play, in order to answer questions about his ideas. "Music theory and philosophy are worth the same amount: not much," he decreed, but when his fingers at last touched the keyboard, his command of music theory, pianistic technique and instantaneous improvisation was revealed in all its emotion stirring grace.

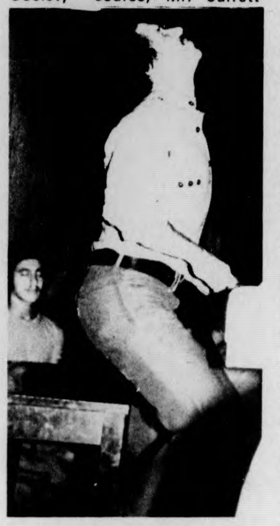
From his broodingly dark beginning, Jarrett swung, slid, and leaped from idea to lightening idea, sounding funky, reserved, lush, bouncing, percussive, spacey, balladic and bluesy, yet always organically together. The music lasted only about 25 minutes, but Jarrett and the audience were so prepared for it that the piece was profoundly moving. "Electricity is in me and flows out through my music. What's in the wall is only two-thirds electricity. That's why I don't use electric instruments."

Keith Jarrett is deep, musically, intellectually and philosophically, all three of which are inextricably joined in him. His attempts to express his feelings can be strange and confusing while his music is complex and engrossing.

"Heated" words fired by Jarrett and crowd

By MICHAEL PEPPE
Staff Correspondent

"Heated might be an apt word to describe the words which flew between renown jazz pianist Keith Jarrett and thw sweaty Umies that deluged Webster Lounge on Orchard Hill Monday night. Brought here by a Hill "Artist and Society" course, Mr. Jarrett philosophized and antagonized for over an hour and a half, alternately educating and mistreating his audience before blowing their collective socks off with some of the most exciting music this side of Paul's Mall.



...Keith Jarrett, sad.

Those of us who expected a mini-course of how to be a great jazz pianist must surely have been disappointed by Mr. Jarrett's rap, which was primarily personal and philosophical. It centered on his own fervent belief that everything in the universe, including of course his own music, can be divided into three primary components: (to use his own examples) Gravity, which holds things down, Flight, which pulls things up, and the Controlling Factor, which unites the two opposites. (Thesis - Antithesis - Synthesis for you Aristotelians) Although the presence of the third factor is debatable, the system is certainly a neat one, simple and easy to use, and one which seems to play a large part in determining Mr. Jarrett's psychological outlook.

For instance, he refuses to play electrical instruments because he feels they have only two of the necessary three components.

Most of the discussion which quickly replaced the rap was confused and inconsiderate, to say the least. Like most artists, Mr. Jarrett is a sensitive and intensely demanding man who will go to great lengths to avoid being misunderstood or misinterpreted, frequently interupting, bluntly rebuking and usually enraging his listeners. He is obviously a very spiritual man, even to the point of dogmatism, and was extremely defensive towards any real or imagined affront to his belief.

Words, however, which are at any rate hardly Mr. Jarrett's forte (This was his second lecture-discussion.), were immediately forgotten when he sat down to play. He treated us to some 40 minutes of unbroken musical sound, in about a half a dozen movements ranging from frenzied to ethereal, all sufficing to make our applause seem meager and insufficient. Incidentally, if you missed him, you can catch him at the Jazz Workshop this Tuesday through Sunday. It's Worth the four bucks.

Credit for organizing projects available

The Student Organizing Project, located in the Student Union Building in 428A, is encouraging students to present their projects affecting the academic, social, economic, and political needs of students.

Currently there are two courses offered this semester which are working closely with the Student Organizing Project. (OH 385 A) is to be given at Orchard Hill Tues. 7-9:30. The purpose of this course is to teach students how to organize and act as an efficient vehicle of social change in the university political structure.

The second course is offered by the Student Center for Educational Research (SCER). Students research, vompile, and diseminate information which is of interest to them. This Center is working closely with the Project to help fullfill the neeeds of the student community.

If students are interested in working on their own individual or group projects, the Student Organizing Project can help them obtain academic credit.

The projects presently being worked on are Financial Aide Task Force, alternatives in academic requirements, student control in dormitories, student union and higher education. Some groups are trying to organize a credit union and economic cooperatives.

Seek fair share of municipal burden

Selectmen ask UMass to finance fire station

By JUDY BOUCHER
Staff Reporter

Amherst Board of Selectmen last Monday asked the University to pay $10,000 yearly for the cost of the proposed North Amherst fire station and one-third of the maintenance cost.

"An agreement was made in which the University provides the land and fire equipment. There is no precedent for paying for a building." Also "Paying for fire services may open a Pandora's Box leading to the state paying for many other municipal services." said Mr. Gerald Grady, Community relations co-ordinator.

Due to a 17 percent inflated construction cost and a $215,000 reduction of payment in lieu to taxes for state owned land the Board of Selectmen withheld endorsement of building the fire station. Support of the fire station will be contingent upon "a strong committment" from the University to work toward proportionately distributed fiscal responsibility for the new facility.

The final decision regarding the new fire station will be resolved by a special Town Meeting Thursday where Town Manager Allen Torrey will ask the town to appropriate additional funds to cover construction cost of the building. The Finance Committee voted to recommend against appropriation of additional funds.

In 1972 the Town Meeting approved $400,000 for the cost of a new station, but $235,000 more is needed for basic construction cost.

Representative James Collins (D-Amherst) said "it would be penny wise and dollar foolish to put off building the new fires station." Estimated construction cost in 1975 will be 25 percent higher than the original cost.

The new fire station is a number one priority and time doesn't allow for re-evaluation or redesigning" said Torrey.

The University has donated 3.85 acres of land off East Pleasant Street for the building site and has requested $150,000 for the cost of a snorkel truck with an elevating platform capable of rising 100 feet.

"Two additional men are needed to man the snorkel truck, therefore the total amount of the gift will be absorbed in operation cost" said Selectman Leo Bouchard. With the acquisition of a snorkel truck the fire department's 22 year-old ariel ladder will not have to be replaced.

Also, there are 24 student volunteer firemen. In the past the Commonwealth has appropriated approximately $40,000 for fire equipment and in 1968 sought to establish the University's own fire force. At the time the town disapproved of this plan.

Compounded to the funding problem is the plan for the construction of a North-East By-pass that will cut the North Pleasant Street connection uniting Amherst center with North Amherst center. Without a new fire station North Amherst will be one and one half miles from the Triangle Street station.

The proposed fire station will be the chief center of the department's operations housing four trucks, an ambulance, a communication center and a dormitory for eight student volunteer firemen.

Lead paint poisoning object of testing

By ROBERTA F. SULLIVAN
Staff Reporter

Northampton children will be tested for lead paint poisoning this fall through a program coordinated by the Hampshire Community Action Commission, Outreach, The International Programs Office, and the School of Education.

The program is a follow-up on a similar effort conducted this summer in Northampton neighborhoods, in which two out of 70 youngsters tested were treated for dangerous levels of lead in their blood.

Richard Sokol, of Outreach, explained that this year's testing will be done by a group of fourteen UMass students, seven of whom will be foreign exchange students. Aside from the obvious community service aspects of the work, it will provide an opportunity for the foreign and American students to work together closely in an atmosphere outside the confines of the university.

Professor Alfred Karlson of the School of Education will provide a supplementary seminar series for the participants so they can evaluate their various impressions of the Northampton campaign, Sokol said.

The American students have already been recruited for the screening program, and a foreign group is being formed with the help of the International Programs Office. As part of the foreign recruitment drive, there will be a slide presentation on Tuesday, September 24, in Prince House.

Once the full group has been selected there will be a one week orientation period, following which the team will fan out into Northampton from October 7 through December 15.

Pat Keenan, a University Year for Action volunteer working with the Hampshire Community Action Commission, stressed the need for quick detection of lead poisoning, since treatment can halt the spread of the disease, but does not repair existing damage.

The volunteers will go door to door advising parents of the lead poisoning danger and administering simple pin prick blood tests to children one to six years old, Keenan said. The tests will be analysed in Boston and parents will be notified of results.

Landlords of the homes where lead-poisoned children live will also be advised of the situation, and required by law to correct the violation within seven days or face a $500 fine.

Sheriff to nab possible jurors for start of Lovejoy trial

By DAVE GREENSLIT
Staff Reporter

Sheriff Chester A. Martin will literally take to the Franklin County streets this morning to round up 15 more prospective jurors for Sam Lovejoy's Superior Court trial.

Lovejoy is charged with willful and malicious destruction of personal property in the Feb. 22 toppling of Northeast Utilities' meteorological tower at the company's proposed $1.52 billion nuclear power plant site on the Montague Plains.

After questioning 38 members of the venir (group of possible jurors), the court failed to seat the 14 jurors necessary to start trial. Superior Court Associate Justice Kent Smith then signed an order requiring Martin to produce 15 more potential jurors by 10 a.m. this morning.

Martin said that he and his deputies will actually be taking persons off the streets and into the courthouse to be questioned and possibly seated on the Lovejoy jury.

Only twelve jurors will actually render a verdict in the case, but 14 are needed to sit through tme trial should any become ill and unable to continue. Twelve jurors were seated yesterday.

Yesterday's session ended as it had begun-late. The trial was scheduled to begin at 9:00 a.m., but at that time most courthouse employees were just gearing up for the day's work. The lights in the third floor Superior Court room were still turned off and the floor was quiet. Only the stenographer was in the courtroom, tending to her machines. Alone in the law library across the hall, Sam Lovejoy, who is defending himself, huddled over a pile of law books.

When things got under way at 9:20, Judge Smith decided on 23 questions that would be asked to each prospective juror. One by one they were led from the deliberation room to the courtroom where they swore to answer each question honestly. The judge asked the question, then either excused the juror or ruled that the juror was indifferent. If neither Lovejoy nor Prosecutor John Murphy challenged the indifferent juror, he was sworn in and seated.

The process wore on until 4:00 p.m. when the jury pool became exhausted. It was then that Judge Smitm signed the order for more potential jurors.

Most of the jurors excused said under questioning that they had already made up their minds about the case. Many also had financial or family ties to Norhteas Utilities.

The day did have its light moments. Judge Smith asked one retired cafeteria worker what she had heard about the case before becoming a juror. She answered that she just heard that some tower was knocked down by a man named "Lovelace." Ripples of laughter spread through the courtroom.

Another prospective juror, an elderly man who was completely bald, was asked if it bothered him that people wear their hair long. "No," he answered, "but I sure don't."

Still concerned about Lovejoy defending himself, Judge Smith appointed Attorney Thomas Lesser to sit through the trial should Lovejoy need to consult him about procedural matters.

Prisoner released, $300,000 paid

Guerrillas release hostages, fly to Damascus

THE HAGUE, Holland [UPI] — Three Japanese guerrillas ended a five-day takeover of the French embassy yesterday, traded their remaining six hostages including French Ambassador Jacques Senard for a fellow guerrilla and a $300,000 ransom, and took off by jet for Damascus.

All of the hostages were reported in good condition.

The Air France Boeing 707 jet carrying the four guerrillas and a volunteer three-man crew roared off from Schiphol international airport at 10:29 p.m. (5:29 p.m. EDT). Hundreds of Dutch soldiers and police, including sharpshooters, looking on helplessly with guns at the ready.

At the controls of the jet were a volunteer all-male crew from a Dutch charter company. Two were Dutchmen and the third was a Briton. They, in effect, constituted a fresh set of hostages.

The guerrillas did not disclose the plane's destination until they were airborne. Then the control tower was informed that they were headed for Damascus, the Syrian capital, a four-hour flight.

The takeoff of the big four-engine jet ended a 102-hour first act of a drama that was by no means ended.

The first act began Friday when three gunmen, identifying themselves as members of the Japanese Red Army guerrillas, burst into the five-floor French embassy and seized 11 hostages, including Count Jacques Senard, 54, the ambassador.

The Japanese Red Army has claimed responsibility for the shooting spree at Israel's Lod airport two years ago in which 25 people were killed.

Police were summoned to the embassy, a five-floor modern building of glass and steel A policeman and a policewoman were wounded in a brief gun battle. Then negotiations began.

The guerrillas demanded and got the release of one of their comrades, Yutaka Furuya, 25, from Sante prison in Paris. But he was not released until the last moment just before takeoff when the last of the embassy hostages were freed.

The guerrillas also got the promise of jet transport. They were reported to have demanded a million dollars. Officials said they got $300,000.

On Monday they released their only two women hostages in-change for food, cigarettes and medicine. That left nine male hostages.

Dutch Television broadcast the entire episode live but could not get a camera in position to show the arrival at the airport or the hostage exchange. Newsmen were kept in the terminal two miles away.

War resisters plan conference to push for complete amnesty

TORONTO [UPI] — U.S. war resisters yesterday planned an international conference to lay down strategy for a continued fight for unconditional amnesty and a boycott of President Ford's "earnedre-entry" proposal.

Amex-Canada, the largest of the draft evader groups in Canada, said the conference would be held this weekend on the campus of the University of Toronto. It said in a statement that representatives of U.S. exile groups from Sweden, England and France also would attend.

The conference had been planned for some time, but the call for a boycott came in quick response to Ford's announcement Monday of a conditional amnesty for Vietnam draft dodgers and deserters.

Amex members met Monday night, following Ford's news conference, deciding to hold the conference and broadcast the boycott.

An Amex spokesman, Charles Stimac, a 25-year-old draft evader from Detroit, said that at the meeting "we decided that counsellors in Toronto cannot tell people to go back under the conditions that Ford has announced."

He said "the Ford plan, as presented in the media, is basic suicide. We have reached a very strong unity on the question of the boycott."

Many of the war resisters have said the amnesty proposed by the President was severe in comparison to the full pardon granted former President Nixon.

There are about 28,000 men affected by the amnesty, most of whom are in Canada and Sweden.

Congress conferees agree on campaign reform bill

WASHINGTON [UPI] — Senate-House negotiators yesterday reached tentative agreement on key provisions of a sweeping political campaign reform bill including a spending limit of $40 million by the Democratic and Republican candidates for president.

They agreed on taxpayer financing of presidential conventions, primaries and elections but ruled out public funds for Senate and House candidates.

The negotiators also settled on campaign contributions by individuals, organizations and candidates and on campaign spending ceilings.

The tentative agreement would provide the Republican and Democratic candidates for president with $20 million each for the general election and they could spend no more than that. Each party would also get $2 million for its national convention.

U.N. General Assembly opens 13-week session

UNITED NATIONS [UPI] — The General Assembly opened its 29th annual session yesterday with Arab economic power bidding to become the decisive factor in its political decisions.

Following its traditional opening minute for silent prayer or meditation, the Assembly elected Algerian Foreign Minister Abdelaziz Bouteflika as president to succeed Ambassador Leopoldo Benites of Ecuador.

Then it embarked on a 13-week course of debate, consultation, confrontation and negotiation through an agenda of 112 items, the heaviest worksheet ever to face an Assembly at its start.

First political business of the new Assembly was admission of Bangladesh, the world's eighth largest country; Grenada, the Caribbean island that became the second smallest U.N. member, and Guinea Bissau - formerly Portuguese Guinea. This brought U.N. membership to 138 countries.

Following several rounds of congratulatory speeches to the new members, to Bouteflika and to Benites, the Assembly adjourned until noon Wednesday when President Ford will address it.

Ford was scheduled to arrive here at 11 a.m. EDT today, accompanied by Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger and U.S. Ambassador John Scali. He will be met by Secretary General Kurt Waldheim who will escort the President to his 38th floor offices for almost an hour's private talk.

After a brief meeting in Bouteflika's 38th floor office, the assembly president will escort Ford to the assembly hall. His speech, the first of his administration on foreign policy matters, was expected to last 25 minutes.

Following the speech, Ford will greet delegation chiefs at a brief reception and Waldheim will host a luncheon in his honor.

Iraqi, Iranian troops clash, killing four

BEIRUT [UPI] — Four Iraq border policemen were killed and four wounded in clashes triggered by Iranian troops along their troubled frontier over the weekend, the official Iraqi News Agency said yesterday. Iran said its forces suffered no casualties in the fighting it blamed on the Iraqis.

Representatives of the two countries met recently in Istanbul, Turkey, in an effort to resolve long-time differences, notably over navigation rights in the Shatt-el-Arab River which leads into the Persian Gulf. But no settlement was announced.

Both the Iraqi News Agency and the Iranian agency PARS said the clashes took place late Sunday and early Monday morning. But both gave differing versions of the incident, the latest in a series of border clashes.

INA said the Iranians had laid down a 20-minute mortar barrage at four border posts, and ground forces moved up later behind the barrage. But it said Iraqi retaliatory fire forced the Iranians back to their own territory.

Nixon may not show

LOS ANGELES [AP] — Former President Richard M. Nixon is ill enough that he should not be required to testify about security measures taken during his appearance at a rally in Charlotte, N.C., in 1971, his lawyers contend in a motion seeking to quash the subpoena.

The motion, filed here Monday and released yesterday, also asked that the subpoena be quashed because Nixon's actions at that time enjoyed presidential privilege and because the documents and tape recordings requested also are privileged.

Nixon has been ordered to testify by entering a deposition in Santa Ana, Calif. on Sept. 24 in a civil suit filed by 21 persons in Charlotte. They contend White House aides and local officials illegally prevented them from attending a rally in honor of the Rev. Billy Graham. Nixon spoke at the event.

Nixon funds cut

WASHINGTON [UPI] — A House appropriations subcommittee yesterday slashed $452,000 from a $850,000 funding request to pay for former President Nixon's return to private life.

The subcommittee voted 7-6 to make the massive reduction after defeating proposals to give Nixon only a flat $200,000.

President Ford had requested the special supplemental appropriation to provide $450,000 for Nixon's transitional expenses - to sort his presidential papers and answer over 350,000 letters - and $400,000 to provide an office, a staff and an annual $60,000 pension.

Subcommittee Chairman Tom Steed, D-Okla., said the 13-member panel voted to provide Nixon with a total of $398,000, most of which - $245,000 - will pay for transitional expenses. The balance, $153,000, will be provided under the Former Presidents Act to set up an office and full time staff and provide Nixon his pension.

Frelino undecided

LOURENCO MARQUES, Mozambique [UPI] — The new black-dominated government of Mozambique will put off decisions on policy toward neighboring South Africa, the prime Minister-designate of this former Portuguese colony said yesterday.

Joaquim Chissano, third-ranking member of the guerrilla Frelimo (Mozambique Liberation Front) movement, told a news conference: "We do not wish to provoke anyone. We won't provide the reasons to start a new war."

But he said the whole question of policy toward South Africa and Rhodesia, as well as Malawi, Tanzania and Zambia will have to be studied by an independent Mozambique government, due to take office next June after the interim Frelimo-led government which Chissano will head.

THE COLLEGIAN seeks two undergraduate and one graduate student-at-large from the University of Massachusetts to serve on the Constitutionally provided for "Publishing Board."

Simuar to a Board of Directors, the "pub board" includes top editors of the paper, faculty representatives and the three students. It is the top decision and policy-making board at the paper, presided over by the Editor-in-chief.

NO EXPERIENCE is necessary. We seek those who are interested in, but not involved in journalism to provide a fresh outlook on Collegian operations.

INTERESTED? Leave your name anytime with the Collegian Editor-in-chief Jerry Lazar. You will be interviewed. Contact Jerry at the Collegian office, second floor of the Student Union, or by phone at 545-2550.

Dean of UMass medical school hits Sargent for nonsupport

WORCESTER [AP] - The dean of the University of Massachusetts Medical School has charged that Gov. Francis W. Sargent is trying "to scuttle" the school and its adjoining hospital.

Dr. Lamar Soutter said that Sargent has refused to submit the budget for the $53 million hospital, now being built, to the legislature. Soutter said equipping the hospital eventually will cost $17 million.

Thomas Reardon, press secretary to Sargent, said the governor is "totally committed" to developing a first-rate hospital in Worcester and that Soutter's charge "is untrue and unfair to the governor."

Soutter, in an interview this week with the Worcester Gazette, said the hospital is scheduled to open an out-patient department in March and an in-patient department in July, but the openings will be postponed unless it gets money.

"The secretary of education and the comissioner of administration and finance are holding up our list for equipment," Soutter said, and is part "of a perfectly consistent plan by the governor to scuttle the school and hospital.

"Take a look at the record. The governor tried to cut back the size of the class (this year's entering class at the medical school) from 64 to 16 students."

"The governor cut way back on our school budget," Soutter said. "He never submitted the hospital budget. No capital outlay for equipment was approved.

"Most recently, the governor has put a freeze on new jobs. I have no doubts that the governor is trying to scuttle the school."

Asked why he thought Sargent would do that, Soutter, a former dean of the Boston University Medical School, said he thought pressure was being put on Sargent by Boston's three medical schools - Harvard, Tufts and Boston University.

"The last thing those medical schools and hospitals want is our hospital built," Soutter said. "It will compete very well with them."

Reardon said, "The facts contradict the dean's statements. We're attempting to put together a first-rate teaching hospital. . . that will serve the needs of the community, and in building the hospital we are looking at cost effectiveness. We want to develop an institution within the means of the state's taxpayers.

"We have asked them to supply us with information, with documentation of need for equipment and how it would be used," Hilliard said.

"As far as I know, they still haven't supplied us with such information."

Senate raps plan to pay states for oil

WASHINGTON [AP] - A proposal to allow coastal states to share in federal offshore oil revenue has been assailed in the Senate as "unconscionable bribery" of states opposed to offshore drilling.

But backers maintain that the measure, due for debate this week, would only help compensate states for expenses they incur from oil drilling in federal waters off their coasts.

The courts have consistently ruled against the states in their attempts to obtain a share of oil revenue derived from federal waters. The Senate measure marks the first time an attempt has been made to compensate the states through congressional mandate.

Most states are not now entitled to revenue from oil produced beyond a three-mile limit. Coastal states maintain they are entitled to some revenue from oil produced beyond the limit because they must provide government services to oil companies and employees.

Because of this, Louisiana commissioned a study of its costs traceable to offshore drilling beyond the three-mile limit and came up with a $40 million figure for 1972 alone.

"This is a burden that Louisiana would not have were it not for drilling beyond the limit," says Sen. J. Bennett Johnston, D-La., sponsor of the revenue proposal. "The costs represent our expenditures for roads, sanitation facilities, schools . . . that would not be required but for the drilling."

The legislation would establish a $200 million fund from which the federal government would make grants to states affected by the drilling. The bill initially would benefit Mississippi, Louisiana, Texas and California.

Others would be affecteed if the federal government proceeds with plans to develop leases in the Atlantic, which currently has no offshore drilling. The drilling, however, has been vigorously opposed by many of the Atlantic states.

As a British company we'd like to explain our 810QX automatic turntable in plain English.

How the 810QX reproduces recorded music accurately.

The BSR 810QX has a sophisticated synchronous motor, spinning a heavy 7-lb. platter for accurate speed (regardless of voltage supply or record load) and all-but-nonexistent wow and flutter. Anti-skating force may be adjusted for optimum pressure with either conical or elliptical styli, so stylus sits perfectly centered in groove for precise stereo separation without audible distortion or uneven groove wear. A strobe disc is integrated into the platter design and a variable speed control is provided should you want to vary from, and later return to, the normal speeds. The tone arm will track as low as 0.25 grams to make use of finest light-weight, high-compliance cartridges for maximum fidelity and dynamic range.

How the 810QX protects records and cartridge stylus assembly.

Tone arm descent is viscous-damped in automatic operation and also when using the manual cue and pause control, for gentle contact with record surface. Platter rubber mat protects records during play and cushions discs during automatic drop. Automatic spindle uses umbrella-type suspension, without outboard balance arm. Stub spindle rotates with record to prevent distortion of center hole. Stylus setdown adjustment prevents stylus damage if dropped outside of entry groove range. Tracking pressure adjustable down to 0.25 grams for newest lightweight cartridges for minimum record wear. Stylus brush whisks dust off stylus between plays. Lock automatically secures tone arm to prevent damage to stylus from accidental movement. Stylus wear meter records accumulated stylus use in hours. Knowing when to replace a worn stylus protects your records.

How the 810QX provides convenient operation in any desired mode.

After touching a single featherweight button, the 810QX can either: play a stack of records, shutting off after the last one; play a single record and shut off; or play a single record, and repeat it indefinitely until you stop it. Manual operation uses a single button to start the motor, and the cue control to lower the stylus.

How the 810QX operates quietly, emitting no sound that can intrude on the music.

The 810QX uses a unique sequential cam drive mechanism. It is a rigid precision assembly that replaces the plumber's nightmare of rotating eccentric plates and interlocking gears that other changers use. Unlike other changers, there are no light metal stampings that can go out of aligment and make a lot of noise, from being carried, bumped, or just from use.

Attendance climbs, violence drops in Boston

Attendance at racially troubled South Boston High School inched upward yesterday and there were only a few minor incidents of violence marring the fourth day of classes under a busing plan to integrate Boston's public schools.

Official citywide attendance figures for Tuesday were 72.6 per cent-up 2.6 per cent over Monday's attendance. That also compared with 66 percent the first day of classes.

There was one arrest yesterday. Police said Arthur Ward, 17, of Dorchester was arrested on a disorderly person charge in South Boston at the time school ended for the day.

Although more blacks and whites attended classes, thousands of children still stayed away from school.

The only trouble took place as children were returning home at the end of school.

A black youth, Clifford Anderson Mattapan, suffered minor injuries when a private passenger car in which he was riding was hit by rocks at L and East 4th St. in South Boston.

The incident occurred just after classes ended for the day and he was being taken home by car. He was treated at City Hospital.

Five or six white youths stoned a bus as it was being boarded by 22 blacks at Hyde Park High School. No injuries were reported and there were no arrests.

A crowd of several hundred jeering, cursing whites were stationed at Old Colony Housing Project, the scene of several bus stonings, at the end of classes. But the buses were diverted away from the project. The crowd broke up quickly once the buses were out of sight.

Hundreds of policemen were stationed in South Boston, where buses of blacks were stoned by whites last week, and a daytime ban of liquor sales stayed in effect. But at midday no mishaps or arrests were reported.

"Underdog" Sargent calls for debates

BOSTON [AP] - Gov. Francis W. Sargent described himself yesterday as the "underdog" in the gubernatorial campaign and challenged the Democratic candidate, Michael S. Dukakis to a series of six weekly debates across the state.
